Mr. GEORGE. In the case put by the Senator from Delaware——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to hear an answer to my question from the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer the Senator by saying that an answer to his proposition is not at all necessary to the settlement of this question, and I suppose, if anything of that sort should occur in the State of Delaware, the courts there would settle it.

In Delaware there would be two speakers, one with right to preside over the senate, and that would exclude the speaker exercising the office of governor from the duty of presiding. The duties of the two from the date of the election of the new speaker would be entirely independent and not at all conflicting.

I do not say that is the best way of making a constitution, for we are not now making one; but I do say that it is a way of forming their constitution which the people of Delaware had an undoubted right to adopt, and if they have adopted it no person on earth can set it aside upon the ground that he thinks it is altogether an unheard-of and incongruous proceeding.

But this idea of two officers for a temporary emergency, when there is otherwise only one officer, is not unheard of, nor is it so incongruous as our opponents suppose. The common law, said to be the perfection of human reason, does that thing exactly with reference to the office of sheriff. By the common law, when a writ is directed to the sheriff of a named county and he commences the execution of it (and the rule is the same if there be a dozen or an indefinite number of writs), and after such commencement and before he completes the execution of the writ his term of office expires and a successor is chosen and qualifies, this same old sheriff, whose term has expired, acting in his capacity as sheriff, continues to exercise that office as to that particular writ until execution of it is complete, the other sheriff in the meantime fulfilling his office as to all other matters.

What the common law does with reference to a sheriff may certainly be done by the people of a sovereign State in their constitution with reference to any officer provided for in it. The people of Delaware have declared that the speaker of either house of their legislature, having commenced, under a constitutional mandate, the exercise of the office of governor to supply a vacancy, shall as to that particular duty continue to exercise it till the end—till the vacancy no longer exists—notwithstanding his office as to other duties may have terminated.

The alleged incongruities and inconsistencies, whether real or imaginary, must give way before the commands of the constitution. I have shown beyond doubt that such command has been given.

I will state to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that if he now desires to go on with any other business, and I can have leave to proceed with my remarks to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall be glad to give way at this time, as I am exhausted.

Mr. CULLOM. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi, and, by his leave, will ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. PASCO. Without displacing the unfinished business?

Mr. CULLOM. Without displacing the unfinished business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions:

A joint resolution (S. R. 99) authorizing the immediate use of a portion of the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for construction of canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River in construction of protecting walls necessary to the opening of said canal and locks to navigation; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 103) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates of cost for further improvement of Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4632) for the relief of Frederick B. Betts, surviving partner of the firm of Betts, Nichols & Co.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. PEFFER. Before the bill is proceeded with, will the Senator from Illinois allow me just a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Let us get the appropriation bill before the Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. Very well.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6614) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I now yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. PEFFER. I will take but a moment. Yesterday I gave notice that to-day, after the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], I would ask the Senate to take up a certain resolution. Now that the address is not yet concluded, I give notice that at the conclusion of his remarks to-morrow, if they are then concluded, I shall make the motion indicated.

Mr. GRAY. At the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi without reference to the day.

Mr. BROWN. In arranging the order of business for to-morrow I wish again to ask that the unfinished business, the joint resolution with respect to the Uncompahgre Reservation in Utah, shall have precedence over the resolution, and that nothing shall displace that order of business except appropriation bills.

Mr. CULLOM. That has already been arranged.

Now let us proceed with the appropriation bill. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That no post-office established at any county seat shall be abolished or discontinued by reason of any consolidation of post-offices made by the Postmaster-General under existing law, and any such post-office at a county seat heretofore consolidated shall be established as a separate post-office at such county seat;

So as to make the clause read:

For compensation to postmasters, $16,250,000: Provided, That no post-office established at any county seat, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred"; and in line 10, before the word "used," to strike out "may be"; so as to make the clause read:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $10,500,000, $600,000 of which shall be available and used in payment of clerk hire in third and fourth class separating post-offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 3, to strike out:

For pay of letter carriers, $12,240,300;
For marine free-delivery service, $3,500;
For horse hire allowance, $344,000;
For car fare and bicycle allowance, $170,000;
For street letter boxes, posts, and pedestals, $15,400;
For package boxes, $10,250;
Twelve mechanics in the six largest cities, exclusively employed in repairing boxes and locks, and erecting boxes, planting posts and pedestals, at $900 per annum, $10,800;
Incidental expenses, including repairs, painting, freight, straps, time cards, maps, directories, furniture, etc., $24,000;
In all, $12,748,250,

And insert:

For free-delivery service, including existing experimental free-delivery offices, $12,818,250.

Mr. PLATT. I notice that the amendment increases by about $70,000, I think, the amount of the several items for free-delivery service in the bill as it comes from the other House, which are proposed to be stricken out. It has been suggested to me that it might be possible under this item as it is proposed to amend the bill to pay for an additional number of post-office inspectors. I have not so understood the bill. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it would be possible for the Postmaster-General to appoint 40 or 45 additional inspectors and pay them out of this particular appropriation. I find that further along in the bill there is provision made for the payment of post-office inspectors.

Mr. BACON. I raise the point that no quorum is present. I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cockrell,	Kyle,	Roach,
Allison,	Cullom,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Lodge,	Teller,
Baker,	Davis,	McMillan,	Tillman,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Turpie,
Berry,	Frye,	Mills,	Vest,
Blackburn,	George,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Vilas,
Brice,	Gordon,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gorman,	Peffer,	Wetmore,
Burrows,	Gray,	Perkins,	White,
Call,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Cannon,	Hawley,	Platt,
Chilton,	Hill,	Proctor,
Clark,	Hoar,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PLATT. Out of abundant caution, I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "dollars," on page 4, line 2, the following proviso:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for the payment of post-office inspectors.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut, I will state that in my belief and judgment no portion of this sum can be so used, but out of abundant caution, as he says, I am entirely willing that the amendment to the amendment shall be adopted. The First Assistant Postmaster-General, under whom this money is expended, stated to us distinctly that no part of it would be so used.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know if it should be necessary for the public service to expend some portion of the sum for post-office inspectors why it should not be done?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Florida that the reason is because this appropriation is for a wholly different purpose. In another part of the bill we have made ample provision for post-office inspectors.

Mr. CALL. If it be true that we have made ample provision, that presents a different case. I happen to know of an instance where there was great necessity that there should be a fund from which an officer could be paid because of the impossibility of rendering service in the delivery of the mail without a person perfectly familiar with some foreign language. There was such an office in New Orleans for some years. The necessity for it occurred last summer in a portion of Florida, and there was no manner in which the Postmaster-General could provide either for the appointment or for the payment of the officer; so a little discretion is very necessary at times, even in reference to what we suppose we have done properly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 2, page 4, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no portion of said sum shall be expended for the payment of post-office inspectors.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am a little at sea as to the progress the bill is making. Did the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment carry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Providing that no portion of this amount shall be applied to the payment of post-office inspectors?

Mr. PLATT. For the payment of post-office inspectors.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am a little late, apparently. The matter will come up again on a vote, I take it, however. Does it leave the Postmaster-General without authority to employ post-office inspectors?

Mr. FAULKNER. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. They are provided for.

Mr. WOLCOTT. They are provided for in another portion of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. On the ninth page.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "thirty thousand"; so as to make the clause read:

For postmarking and rating stamps, and repairs to same, and ink and pads for stamping and canceling purposes, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 16, on page 4.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire for a moment to ask the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to that part of it which provides for the rent of canceling machines:

For rental of canceling machine, $60,000.

What is the character of those machines, and what objection is there to making provision for their purchase?

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that there are three or four patented instruments called canceling machines. Those who invented the machines regard the inventions as very valuable, and they refuse to sell at any reasonable price. The machines have been in use for a number of years in the different post-offices in the larger cities of the United States. They effect a great saving and are of value.

During the last two years the number of machines has been increased and the rental value largely diminished, so that those having authority believe it is wiser to rent machines than to buy them. They are used for canceling letters at the rate of twenty to thirty thousand an hour. They make a large saving in time to the Government, and are regarded as of great value.

Mr. ALLEN. Can not the work be done cheaper by some other method?

Mr. ALLISON. Those who are familiar with the subject practically say that this is the cheapest and best method. The machines did rent at the rate of $400 a year, but I think the present Postmaster-General has brought the rental down to $150. I have the figures here.

Mr. FAULKNER. For some $225 a year is paid, and for others $150.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Department now utilizes two patented machines. One they rent at $225 a year and the other at $150. The best machines rent at an annual rental of $225. They are used in all of the great cities in the United States, I believe.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether the patentees of those machines are employees or officers of the Government?

Mr. ALLISON. I can not give the Senator information upon that subject, but I have no doubt they are not employees of the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it has been held that an employee or officer of the Government can not patent an article which is to be used in the line of his duties and as against the Government charge for its use.

Mr. ALLISON. I can not state positively, but I feel quite certain that no one of the patentees is an employee of the Government.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty-five"; so as to make the clause read:

For mail bags and mail-bag catchers, cord fasteners, label cases, and for labor and material necessary for repairing equipment, $345,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-five"; so as to make the clause read:

For mail locks and keys, chains, tools, and machinery, and for labor and material necessary for repairing same, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, before the word "million," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "twenty-eight"; so as to make the clause read:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, of which a sum not exceeding $30,000 may be employed to pay freight on postal cards, stamped envelopes, and stamped paper, and other supplies from the manufactories to the post-offices and depots of distribution, $28,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "seven"; so as to make the clause read:

For railway post-office clerks, $7,739,000, of which sum not to exceed $15,000 may be used to pay necessary traveling expenses of chief clerks and railway postal clerks traveling on duty under order of the Postmaster-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 5, after the words "International Postal Union," to insert:

And not exceeding $10,000 for transferring the foreign mail between the steamship piers in New York City and Jersey City and the post-office and railroad stations.

So as to make the clause read:

For transportation of foreign mails, $1,750,000: Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster-General shall be authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $55,000, to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in assorting and pouching mails in transit on steamships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union, and not exceeding $10,000 for transferring the foreign mail between the steamship piers in New York City and Jersey City and the post-office and railroad stations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 8, to insert:

For additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamers sailing from San Francisco to New Zealand and New South Wales by way of Honolulu, all mails made up in the United States destined for the Hawaiian Islands, the Australian Colonies, New Caledonia, and the islands in the Pacific Ocean, $80,000: Provided, That said additional sum with the sum now paid shall not exceed $2 per mile, as authorized by act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce."

Mr. VILAS. I wish simply to inquire upon what basis or for what reason this amendment is proposed?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment was inserted by the Senate Committee on Appropriations upon letters and statements furnished to us by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], showing that the compensation paid at present for the transportation of those mails is not sufficient to enable the line which is now transporting the mails to continue the transportation in competition with a similar line known as the Canadian line from Victoria. The Canadian line is subsidized, I believe, to the extent of three times the amount now paid by the United States for the transportation of its mails from San Francisco to the points named in the amendment. It must go without saying that the American line can not compete with the Canadian line unless some additional subsidy or allowance is made for carrying the mails.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it an American line, I would ask?

Mr. ALLISON. It is an American line, with ships built in the United States, and wholly owned by citizens of the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator what is the present compensation per mile?

Mr. ALLISON. The present compensation for the entire service is $50,000 per annum. This is an addition of $80,000. I will state that the amount authorized by the amendment is within the compensation authorized to be paid to American ships by the act of 1891.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Are we paying as great compensation to any other line; and if so, to what line?

Mr. ALLISON. We are paying much larger compensation to several lines.

Mr. HALE. We are paying to other lines twice as much as this will be with the amendment added.

Mr. WOLCOTT. By special act?

Mr. ALLISON. By the act of 1891, under contracts made with the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HALE. The subsidy act.

Mr. ALLISON. The subsidy act of 1891. The committee, after making such examination as was possible, I think were all of opinion that this additional sum should be allowed for the current year, and then we will see what will follow later on.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I do not suppose there is any prospect of gain to the country in antagonizing any new proposal for an increase of the subsidy. But I wish to remark that I observe the total appropriation in the pending bill for the transportation of foreign mails is $1,750,000. This will add $80,000 more, making $1,830,000. I think there has been gained not a single line, not an hour's expedition, not a particle of advantage to the transportation of the mails by the subsidies which were provided for some years ago, while the increase of charges upon the postal service has been about $1,300,000, as I remember the figures.

I do not believe there has been increase of facilities of transportation, increase of expedition, or any advantage whatever to the mail service by the giving of these subsidies. Of course, the reason for the insertion of this amendment is, as stated by the chairman, not to secure expedition, increased service, but only to assist in maintaining the profitable conduct of a line of steamships.

Mr. ALLISON. It is to secure service and not to increase it.

Mr. VILAS. The same service which will be secured with the addition of this amendment was for years rendered to the Post-Office Department without the expenditure of any subsidy whatever. I believe that between this country and Europe the mail service has rather been diminished than improved by the subsidy which has been paid.

It interests me to point out this fact, because a good many years ago it became incumbent upon me in an official position to consider whether a subsidy which had been appropriated by Congress should be paid or not. For particular reasons, somewhat limited to that case and at that time, it was impossible then to distribute the bounty which had been proposed in any reasonable manner, and the appropriation was not expended. Subsequently Congress adhered to that view until during the Fifty-first Congress, when the large subsidies were added. Now the deficiency in the postal revenues to meet the expenditures of that service approximates, I believe, $10,000,000. It seems to me that with all the burdens there are upon the people of this country, with our gross excess of expenditures and our diminished revenues, it would be wise at least not to add to the burden by increased subsidies for the purpose of maintaining or assisting to maintain the profits of a line of steamers.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the $80,000 which it is proposed by the committee to add in the form of a subsidy, as the Senator from Wisconsin terms it, is for additional compensation for carrying the mails of this Government to the islands of the Pacific, New Zealand, and Australia. This steamship company has been in operation for some eight or ten years. It has been a successful line of steamers. The ships were built in the United States by American mechanics; they are manned by American seamen, and they have been successfully plying on the Pacific Ocean between San Francisco and the islands of the Pacific, New Zealand, and Australia. They were satisfied, because our Government would do no more, with the meager sum which they received in ocean postage, which amounted to about $55,000 per annum. They were bringing to the United States the trade of the Australian colonies. The line became popularized by our own people, as well as the people of New Zealand, to such an extent that the colonies of New Zealand have yearly aided them by a mail subsidy.

This condition of affairs continued until the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad across the continent. The well-known enterprise of our British friends was first manifested by subsidizing a line of steamers between Vancouver, Japan, and China. They gave the line a subsidy which was equivalent to the operation of their steamers and interest upon their investment. They continued that line, taking away a part of the business that was controlled by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the Occidental and Oriental Line of steamships; but by the action of the transcontinental railroad in making a through rate from China to New York and other Atlantic ports we have been enabled to keep a part of that business.

Not satisfied with endeavoring to monopolize the trade of the Orient, they have now placed on a line of steamers between Vancouver and Australia and New Zealand. The Canadian line between Vancouver and Australia consists of two steamships with monthly sailing. They receive a subsidy from the Canadian Government of £25,000 per annum, and from the Australian colonies a subsidy of £10,000 per annum, equivalent to $14,533 per voyage. In addition to this, the steamship line is to participate in the subsidy granted by the Imperial Government to the Atlantic connection of the great transcontinental Canadian railroad. At the present time I can not state what that subsidy will amount to, but certainly not less than, and perhaps far in excess of, £10,000 per annum, thus bringing up the entire payment that the line will receive in subsidy from Vancouver to Australia to $18,750 per voyage. In addition to this they have their agents to-day in the Hawaiian Islands and in the Society Islands asking those Republics and colonies to aid them with a subsidy. Wherever the flag is, the trade follows it, and England, with her well-known maritime and commercial enterprise, is to-day striving for the trade of the Pacific Ocean.

What are we doing for this steamship company? The Oceanic Steamship Company, which is the only successful rival, the only steamship company that flies the American flag south of the equator on the Pacific Ocean, receives from our Government the magnificent sum of $4,615.40 per voyage for carrying the mails of our Government to those colonies, while New Zealand alone gives $5,769 per voyage to this American line of steamers—one-third more than our own Government is paying for this service. I say it is a shame; I say it is a reflection upon American patriotism, when we sit idly by and permit the British to come in and take this trade away from us by subsidizing their ships by mail subsidies, by commercial subsidies, and by a subsidy making them naval auxiliary ships. No private company can compete with such competition. England is reaching out with both hands with an avaricious grip upon the trade of New Zealand and Australia.

Our American steamship company, with their well-known enterprise, would not have asked one farthing increase in the meager sum that they are receiving were it not in a measure to neutralize the effect of our competitors on the north. We are not asking you to give us as much as New Zealand gives an American steamship. The British colony want to stimulate competition, and they ask, "Why do not the people of the United States do something for their own flag, for their own shipping, if they want the trade to follow?" I presented these facts to the Committee on Appropriations and to the Committee on Commerce, and without a dissenting word they said, "We will increase the subsidy to what you ask and certainly be as liberal as the people of New Zealand." I believe it is a religious duty that we owe to the maritime commerce of this country to do something by paying our people for carrying this mail, if it is only one-quarter what the British are paying for similar service. Under the provisions of this proposed act we could perhaps receive this amount if the steamers of the line were faster in speed. They make 16 knots per hour now, and under this subsidy we are giving them about that which would amount under the schedule in the act of 1890 to 2 knots faster. We are paying for coal in San Francisco from $2 to $3 per ton more than our British neighbors are paying in Vancouver. The consular reports from Liverpool show us that we pay from 27 to 33 per cent more wages on American ships. The consular reports show that it costs us 40 cents per day to feed American seamen on American ships, while on the English ships it costs but 29 cents per day; but yet, with all these disadvantages, American pluck, American energy, has said, "We are going to stay with the British until the end if you will only deal half fairly with us."

I will not weary you, because I feel assured that the Senate will almost unanimously adopt the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, it appears to me that the real issue with reference to this matter can be expressed in a few words. It is necessary for the Government of the United States to pay for the transportation of mails. That we all concede. We are now making a more liberal appropriation than common. It is true that we are not getting faster service, but it is also true that in providing compensation we should take into consideration the fact that this is an American line of steamers, and that it is better for us to have our business done by an agency to some extent of our own creation. From an investigation which I have made into this subject—and I have tried to make it rather carefully—I do not believe it possible that the service will continue at all unless the compensation is increased.

I think that the competitive features alluded to by my colleague [Mr. PERKINS] show positively that unless we are more liberal in the matter of paying for the transportation of mails over this route we shall have to seek some foreign agencies in the premises. I believe that this steamship company is the only American line going south of the equator, and transporting American merchandise to the ports of Australia and the southern seas. I think, in view of the surroundings of the case, that the compensation is liberal; it may be called a subsidy in one sense; it is a generous compensation—that is, sufficiently so to permit the vessels to operate. If we force the matter by leaving the amount paid as it has been, I do not think the service can continue. Under these circumstances I shall vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to have a vote of the Senate on the amendment.

Mr. VEST. It increases the subsidy?

Mr. VILAS. It increases the subsidy.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will agree to take a vote on the amendment after the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. What is the objection to taking a vote now?

Mr. TELLER. Let us take it now.

Mr. CULLOM. We would be left without a quorum, I fear.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to vote for an increase of the subsidy.

Mr. MILLS. Let us adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to agree to take a separate vote on the amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate. I hope there will be no objection to that course. We can then go on with the bill, and it will save time.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Texas will allow us to go on a few minutes longer.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no; it is nearly 5 o'clock. Let us adjourn. We can finish the bill in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 1, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 31, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT PORTLAND, ME.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a joint resolution for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 159) to authorize the Secretary of War to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor of Portland, Me.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Portland, Me., with a view of securing a depth of 30 feet at mean low water.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be inserted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FURTHER IMPROVEMENT OF PROVIDENCE HARBOR AND NARRAGANSETT BAY, RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to present another resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 103) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates of cost of further improvement of Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, with a view of securing a ship channel 400 feet in width and of a depth of 25 feet at mean low water from Sassafras Point, in Providence Harbor, through Providence River and Narragansett Bay by the most direct route practicable to the ocean by way of the "western passage," so called.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CASCADES OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I present another resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 99) authorizing the immediate use of a portion of the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for construction of canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River in construction of protecting walls necessary to the opening of said canal and locks to navigation.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to expend so much as may be necessary of the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made by Congress for construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, not to exceed the sum of $20,000, in constructing on the land and river sides of the canal, between the upper lock gate masonry and the upper guard gate masonry, such portions of the walls proposed in the modified project presented by the Board of Engineers in its report of October 18, 1894 (which report was printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1895, part 5, pages 3576 and following), as may be necessary to construct in advance of the opening of the canal to commerce: Provided, That the contractor or contractors for completing the construction of the said canal in accordance with the present adopted project shall consent to such use of a portion of the appropriations aforesaid, and shall make no claim of any kind against the United States on account thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment. This is a diversion of an appropriation made for another purpose?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it a part of the same work?

Mr. HOOKER. It is a part of the same work.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is really to carry on the same work and does not make any further diversion?

Mr. HOOKER. No additional expense is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On March 23, 1896:

An act (H. R. 573) for the relief of Frances R. Jack, Elizabeth J. Jack, and Matilda W. Jack;

An act (H. R. 6250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in the county of Aitkin, State of Minnesota;

An act (H. R. 2921) to repeal section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define the duties of pension agents, to prescribe the manner of paying pensions, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1870, and now being section 4784, Revised Statutes of the United States;

An act (H. R. 5229) for the relief of George H. Lott; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 133) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for necessary repairs at Cleveland Harbor.

On March 24, 1896:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 141) directing the Secretary of War to submit plans and estimates for the improvement of Fairport Harbor.

On March 25, 1896:

An act (H. R. 3886) to reimburse W. W. Rockhill for moneys erroneously paid United States.

On March 28, 1896:

An act (H. R. 5382) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis Railroad Company to extend its line of railroad into the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 5979) for the right of the Rock Island, Muscatine and Southwestern Railway Company to build a bridge across the Illinois and Mississippi Canal;

An act (H. R. 6304) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at Knoxville, Tenn.;

An act (H. R. 6936) for the reconstruction of the Rock Island bridge; and

An act (H. R. 1616) to pension Michael E. Bricker, of Edgerton, Ind.

NOTE.—The following bill, having been presented to the President on March 18, 1876, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within ten days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his approval:

An act (H. R. 67) authorizing the St. Louis, Oklahoma and Southern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes.

On March 31, 1896:

An act (H. R. 4463) to grant certain condemned cannon and cannon balls to the Thirteenth and Forty-third Separate Companies, National Guard of State of New York.

CLIFTON R. ANDERSON.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6425) for the relief of Clifton R. Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Clifton R. Anderson, of Danville, Ky., the sum of $46.09, the amount he was required to pay to the United States Government, burglars having, without any fault or negligence of his, broken into his office while he was a stamp deputy in the United States Revenue Service and carried away said amount which belonged to the United States Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 319) for the relief of telegraph operators during the war of the rebellion;

A bill (S. 517) for the relief of Thomas Williams, an employee of the Senate folding room, for injuries received while in the discharge of his duties in the year 1892;

A bill (S. 1565) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howland;

A bill (S. 502) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas;

A bill (S. 1205) for the relief of the persons who sustained damage by the explosion of an ammunition chest of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, July 16, 1894;

A bill (S. 101) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the mutual account between the United States and the State of Florida, heretofore examined and stated by said Secretary under the authority of the Congress, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1075) for the relief of the heirs of D. Fulford;

A bill (S. 621) for the relief of the legal representatives of George McDougal, deceased;

A bill (S. 492) for the erection of a public building at Meriden, Conn.;

A bill (S. 1491) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read;

A bill (S. 264) providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites;

A bill (S. 154) to provide for the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind.; and

A bill (S. 1935) providing for a commission to negotiate with the Crow and Flathead Indians for the cession of portions of their respective reservations in the State of Montana.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 55) for the establishment of a lighthouse and fog-signal station at or near Big Oyster Bed Shoal, New Jersey; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6408) "authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott"; had asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed as the said conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. BAKER, and Mr. FAULKNER.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5914) to amend an act to authorize the Interoceanic Railway Company to construct and operate railway, telegraph, and telephone lines through the Indian Territory;

A bill (H. R. 4698) to provide an American register for the steamer Matteawan;

A bill (H. R. 1244) to confirm certain cash entries of offered lands;

A bill (H. R. 711) to increase the pension of Uzziel B. Church; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 24) providing for immediate destruction of income-tax returns, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 640) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher.

GEORGE A. ORR.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 60) for the relief of George A. Orr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, through the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, is hereby authorized and directed to audit and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the claim of George A. Orr as acting assistant provost-marshal at Mount Vernon, Mo., from May 28, 1863, to January 30, 1864, at the rate of $100 per month for his services and such sum for legitimate expenses during said period as may be shown and found to have been actually expended by him in the lawful discharge of his duties and necessary for the public service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. OTJEN) was read in part.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman that the report consists largely of a statement in chronological order of the orders of the general commanding that department. These services were rendered by the claimant as provost-marshal and his account has never been settled. The Senate has passed this bill once, and it was favorably reported to the House in the Fifty-second Congress, and also in the Fifty-third. The report, as I have said, is largely a statement of the military orders in relation to the matter, and I hope the gentleman will not delay the bill by insisting on the full reading of them, but will permit a vote to be taken.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What is the total amount involved?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Six months' pay, if it is found that he did the service.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the reason he was not paid before?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The report shows that he never has been paid. He was originally an officer in a Missouri militia regiment, and was detailed by these orders for United States service.

Mr. McMILLIN. But why was he not paid at the time?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Because the Treasury Department had never made an accounting with him, upon the theory that there is no authority for it, but the report sets forth the orders, one after another, of the officers in charge of the department.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is a very strange situation that a man should work for six or eight months under military orders and should not be paid, and that it should not be discovered until nearly a third of a century after.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. It is; but if the gentleman will read the report he will be quite satisfied, I think. If my friend desires fuller information, let the report be read in full.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think it had better be read. No statement has yet been made by the gentleman from Missouri which I think would justify this appropriation.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Well, if the Clerk will skip the orders and come to the conclusion of the report it will save time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

The Clerk read the latter part of the report.

The report in full is as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 60) for the relief of George A. Orr, having had the same under consideration, respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

The committee adopt the Senate report made by the Committee on Military Affairs.

[Senate Report No. 30, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 60) for the relief of George A. Orr, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

A precisely similar bill was reported favorably and passed in the Senate, and favorably reported in the House in the Fifty-second Congress, and likewise in the Fifty-third Congress.

Senate Report No. 212, Fifty-Second Congress, has been reexamined and is again adopted, and is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2097) for the relief of George A. Orr, have duly considered the same and submit the following report:

The following order was issued by the War Department:

[General Orders, No. 135.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, September 19, 1862.

1. By direction of the President the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, and the bordering Indian Territory will constitute the Department of the Missouri, and will be commanded by Maj. Gen. S. R. Curtis, headquarters at St. Louis.

Alton, Ill., is attached to the Department of the Missouri.

II. Western Virginia is attached to the Department of the Ohio, headquarters at Cincinnati.

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

General Curtis issued the following order:

[Special Orders, No. 105.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
St. Louis, Mo., April 20, 1863.

[Extract.]

3. Maj. M. L. Stephenson, Tenth Illinois Cavalry Volunteers, is assigned to duty as district provost-marshal, District of Southwest Missouri. He will repair without delay to Springfield, Mo., and report in person to district commander for duty. The quartermaster will furnish transportation for his authorized horses and servants.

By command of Major-General Curtis:

H. Z. CURTIS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The following order was issued by Major Stephenson:

[Special Orders, No. 41.]

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT SOUTHWESTERN MISSOURI,
OFFICE PROVOST-MARSHAL,
Springfield, Mo., May 28, 1863.

Capt. George A. Orr, Company B, Seventy-sixth Regiment E. M. M., is hereby appointed acting assistant provost-marshal at Mount Vernon, Lawrence County, Mo., and will be respected accordingly.

M. L. STEPHENSON,
Major and Provost-Marshal, District Southwestern Missouri.

In pursuance of the above order, Captain Orr entered upon the duties of acting provost-marshal, and continued in the discharge of such duties up to January 30, 1864, and then accounted for and duly turned over to his successor, Lieut. James A. Gibson, and received his receipt for, all property and articles of his office.

The following orders were issued by the War Department touching provost-marshals, their duties, pay, etc.:

[General Orders, No. 140.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, September 24, 1863.

Order respecting special provost-marshals, and defining their duties.

First. There shall be a Provost-Marshal-General of the War Department, whose headquarters will be at Washington, and who will have the immediate supervision, control, and management of the corps.

Second. There will be appointed in each State one or more special provost-marshals, as necessity may require, who will report to and receive instructions and orders from the the Provost-Marshal-General of the War Department.

Third. It will be the duty of the special provost-marshals to arrest all deserters, whether regulars, volunteers, or militia, and send them to the nearest military commander or military post, where they can be cared for and sent to their respective regiments; to arrest upon the warrant of the judge-advocate all disloyal persons subject to arrest under the orders of the War Department; to inquire into and report treasonable practices, seize stolen or embezzled property of the Government, detect spies of the enemy, and perform such other duties as may be enjoined upon them by the War Department, and report all their proceedings promptly to the Provost-Marshal-General.

Fourth. To enable special provost-marshals to discharge their duties efficiently, they are authorized to call on any available military force within their respective districts, or else to employ the assistance of citizens, constables, sheriffs, or police officers, so far as may be necessary, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Provost-Marshal-General of the War Department, with the approval of the Secretary of War.

Fifth. Necessary expenses incurred in this service will be paid on duplicate bills certified by the special provost-marshals, stating the time and nature of the service, after examination and approval by the Provost-Marshal-General.

Sixth. The compensation of special provost-marshals will be —— dollars per month, and actual traveling expenses and postage will be refunded on bills certified under oath and approved by the Provost-Marshal-General.

Seventh. All appointments in this service will be subject to be revoked at the pleasure of the Secretary of War.

Eighth. All orders heretofore issued by the War Department conferring authority upon other officers to act as provost-marshals (except those who have received special commissions from the War Department) are hereby revoked.

By order of the Secretary of War:

L. THOMAS, Adjutant-General.

[Circular, No. 19.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, PROVOST-MARSHAL-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 8, 1863.

I. Paragraph 11, page 3, Regulations for the Government of the Bureau of the Provost-Marshal-General of the United States, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Provost-marshals are directed to appoint a deputy provost-marshal for every county in their district, except for the county in which the district headquarters are located. These deputies should be selected with care, and should be men suited for the performance of the duties which will devolve upon them. They should acquaint themselves thoroughly with the county and the people in it, and should be able to secure the arrest of all deserters now in their counties, as well as of those men who may become deserters by failing to answer the summons of the provost-marshal in case of draft. The pay of a deputy provost-marshal shall not exceed $100 per month."

II. Paragraph 12, page 3, of same regulations, is so amended as to read as follows:

"Special officers or agents for detecting and arresting deserters or spies may be employed when necessary; but not more than four shall be employed in a district without the approval of the provost-marshal-general. Their names must be reported, and the amount of compensation proper to be allowed must be recommended. They may be paid," etc. * * *

III. Returns required by Forms Nos. 7, 8, 9, and 10 will hereafter be made quarterly instead of monthly.

A careful study of these and all other "forms" is recommended, as all returns and papers must be in strict accordance therewith. Any failure, even in a slight degree, to conform to them will result in a return for correction of such papers.

IV. Provost-marshals are reminded that parties themselves must sign all receipts, the Government not recognizing the signature of one party for another, unless a power of attorney in each case accompany such signature.

Where employees are not present at the headquarters of a district to sign the receipt rolls (Form 17), their accounts may be made on separate vouchers (Form 18), but no accounts will be paid unless the name of the person be borne on Form No. 4, monthly.

V. Until further orders, boards of enrollment shall not adjourn over a day, except Sunday, without the permission of the acting assistant provost-marshal-general of the State. The business of the enrollment, and that connected with the Invalid Corps, must receive constant attention until completed.

Members of boards of enrollment are forbidden to absent themselves from their duties or their district without leave first obtained from the acting assistant provost-marshal-general of the State, who shall not grant leave of absence for more than five days at one time without the approval of the provost-marshal-general.

JAMES B. FRY,
Provost-Marshal-General.

The Seventy-sixth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, of which George A. Orr was a captain, was a State organization, and the official records show that Captain Orr was in service from August 15, 1862, to March 31, 1863, when he was relieved, and was paid by the State of Missouri for such service $487, and said State was reimbursed that amount by the United States; and further shows that Captain Orr was not paid by said State for any service from May 28, 1863, to January 30, 1864, and was never paid anything by the United States for said period for any service. He was paid by the State of Missouri while on duty as such captain in said regiment at the rate of $128.50 per month, and the State of Missouri was reimbursed accordingly by the United States.

General Curtis, while commanding the Department of Missouri, was a United States officer, and so was Major Stephenson while acting as provost-marshal for District Southwest Missouri, and Captain Orr was, while acting as assistant provost-marshal at Mount Vernon, Mo., an acting United States officer, and was not therefore recognized by the State of Missouri as in its service, and was not therefore paid by the State, and no claim by the State made for reimbursement. Mr. Orr presented his claim for pay, etc., to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and after a very voluminous correspondence between them and the War Department, copies of all which are before your committee and have been carefully considered, the Second Auditor made the following decision:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Second Auditor's Office, April 4, 1891.

"I certify that I have examined the claim of George A. Orr (captain Seventy-sixth Missouri Enrolled Militia) on account of pay for services as provost-marshal at Mount Vernon, Mo., from May 28, 1863, to January 1, 1864 (the records of the War Department showing that he served as acting assistant provost-marshal at said place from May 28, 1863, to January 30, 1864, and failing to show any payment therefor), and find that said claim should be disallowed as a charge against any appropriation under the jurisdiction of this office (the Secretary of War having declined to approve it in any amount to be paid from "Contingencies of the Army"), for the reason that the office of assistant or acting assistant provost-marshal was not, at the time of said services, recognized by Army Regulations or statute law, nor was compensation for services under that title authorized by any appropriation made therefor. Claimant's regiment was not in the United States service.

"Said claim and all the vouchers and papers are transmitted, with this certificate, to the Second Comptroller for his decision thereon.

"J. N. PATTERSON, Auditor."

This decision was approved by the Second Comptroller on August 22, 1891.

This decision shows the claim of Orr to be a just one and never paid, and that there is no existing appropriation out of which the same can be paid. Had Captain Orr been on duty as captain of his company in the State organization, then his claim would be against the State of Missouri for such services, but having been relieved from duty on March 31, 1863, he was no longer in the service of the State. When he was appointed acting assistant provost-marshal at Mount Vernon, Mo., by Major Stephenson he was, and so continued to be, until relieved on January 30, 1864, in the service of the United States, under the authority and control of United States officers and amenable to their orders, and is justly entitled to be paid a reasonable compensation for his services as acting assistant provost-marshal, and not as captain of Company B, Seventy-sixth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia.

No specific contract as to amount of pay was made, but under the general orders of the War Department $100 was fixed as the maximum pay of a deputy United States marshal in June, 1863, and this bill authorizes the payment of that sum per month during said period, and authorizes the payment of whatever legitimate expenditures he may have made which were necessary for the public service.

Your committee therefore report this bill back to the Senate and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to make one suggestion: This claim seems to be for services rendered as provost-marshal?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course, if this man was appointed by United States authority to do that service he would have been paid at the time.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes; but at the time he was appointed he was serving in a Missouri militia organization.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is, the Government claimed that the State of Missouri should pay him.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. That was the ground taken by the accounting officers, but the Senate committee and the House committee have examined the case, and have found that, as a matter of fact, he was acting as a United States officer in rendering these services.

Mr. DINGLEY. The amount involved in this case may not be important, but the question is whether there are not thousands of others in precisely a similar situation, and whether this precedent will not involve the payment of many other such claims.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think not.

Mr. STEELE. The mistake was evidently made by the commanding general in detailing a militia officer instead of an officer in the United States service. That is a very rare occurrence. I never heard of such a case before.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman thinks, then, that there would be no danger in this as a precedent.

Mr. STEELE. I think not.

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that I have had three cases of this very same character pressed upon me for years, but I have never had nerve enough to bring them before Congress. And they are from Missouri, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. That may be. I do not know anything about the gentleman's cases and I do not want to enter into a contest of nerve. But this is a just claim and ought to be paid. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] says, it is a peculiar case where, instead of detailing an officer of the Regular Army or of the volunteer force, he detailed an officer in a militia regiment. But the man performed the service; there is no question about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know why this was not paid by the State of Missouri.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Because the services were rendered to the United States and not to the State of Missouri.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the provost-marshal had any authority of law to appoint an acting assistant?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. This man was appointed by general orders of a United States officer.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, you would not let the orders be read, so that we could not know that.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. They have been read; they are in the report. One of them is from Major-General Curtis, commanding that department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I must ask that the matter go over. The report was so long that I did not insist on having it read through.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. It will take just as much time on another occasion to dispose of the matter. You have now heard the report. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I prefer to look into the matter. If the claim should seem satisfactory I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes; but somebody else will. [Laughter.]

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., NORTH MANITOU ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. MAHANY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 5736) to authorize the Light-House Board to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan, was read.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I object.

Mr. CANNON. I call for the regular order.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, has directed me to report back the amendments with the recommendation that they be disagreed to and that a conference with the Senate be asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] moves that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to this bill and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DOCKERY as conferees on the part of the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. HOPKINS in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

When the paragraphs headed "Engraving and printing" were reached,

Mr. BINGHAM said: I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of these paragraphs and any amendments thereto be passed over until we reach the close of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. That will cover the paragraphs under the head of "Engraving and printing," beginning on page 16 of the bill and extending to the heading "Coast and Geodetic Survey," page 17.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the paragraphs relating to printing and engraving, on pages 16 and 17, be passed over, to be considered after the rest of the bill is finished. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For field expenses: For survey of unfinished portions of the Atlantic coast from Maine to Florida, including Portsmouth Harbor and Piscataqua River; Hudson River to Troy; and for the necessary resurveys, including the coast from Lynn to Cape Ann, the shores of Marthas Vineyard and Nantucket Sound, approaches to New Bedford, Buzzards Bay, Chesapeake Bay and tributaries, and Savannah River Bar, eighteen thousand dollars.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 12, page 19, the word "eighteen" and insert "twenty-five"; so as to make the appropriation $25,000.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I desire especially to call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to this amendment. In the first place, I wish to read to the committee a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury by General Duffield, the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, upon the subject of field expenses, which is the subject of the paragraph now under consideration. This letter appears as Appendix Q, on page 314 of the Book of Estimates. I will read it, as I believe I can better intone it for the committee than probably the Clerk would do.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., September 20, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the estimates of appropriations required for the service of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and Office of Construction of Standard Weights and Measures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897:

The amount asked for "field expenses" is $169,000, as against $110,500 appropriated for 1895-96, an increase of $58,500. An increase of appropriation under this head is necessary for the rapid and economical prosecution of surveys urgently demanded in the interest of commerce along our coasts and for the advancement of other important field operations of the Survey. With a less amount the parties of the Survey can not be employed to full advantage, as it is possible for them to remain in the field only for a portion of the available working months, while the expense of fitting out and transporting parties to the field and return is the same for a short as for a long season. The vessels engaged in the hydrographic portions of the work should be employed almost continuously to keep pace with the demand for surveys and examinations in various important localities, but this will be impracticable with the amount appropriated for the current year.

Now, here is the particular part of this letter to which I wish to direct the attention of the committee:

The original survey of the Chesapeake Bay was made many years ago, and since then the erosive action of the tides has washed away entire points, eaten into the shore and deposited the material in the channel, so that neither the shore lines nor depths of water shown upon the charts of this bay agree with the true condition of affairs at the present time. These charts are therefore defective and misleading, and hence the necessity of an entire resurvey of Chesapeake Bay.

I have read all of this letter to which I wish specially to direct the attention of the committee at this time. Of course what I am particularly interested in is the resurvey of the Chesapeake Bay. That is not, however, a matter of purely local importance, and to this view of the subject I invite the attention of the Committee of the Whole and particularly the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

The Chesapeake Bay, as everybody on this floor understands, is the great thoroughfare into which the Potomac River empties. The Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey says in this letter that the chart for that bay was made many years ago. I visited the office of the Superintendent this morning, in order to obtain accurate information on this point, and was informed by him that this chart was absolutely made half a century ago.

The chart which guides the mariner upon this great thoroughfare of commerce was made a half century ago, and the last work done upon it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line. I believe that is a fiction that will permit me to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland be permitted to occupy five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILES. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois.

I wanted to call the attention of the committee to these matters and shall hurry through as rapidly as possible. I was proceeding to say that I had been informed by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey that the last important amendment made to the chart in question was made thirty years ago, and I ask the privilege of quoting him on this floor, and in doing so I will go further and say that he assured me that in case this country was suddenly involved in a war and the commander of a war ship would follow the guidance of this chart it would be impossible for him to bring his vessel, for defensive purposes, to the capital through the Chesapeake Bay and up the Potomac without running the risk, ninety-nine in a hundred, that he would put his vessel ashore. That statement, it will be observed, Mr. Chairman, says nothing whatever of the great importance of this question to the commercial interests of the city of Baltimore. The legislature of Maryland has memorialized Congress upon the question and the boards of trade and Chamber of Commerce of the city of Baltimore have done the same.

Now, as to the figures, I will call your attention briefly. The Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey asks an appropriation of $169,000. One hundred and ten thousand five hundred dollars was carried by the last appropriation bill, so that it will be seen that he asked an increase of $58,000 over the amount of last appropriation bill for the field items alone. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended an appropriation of $114,800. This bill carries on its face $103,800. My amendment asks for an increase in this paragraph of $7,000, so that if the amendment should carry, and I sincerely hope that it will receive the careful consideration of the gentleman in charge of this bill and of the full committee, yet it would still provide for the "field items" an appropriation not greater than the appropriation carried in the last appropriation bill and only equal to what was recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire only to say a word to gentlemen on the other side of the House, who have two votes to one on this side of the House, to which I am attached, I am very much in earnest about this matter, but with the brief statement which I have made, from the facts submitted to me by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, you can see that the subject is one not of local importance but of national importance. I should not have offered the amendment except with the hope of getting some increase in the appropriation. If I had intended merely to make an impression upon the people of my State and particularly of the people of the great city of Baltimore, I should have asked for an increase of $12,000. If I had asked the amount recommended by the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, it would have amounted to nearly twice the increase that my amendment proposes. But I had a conference with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a leader on the other side of this Chamber, for whose fairness, intelligence, and general patriotism I have the greatest respect, and have yielded $6,000 worth of my own judgment; and so I hope I may have his support and that of the committee to secure the adoption of the amendment. If I can accomplish my wish in this matter, as expressed by the amendment I have offered, I shall feel that I have contributed something to a matter of legislation of national importance, and in the name of the people of the great city of Baltimore shall be ready to thank this House for what it has done in the interest of the commerce and trade of that great city.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill recommends the full estimate as submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury for these surveys, not only on the Atlantic coast, but on the Pacific coast. The whole amount is given as recommended.

The gentleman states correctly, however, that the Coast Survey Office, through its Superintendent, did submit that increase of $58,000 for these surveys for field work; and the Secretary of the Treasury, the superior officer of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, did cut it down, with or without reason I do not know. My friend from Maryland says that it was done without rhyme or reason. Well, I do not know, but my friend is better informed than I am, because I am not in harmony with either the Secretary of the Treasury or the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and, for that matter, I am not in harmony with the Administration. My friend is, or ought to be, and I suppose is very good authority, and is doubtless orthodox touching the controversy or difference in opinion between a bureau of the Treasury Department and the chief of that Department.

Mr. MILES. I would like to say, if my friend will permit me——

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILES. What I wish to say in connection with the statement of the gentleman from Illinois is that the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey told me—and I had his permission to use his statement in the House, as well as others with reference to these matters that I had asked him about—that the Secretary of the Treasury was perfectly willing that he should disclose to me and to Congress the fact that he recommended $30,000 and had the figures to exhibit here on the floor. He stated that it was unusual for the Secretary of the Treasury to publish such a letter as he had addressed to the Secretary on this matter.

I do not know. I am inexperienced. I have placed myself at the tender mercy of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; it is not within my jurisdiction to settle a dispute between the superintendent of a bureau in the Treasury Department and the Secretary of the Treasury.

I want to be entirely frank with the gentleman from Maryland and the Committee of the Whole touching the matter. Within the last three years the most competent Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey—admitted as such by everybody who had knowledge touching the matter—who ever presided over the Bureau was frozen out. I refer to Dr. Mendenhall. That office never had—and I am not speaking less for others but more for him—so competent a head as Dr. Mendenhall. The present Administration came in and the war commenced upon him. First his salary was arbitrarily attempted to be decreased in appropriation from $6,000, the amount fixed by law, to $5,000. Next he was deprived of power, practically, in his Bureau by the Administration. He was not only a competent man, but able to make a living elsewhere than in that Service. He had manhood, and he said, "I am persona non grata here, and I have ability enough to get along. I can not do myself or the Service justice," and he stepped down and out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to have five minutes more.

Mr. MILES. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended until his remarks are concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. He stepped down and out, and then the present head of the Coast Survey—and I am not going to speak disrespectfully of him; I know but little of him; he seems to be a gentleman, and he is a gentleman in his demeanor—was discovered somewhere and was appointed to succeed Dr. Mendenhall. Well, he goes on, no doubt, and does the best he can. He submits his estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Treasury arbitrarily reduces them $58,000 for the field work.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Do you not think that the Secretary of the Treasury knew of the incompetency of his own employee?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know. I think he knew of the competency of Dr. Mendenhall; but, anyhow, this discovery, this new man, the creation of the present Administration, submitted his estimates and the Secretary of the Treasury reduced them. Now, I expect the Lord knows, I do not, whether the head of the Coast Survey or the head of the Treasury Department knows most about the necessities of the service. I can not tell.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion right there?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, although I want to conclude in five minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman's time is not limited.

Mr. MILES. I think you will admit that the reduction was not exceptional in this instance, but that he reduced the estimates submitted to him by all the heads of Departments, did he not?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not of all the heads by any manner of means. As a rule, the estimates submitted were forwarded without change in the various Departments of the public service; but I am speaking now of this particular Department.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, I should like to ask my colleague a question. His time is not limited.

Mr. CANNON. I will need two or three minutes to conclude; but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do you mean to say that the Secretary of the Treasury cut this estimate because of the inefficiency of the present administration over there in the Coast Survey Office?

Mr. CANNON. No——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You do not want to leave that impression?

Mr. CANNON. No; I do not know. I do know, however, that by the letter that General Duffield, the Superintendent, forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury he asked and urged $58,000 more for field work than the Secretary recommends. The Secretary of the Treasury arbitrarily, with or without reason, I do not know which, has reduced the estimate $58,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask my friend this question, if that is unusual: Did not the Secretary of War cut the estimates from the different arms of that service in the same way?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, in some instances, yes, and in other instances, no. In most instances, no.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then one more question. The Secretary of the Treasury did not cut this estimate of $30,000 for this specific purpose, did he? That was done in the committee room?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not at all. We literally follow the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, because he is the superior officer, and the law puts the duty on him to bring in the final estimate for his Department. We literally recommend what the Secretary of the Treasury recommended, without a cut of one cent. Now, what happened? Why, the board of trade, the commercial bodies over there at Baltimore, go to work and hold meetings and resolve that the Chesapeake Bay ought to be resurveyed. The chief of the Coast Survey says it has been fifty years since it was surveyed and that the public service requires that it should be resurveyed, that the charts made on the old surveys are unreliable, and that the great commerce upon the Chesapeake requires that this survey shall be made, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MILES] comes in and moves to increase the item for service along the Atlantic coast $7,000, hoping and expecting that the most of it, if not all, will be expended for a resurvey of the Chesapeake.

I am quite sure I do not know just what the necessities in this case are. We recommend the full estimates. I have called the attention of the Committee of the Whole to a brief history of the Coast Survey for the last three years and the history of these estimates. They may or may not be important. If I thought this was important—that the new discovery in the Coast Survey Office was right beyond question, and the Secretary of the Treasury was wrong—then I would be in favor of increasing the appropriation asked for by $7,000; and also, later on, in favor of making an increase of $5,000 to be utilized in the San Francisco Harbor, because the same claim, I apprehend, will be made there that was made here.

Now, having stated how this matter is, I am perfectly content. If the Committee of the Whole House has any more knowledge than I have about it, or any more knowledge than the Secretary of the Treasury has about it, then I am content with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. I call for a division.

Mr. MILES. I hope the gentleman will not ask for a division.

Mr. CANNON. It is a division. If the majority is for your amendment I have nothing further to say.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 54.

So the amendment was adopted. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To continue the primary triangulation from the vicinity of Montgomery toward Mobile, and for triangulation, topography, and hydrography of unfinished portions of the Gulf Coast, including Lake Pontchartrain and Sabine Lake, and for the necessary resurveys, $7,800.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, a statement has gone broadcast through this land that the Manufacturers' Club of the city of Philadelphia, which is composed of the leading industrial establishments of that city, is in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver; not only that, but a committee of that club came to Washington and made a compact with the free-silver Senators, in which they agreed to make the compact that if they would support the free and unlimited coinage of silver they would yield to the great American doctrine of protection in order to accomplish that result. Sir, that was a self-constituted committee, and with no authority to act for the club. The first answer that has come to that alleged compact has come from the State of one of the silver Senators, South Dakota, which has utterly repudiated the position which her Senator took on that occasion; and now, in response to that message from the far West, come resolutions of the Manufacturers' Club, passed last night in the city of Philadelphia. Assembled in its hall were 500 members of that club; and, sir, as a member of that association, I desire to have the Clerk read as a part of my remarks the resolutions which were passed almost unanimously—there were only 20 votes against them out of 500.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the gentleman what this has to do with this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. ADAMS. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be interrupted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas false and misleading reports have been spread broadcast over the country as to the conference at Washington on March 19, between a number of Philadelphia manufacturers and those free-silver Senators who, though elected as Republicans and avowing themselves protectionists, declined to vote for the Republican revenue measure known as the Dingley bill unless coupled with a free silver coinage amendment; and

Whereas these reports have created the impression that the friends of a protective tariff are willing to compromise the cause of protection by indorsing the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 in exchange for additional protection; and

Whereas these statements are not only compromising the integrity and patriotism of our manufacturers as individuals, but especially so as members of the Manufacturers' Club: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the Manufacturers' Club, speaking for its members, emphatically denounces as false the statement made by the friends of free silver and echoed by those of free trade, that our Philadelphia manufacturers are willing to barter with the silver Senators for the free coinage of silver in exchange for additional protection.

Resolved, That the question of bimetallism can be permanently settled only through an international agreement, and that the Manufacturers' Club declares its unalterable opposition to the free coinage of silver by the United States alone, firmly believing that such a policy would result in disaster at home and dishonor abroad, and would only operate to place this country upon the basis of silver monometallism.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the resolutions read at the instance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am glad that they have been read. It gives me an opportunity to say upon this floor what ought to have been said some days ago. It is true, as has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that false and misleading reports have been circulated through the press of this country relative to what transpired at what was familiarly known as the Washington conference. It is true that those reports were false, and that they have been circulated without any regard whatever to the truth. But, Mr. Chairman, it is only due to those men whom it is attempted to malign and stigmatize as being responsible for that false report that I make a plain statement to this House and to the country of what occurred. At the invitation of a representative of the manufacturers, a letter inviting them to come over and see the silver Senators here in Washington and confer was written and sent and the invitation accepted. These manufacturers came, and about three and a half hours were spent in conference.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman say it was an official acceptance?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. HARTMAN. I do not know whether it was or not. I know that 28 of them came; and it strikes me that, after coming here, they had no right, then, to deny the validity of the invitation which they did accept. I do not know whether it was official; I do not care about that; but I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the report which was given out was prepared by Senators MANTLE and CARTER of Montana, Senator DUBOIS of Idaho, and Senator CANNON of Utah, and by me, and was published in the Post of the following morning; and I ask any member upon this floor who read that if he finds any suggestion of making an agreement between us having been accomplished. It is true we were endeavoring to arrive at some conclusion whereby we might meet upon common ground; but that report specifically disavowed having arrived at any agreement; and then, for the purpose of breaking down and stigmatizing and vilifying and bemeaning in the public mind the men who have had the hardihood to stand up for free silver, the gold-standard press of this country denounced that as a false statement and said that we had put it into circulation.

Mr. Chairman, no more utter falsehood, no more willful and deliberate and malicious lie ever was circulated to the American people. [Applause.] Read it and you will find my statement to be true. Nowhere in that official report we are responsible for was there a suggestion of an agreement. The gold-standard press used that for the purpose, as I said before, of slandering and stigmatizing the men who were engaged in the support of silver; coined the lie, and then attempted to force it down our throats and hold us responsible for it. These are the facts, and I defy any man to read the report that was published in the Post the next morning and discover any suggestion of an agreement.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think I can settle this whole matter. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's amendment was to strike out the last word.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I mean the amendment that was read.

Mr. ADAMS. That was not my amendment; those were my remarks. My amendment was to strike out the last word.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not wish to take the time of this committee for idle discussion, but assertions are constantly being made concerning this subject which are, as the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] has said, absolutely and unqualifiedly false. I was one of the gentlemen who were present at that conference. The silver Senators did not ask for that conference, and the statement that they did is the first falsehood which I wish to brand in public. The suggestion was made to them that there should be a conference between them and certain manufacturers of the city of Philadelphia, and the silver Senators, so-called, said that they would gladly meet those gentlemen, and they did meet them. In addition to the Senators there were present the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. WILSON, the gentleman from Montana, Mr. HARTMAN, and myself.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania talks about compacts. No compact was attempted. The silver men made no proposition for a compact to be made between them and the manufacturers. No paper was laid before that assembly of gentlemen expressing the views either of the manufacturers or of the silver men. The discussion was simply for the purpose of finding out whether there was any common ground which the manufacturers of Philadelphia and the silver men of the nation could stand upon; that and nothing more. Why are these falsehoods circulated in the press and by the press of the United States? Is not the cause of gold monometallism able to win this fight without resorting to such tactics? Can not the advocates of gold monometallism win this battle by appealing to the power of reason in the minds of the people of the United States? This is only one of the many rumors of statements that are constantly being set afloat throughout the country by the papers of the United States, as witness the statement concerning Senator PETTIGREW of South Dakota a few days since. It seems to me that a cause which must be bolstered up by such tactics must be inherently bad. It seems to me that the time has come when the people of the United States should have this question openly and fairly discussed before them, as it never has been discussed and as it never will be discussed so long as the men who control the sentiment in favor of gold monometallism in the United States can muzzle the press.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For triangulation, topography, and hydrography of the coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington, and for necessary resurveys, San Francisco Harbor, triangulation, topography, and hydrography, $15,000.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "fifteen," before the word "thousand," and insert "twenty." In support of that amendment I desire to say that the Superintendent of the Coast Survey put in a separate estimate of $10,000 for the resurvey of San Francisco Harbor. That item was eliminated by the Secretary of the Treasury. Permit me to say in regard to this work that it was started through the able assistance of my generous friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], who had incorporated in the sundry civil bill two years ago a provision that the resurvey of the harbor of San Francisco should proceed.

There had been no survey of that harbor for forty-five years. Two years ago the work was undertaken, but it is not progressing as fast as we would wish. We really ought to have $10,000 for that survey work during the coming year, as the Superintendent has estimated, but in view of the stringency in the money market and the lack of funds in the Treasury we are modest and will ask for but $5,000, and I would not ask even for that had I not been informed by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey that under this appropriation as it stands in the bill he could not proceed with the work in San Francisco Harbor, which I suppose might be interpreted to mean that he would not proceed with it. Now, everybody knows that after a survey has been begun it ought to proceed continuously with all practicable speed, and not be spun out so as to cover a long period of years. This survey will cost, on the whole, I understand, about $90,000, and at the rate they have been proceeding it would certainly take ten years to complete it. The survey, as far as it has gone, has made some valuable discoveries in that harbor. All of the hydraulic mining has taken place in the State of California since the previous survey of that harbor, and many shoalings have been discovered in the harbor. I think that the generous chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, will perhaps concede without very much opposition this modest request for $5,000, which is absolutely necessary in order that this very important work shall proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the action of the Committee of the Whole a few minutes ago increasing the amount of the appropriation for the Atlantic coast $7,000, in harmony with the recommendations of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey and against the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, it seems to me I am not warranted in this instance in interposing opposition. This proposed increase of $5,000 for the Pacific Coast would seem to follow logically the increase of $7,000 made on the Atlantic Coast.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection be made, the amendment will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries Coast and Geodetic Survey: For Superintendent, $5,000.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "five" and inserting "six;" so as to appropriate as the salary of this officer $6,000. By section 4689 of the Revised Statutes the salary of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey is fixed at $6,000. It was fixed at that amount in 1853, when the currency was not inflated, when prices were not high; and since that time many salaries, including that of the President of the United States, have been increased, and largely increased. On account of the peculiar qualifications required in this officer the salary was fixed at a liberal amount. It has remained at that amount ever since until one year ago. In the meantime, since the salary was fixed, the duties of the position have been largely increased. The Superintendent of the Coast Survey has been made the superintendent of standard weights and measures; he has been made a member of the boundary commission fixing the lines in the northwestern part of the country; of the commission fixing the boundary line in the northeastern part; of the commission fixing the line between the inner waters of the country and the outer waters—the international lines; of the commission fixing the outer line of the harbor boundary at Brunswick, Ga.; of the Light-House Board—all involving much labor and taking much time. Besides this, various duties of a very important character, involving a good deal of labor, have been imposed upon him. His salary, however, has remained the same.

I think the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee is in error in saying that the former occupant of this position had his salary reduced. I concur most heartily in everything the gentleman has said in relation to the eminent qualifications of the predecessor of the present incumbent, and I concur most thoroughly in what he said as to the injustice of whatever was done to "freeze out," as he expressed it, that gentleman. But I want to say that the present incumbent had nothing to do with that matter. At the time of his appointment he was engaged in scientific labor in behalf of his country; he was not at that time a newly discovered man. He is a man of scientific eminence, who has served his country in many capacities in war and in peace for nearly fifty years. There is no personal conflict or rivalry between the former incumbent and the present that should affect this question.

So we have presented here the simple question whether we shall now appropriate for this officer the salary fixed by statute forty years ago, since which time extra duties have been imposed; and in determining this question we are to consider the action of this House in going back to the statutory salaries for the superintendents of the Life-Saving Service, for the Indian commissioners, and for other positions of less importance and requiring a lower degree of talent and capacity than this position. I trust that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am not in harmony with this amendment. It is well enough to be practical and to realize the existing conditions. It is true that the Revised Statutes did fix the salary of this officer—the Superintendent of the Coast Survey—at $6,000. It is also true that the law fixed the salary of the chief of the Geological Survey at $6,000. Now, the Secretary of the Interior, at the very commencement of this Administration, formally recommended that only $5,000 be appropriated for the chief of the Geological Survey. That position was then occupied by Major Powell (known to many of us); and the office of Superintendent of the Coast Survey was occupied by Professor Mendenhall. The result was that both Major Powell and Professor Mendenhall went out of the service.

Now, I have not a thing to say against the present head of the Geological Survey or the present head of the Coast Survey. But there is the fact—both of these gentlemen, appointees under this Administration, have been receiving a salary of $5,000, fixed in the house of their friends.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] is seeking to increase the salary of this officer?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. My amendment simply proposes to appropriate the salary fixed by the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman proposes to increase the appropriation from $5,000 to $6,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. And the present incumbent accepted the office at the present salary?

Mr. CANNON. So I understand.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. No, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Illinois does not think this a very good time to increase salaries?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This salary was $6,000 when this man accepted the office?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Now, all I want to say to the House is that Major Powell went out of the Geological Survey and has a successor; Professor Mendenhall went out of the Coast Survey and has a successor. Both of these successors entered office under this Administration; and this Administration, when both the Senate and the House were in harmony, deliberately fixed the salaries by appropriating $5,000 for each place.

Now, I wish to suggest to this side of the House that we are not called upon to undo what was done for these gentlemen in the house of their friends; and I especially am not called upon to do so, because I do not care about quarreling with my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] or my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], both of whom were on the Committee on Appropriations when these salaries were appropriated for at $5,000 each. Five thousand dollars is a good deal of money, and whether it is too much or too little, under all of the circumstances I do not think that this side of the House should, and I do not believe that that side of the House is inclined to, increase the appropriation. I hope it will not be done.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on the amendment has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to strike out the last word.

I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois intended to leave the impression on the committee that the Administration had anything to do with the resignation of Major Powell——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not know anything about that.

Mr. SAYERS. The intimation was——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, the impression was left on the minds of a good many, at least.

Mr. CANNON. No; I did not say that. I have no knowledge of it, and did not make the charge. I did make a statement, based only on public rumor, touching Professor Mendenhall.

Mr. SAYERS. I think the Administration did perfectly right to remove Professor Mendenhall, and my own impression is that he ought to have been removed before. But the Administration had nothing to do with the resignation of Major Powell, and if the gentleman from Illinois will inquire into the facts attending it he will come to the same conclusion with myself.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to two facts: In the first place, the present incumbent accepted the office and resigned another position where he was drawing a good salary on the faith of the legal provision of the Revised Statutes fixing the salary at $6,000 a year. On the strength of that provision of law he accepted the position and resigned another appointment which was of value to him. For the first year he received $6,000 according to the provision in the statutes defining the amount he was entitled to receive. Further, the Superintendent of the Geological Survey, let me state to the gentleman from Illinois, has no salary fixed by the Revised Statutes, but simply a provision inserted in a comparatively recent appropriation bill giving him $6,000 a year; and since that time his duties and responsibilities have not been increased, as has been the case in the Coast Survey. The officer in charge of the Coast Survey has, as I have already stated, had his duties largely increased. So that there is an entirely different condition of affairs presented between the Geological Survey without a fixed salary and the Coast Survey with a fixed salary, which the incumbent has enjoyed for forty years and more.

Now, sir, I am not here advocating any increase of salary, but simply saying that "this side of the House," at least, as the gentleman from Illinois is pleased to term it, on a question of this kind can not afford to ignore the statutes of the United States nor a legal obligation imposed by them. It is enough for them to know that a legal obligation exists, and we can not afford, when a question of this kind arises, to ignore this obligation, particularly when our action affects a man who served his country as faithfully and well as General Duffield has done, a man who was a gallant soldier in two wars, who has carried in his body for fifty years the lead received in fighting the battles of his country, a man who came out of the last war with the brevet rank of major-general for gallant and meritorious services—I repeat, you can not, or at least you should not, make an exception against an old soldier when you make none in the case of a civilian Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service or in the case of Indian agents who have been charged with being simply the private agents of a Cabinet officer.

That is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. CANNON. Is this a proposition to pension General Duffield?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. No, sir; but simply to give him the contract price which the Government agreed to give him when he took the position that he now holds. That is all he asks.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in referring to Dr. Mendenhall's resignation, said that the present chief of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, General Duffield, had been "discovered" by the President when he was appointed. I suppose, therefore, the gentleman from Illinois is not informed as to the record of General Duffield. He has a record as a soldier in the Mexican war, as well as in the late war, that has made him conspicuous in this country. He has also been recognized for years as an engineer of great ability, and has a record not only in military but in civil life of which any man may well be proud. I was surprised that my friend from Illinois should not have been familiar with the brilliant services of General Duffield, rendered during the last forty years. When he was appointed Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey the salary was $6,000 per annum, and it should be fixed at that amount in this bill.

In my time I ask to have read from Appleton's Cyclopedia a brief reference to General Duffield, which may be of interest to the gentleman from Illinois, as well as to the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

William Ward Duffield, soldier; born in Carlisle, Pa., November 19, 1823; was graduated at Columbia in 1842. He served in the Mexican war; was wounded at Cerro Gordo April 18, 1847, and also at Contreras August 20, 1847, while acting adjutant of the Second Tennessee Infantry and on Gen. Gideon J. Pillow's staff. After the close of the war he became a civil engineer. He was resident engineer of the Hudson River Railroad in 1851; chief engineer of the Oakland and Ottawa Railroad, Michigan, and located that line from Pontiac to Grand Haven; chief engineer of the Central Military Tract Railroad, Illinois, in 1854 (now part of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad), and built that line; division engineer of the Grand Trunk Railroad and built the line from Detroit to Port Huron. He served as lieutenant-colonel of the Fourth Michigan Infantry in 1861, and was in the first battle of Bull Run. On September 10, 1861, he was appointed colonel of the Ninth Michigan Infantry. He joined General Sherman at Louisville, Ky., and was sent by him to occupy and fortify the pass through Muldraugh Hill, West Point, Ky., January 22, 1862. He was appointed by General Buell commander of the Twenty-third Brigade, Army of the Cumberland, April 22, 1862, and brigadier-general and president of the examining board under the act of Congress to test the efficiency of volunteer officers May 2, 1862. He overtook the Confederate forces under Col. John Morgan at Lebanon, and captured the place after a sharp fight. He was assigned by General Buell to command all the forces in Kentucky on May 8, 1862, and was relieved of this post on September 10. He rejoined the Fourteenth Corps, Army of the Cumberland, under General Thomas, and served with it until the battle of Murfreesboro, where he was disabled by two severe wounds and captured. Unable to take the field at the time required by the act of Congress, he resigned, and was appointed chief engineer of the Hudson River Railroad. He was employed in 1869 to survey lands in Colorado; in 1871-72 was chief engineer of the Kentucky Union Railroad and located that line from Paris to Hazard. He was elected to the Michigan State senate in 1880, and in 1882 was employed in surveying Government lands in Dakota. In 1885 he was reappointed chief engineer of the Kentucky Union Railroad. He has published School of Brigade and Evolutions of the Line.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have no assault to make upon General Duffield. More than a generation ago, from that record, he seems to have been prominent in the Mexican war. He seems to have had a successful life in war and in peace. I do know, without quarreling with my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], that he succeeded as Superintendent of the Coast Survey a man who, in my judgment, was the most competent that ever held that position, as I have before indicated. I do know, further, that his salary, as fixed in the house of his friends, a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate, and appropriated for, was $5,000. I do know that he has held the place from that time to this at a salary of $5,000.

Now, in my judgment, the increase of this appropriation from $5,000 to $6,000, under the changed condition, championed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE], is not called for, first, for the necessities of the service, and second, that this side of the House is not called upon to make it. I was surprised at the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. His clarion voice is now lifted for this increase. He was as silent as the grave in the last Congress when this salary was appropriated for at $5,000.

Now, without making any assault upon General Duffield, who has a splendid record, as read there, I want to say that, wounded as he was in the service, if he is upon the retired list I am willing to let him remain there. If he was wounded and is pensioned, he has the same provision that other worthy soldiers have. And while I deny nothing that can be properly given for the men who were renowned in war, I submit that when gentlemen bring that forward as a makeweight, touching this office that this man holds, to affect this increase of appropriation for salary, I am not much in harmony with it.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. The gentleman alludes to it as an increase of salary. Will the gentleman state to me whether I am correct in the statement that until last year this salary was uniformly $6,000?

Mr. CANNON. I so understand it.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. And that last year, without any change of the statute, a less amount was appropriated in the appropriation bill?

Mr. CANNON. I so understand it. And now will the gentleman answer me if General Duffield is not receiving that $5,000, and if it was not fixed in the house of his friends, when the House and the Senate and the President were Democratic, he being an appointee under that Administration?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I will answer the question.

Mr. CANNON. I am asking a very simple question. It can be answered yes or no.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I will answer that it was done in that way; but there are many things done by the Democratic President and Democratic Congress that do not meet with my approval, and when they undertake to ignore the provisions of the statute I am not with them.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, what the gentleman's reason for this may be I do not know; but so far as I am concerned I think it is sound economy, and sound politics as well, that we leave this Democratic employee as his Democratic friends fixed him, and that $5,000 is, in my judgment, quite enough.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question before he sits down?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is General Duffield drawing a pension?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood you to say so.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I said when his record was read here that I understood from that record that he was wounded while in the Army; that if there was an application to pension him, or if he is on the retired list, I would treat him as a magnificent defender of the Union, just as I would treat his comrades; but that constitutes no argument as to how much salary an official of the Government should get in its civil service. That is all I want to say, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the amendment be read again.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CHARLES W. STONE) there were—ayes 29, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Office expenses: For the purchase of new instruments, for materials and supplies required in the instrument shop, carpenter shop, and drawing division, and for books, maps, charts, and subscriptions, $8,000.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

There has been a good deal of comment in the committee this morning and in the newspapers of the last few days in regard to the action of the Republican convention in South Dakota last week. It has been referred to two or three times here this morning. I only rise to correct some of these false reports. I want to say that the Republicans of South Dakota are Republicans, and they will remain Republicans.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to apprise the committee, as the matter has been brought up here, and the country as to just what position the Republicans of South Dakota took last Wednesday on the financial question, that it may be known what their official action was, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk the resolution which was adopted by the Republicans of South Dakota in convention in regard to finances.

Mr. HILL. What is their position as to protection?

Mr. PICKLER. We are for protection in every respect.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there is a diversity of opinion among the Republicans of the State upon the financial question; and

Whereas we have perfect confidence in the wisdom and patriotism of the Republican party that shall assemble at St. Louis next June that it will consider and adopt a platform broad and strong enough for every Republican to stand upon: Therefore,

We reaffirm our devotion and loyalty to the platform adopted at Minneapolis in 1892, and adopt it as our platform until the national convention shall give us another.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to protection and as to finances and as to every other Republican doctrine, if you want to know our position, for that we refer you to the platform adopted at Minneapolis until the St. Louis Republican platform shall declare another. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARTMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question if he will yield.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARTMAN. Does it not appear to the gentleman, in view of the fact that the views and position of everybody who happens to entertain similar views on the financial question have been falsely represented by the gold-standard press, that that press, while opposed to the free coinage of silver, is unalterably in favor of the free coinage of falsehood? [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I know there have been a great many misrepresentations in the papers that the gentleman describes, but I only desire to set the Republicans fairly before the country.

Mr. MEREDITH. You take it on faith, do you?

The Clerk read as follows:

Neosho (Mo.) station: Superintendent, $1,500; foreman, $720; one laborer, $600; in all, $2,820.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "five," in line 23, on page 33, and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the direct effect of this amendment is to increase the salary of the superintendent from $1,500 to $1,800. He received——

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I did not get my eye on the amendment until this moment. I ask that it be read again. I am not sure that I have it now.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. What is the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. The salary now is $1,500 and there is no law authorizing $1,800, I believe. He gets $1,500.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Pardon me. He got $1,800 for a number of years.

Mr. SAYERS. But not for the last two years.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The last Congress, or possibly the Fifty-second, reduced it to $1,500. I do not think the gentleman's point of order is well taken; because I do not think the law limits the salary to $1,500. He was originally appointed at $1,500, and after serving a while his salary was increased, upon the recommendation of the Fish Commissioner, for work remarkably well done; and for a series of years he received $1,800 a year. Now, I desire to say that this man has devoted more than eighteen years of his life to this position. He is well qualified, and is an author; and the Fish Commissioner over here is using a work of this man on the Propagation of Black Bass in responding to the queries that are made of that Department, and they do not pay him one cent for it. And I say that a man of that character, of that experience, who has devoted the number of years he has to it, and who for a number of years received $1,800 a year, ought to receive that amount; and simply because some preceding Congress has reduced, in an appropriation bill, his salary from $1,800 to $1,500 is not a reason why this House should continue to do him wrong. I earnestly hope that this House will give to this man that which he received for a number of years, that which his qualifications and which his service entitle him to.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, as to whether, strictly speaking, this is subject to a point of order or not. I understand it to be the fact that there is no statute fixing the salary. For the current year he receives $1,500 by an appropriation, and did, as I understand, last year, and some years prior thereto, along with other like officials at the various stations. I suppose that that constitutes the law, if there be any, fixing his salary. The gentleman can not show anything where the law says he shall have $1,800.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Then if the appropriation cut it down to $500, it never could be increased.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is competent to legislate. I am discussing what constitutes the law, in the light of the rule, for these salaries. If it is competent to appropriate $1,800 instead of $1,500, it is competent to appropriate $18,000.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. There is no legislation.

Mr. CANNON. There is no legislation for $1,800 or $18,000, and there is no legislation for $1,500 except the current law. The salary that he gets at present is $1,500, appropriated for in the sundry civil law for the current year, and has been that for several years. I suppose that, for the purposes of the rule, that would be considered as law.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word about this appropriation. During the last Congress—I do not remember whether it was at the first or the second regular session—there was an effort made to equalize the stations in this respect, and after careful inquiry the conclusion was reached that the salaries then carried in the appropriation bill were ample for the office. My recollection is—and I speak only from recollection—that at most of these stations the superintendents are supplied with houses in which to live. That being the case, and with the advantage of continual residence at the stations, very light work indeed, and not very great responsibility, it does seem to me that this Congress ought not to undertake to return to the old system of salaries for these superintendents. As they now stand in the bill they are all equalized, but if you return to the salaries that obtained more than two years ago you will have them unequal at the different stations, and there will be a constant effort on the part of those who are receiving the smaller salaries to put themselves on an equality with those who are better paid, and at the same time those receiving the larger salaries will be trying to have them increased. This ought to be permanent law instead of annual law, and the salaries of the superintendents of these stations ought not to be larger at any place than the amount fixed in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order made by my colleague [Mr. CANNON] I desire to say that I do not think it is well taken. The salary is provided for this position in each annual appropriation bill, and failure to provide the salary in an annual appropriation bill would virtually abolish the office. The appropriation made in the last appropriation bill provides a salary for the present fiscal year. The appropriation bill now under consideration is intended to provide a salary for this officer for the next fiscal year. Hence, under a ruling made a few days ago by the gentleman then in the chair, there is no existing law fixing this salary, and there being no existing law, I am compelled to differ with my colleague as to his point of order being well taken. As to the merits of the case, as to whether this salary should or should not be increased, I have nothing whatever to say. I simply desire to emphasize the point that where a salary is fixed annually in an appropriation bill a point of order will not hold against a proposition to increase that salary for the next fiscal year in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, on the merits I only want to say that all along the line for these superintendents of fish stations estimates were submitted for increase of salaries, but I do not think we want to enter upon that kind of legislation. One thousand five hundred dollars a year for the keeper of a fish station, when he has a house furnished by the Government free of rent and all repairs made, is a good salary, and I do not believe that we want to disturb this happy Democratic family in the salaries fixed for these superintendents under the lead of the eminent gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will continue to follow the example set by the Democratic Congress in all his appropriations. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I wish to follow it in this instance, because I think it is good.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman will make no mistake if he follows the policy of the last Congress in the matter of appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. I am content to do it in this case.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out from the paragraph all after the words "six hundred dollars," in line 24, page 33, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "One skilled laborer, $720; in all, $3,540."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think that is subject to a point of order. I do not know of any law that authorizes the employment of a skilled laborer at this fish station. The Chair is familiar with the law under which laborers, messengers, clerks of class 1, 2, 3, and 4 may be increased, according to the wants of the service—that kind of increase specially authorized in the Revised Statutes—so that that may be either an increasing or a decreasing force, according to the requirements of the service; but skilled laborers do not come within the provision. So far as any general authorization by law is concerned, they stand upon the same ground as a chief of division or any other officer not authorized by the common statutory provision.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, as to my friend's point of order, if there is anything in the word "skilled" which brings the amendment within the point, or which would justify the Chair in sustaining the point of order, then I ask leave to modify the amendment by striking out that word. Now, as to the merits of the amendment, this fishery is established at the little town of Neosho, a place of some 4,000 people, situated upon a series of hills at the base of which there rush out most magnificent springs of living water. The Government has gone to that town and established a fishery. Originally not only did they allow this superintendent $1,800 a year, not only did they allow labor as they now allow it, but they allowed also what I am pleased to call a skilled laborer, by which I mean a man who can do rough carpenter work, who can do rough painting, who can make flues and boxes and trays, who can build a dam, if necessary. For a number of years that skilled laborer was there in the employ of the station, and when his time was not devoted to the discharge of such duties he was occupied in fish-culture. Eventually he took a civil-service examination and was promoted to be a fish-culturist and was transferred to another station. Since that time his place has never been supplied.

Mr. Chairman, from the day that plant was established until now the business there has constantly increased. To-day it is especially devoting itself to the propagation of rainbow trout and black bass, particularly black bass. There is not now at that point sufficient force to handle the black bass and ship them to meet the demand therefor. Why, Mr. Chairman, I assure this House that last spring when I was there, standing upon the banks of one of those magnificent ponds, the black bass came up and even whined for more laborers that they might be taken out and distributed throughout the country. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Then I modify my amendment and reoffer it with the word "skilled" stricken out.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman strikes out the word "skilled," so as to provide simply for a laborer, I presume that a motion to increase the force of laborers is within the rule, because that general class of employees is authorized by the Revised Statutes.

The gentleman has spoken to the merits of the proposition. Mr. Chairman, the Government of the United States in its policy touching the Fish Commission and its work has never been niggardly. It is a magnificent service in the number of its officials and the efficiency of their work. Some people believe that it is not a very important service. Frankly, I think it is. But last year we appropriated $336,240 for the distribution and propagation of fish, and this bill contains an increased appropriation, $339,340. The matter was fully examined in committee and from a friendly standpoint. After the fullest inquiry the committee is satisfied that it has been not only just but liberal toward this service in the appropriations reported. I trust that the recommendations of the committee as reported will stand.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BURTON of Missouri, it was rejected; there being—ayes 14, noes 39.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clackamas (Oreg.) station: Superintendent, $1,500; one laborer, $720; one laborer, $600; in all, $2,820.

Mr. HARTMAN. Before offering the amendment which I have in view I will ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is this matter of the continuation of the fish hatcheries already under construction to be taken care of in this bill or in the general deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON. At the time this bill was completed we had not received any estimates for that purpose; they would not belong on this bill; they would be considered with the deficiency estimates.

Mr. HARTMAN. Then this matter will come in properly on the general deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON. The matter has not been examined as yet.

Mr. SAYERS. I think there is a clause in this bill which provides for these hatcheries when they shall have been completed. Is not that so?

Mr. CANNON. That is for the personnel.

Mr. HARTMAN. I will state my reason for this question. In my town in Montana there is now a hatchery in process of construction; it is partially completed.

Mr. CANNON. That will go upon the general deficiency bill.

Mr. HARTMAN. Very well. If that be the case I will not detain the Committee of the Whole at this time by offering an amendment.

Mr. SIMPKINS. Mr. Chairman, having been absent for a few moments, I ask unanimous consent to recur to line 11, page 32, to which I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman, as I understand, was not present when that paragraph was read. I suspect that I am not in harmony with his amendment, but I have no disposition to object to giving the gentleman a chance to test the sense of the committee upon the amendment.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole recurred to the following paragraph:

Woods Hole (Mass.) station: Superintendent, $1,500; machinist, $960; fish-culturist, $900; pilot and collector, $720; three firemen, at $540 each; two laborers, at $540 each; in all, $6,780.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I move to amend by striking out the words "five hundred and forty," in lines 10 and 11, and substituting the words "seven hundred and twenty;" so that the clause will read:

Three firemen, at $720 each.

Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to make the salaries of the firemen engaged at Woods Hole equal to the salaries of the firemen engaged at the New York station. The work of the firemen in these two places being identical, there is no reason, I believe, why their pay should not be the same. It is conceded by all that the pay of the firemen at the New York station, $720 each, is not too large. I hope, therefore, that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation for the station at Woods Hole was written formally in the appropriation bill four years ago, in accordance with the amounts which were then being paid to these employees, there having been full authority on the part of the officers in charge to make what disbursements they chose for this purpose from a lump sum which had been appropriated. Congress thought it wise to make the appropriations for all these stations specific; and the salaries having been fixed at these amounts when those in authority had plenary power in the premises, Congress adopted the roster as we now have it. It seems to me we can not undertake to regulate and change these salaries by amendment in Committee of the Whole. I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. SIMPKINS was rejected, there being—ayes 10, noes 31.

The Clerk read as follows:

Punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $50,000; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make a detailed statement to Congress once in each year as to how he has expended this sum, and also a detailed statement of all miscellaneous expenditures in the Bureau of Internal Revenue for which appropriation is made in this act.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if he will not consent to pass over this paragraph, beginning with line 15, on page 38, and extending to line 24, with permission to return to it after the bill has been concluded?

Mr. CANNON. I am quite content that we should pass over that paragraph and return to it after we read the bill through.

Mr. LINNEY. I want to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, to strike out that whole paragraph.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. That will have to be done, the Chair will state, by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I have withdrawn the request.

Mr. CANNON. Whichever way the gentleman from North Carolina prefers, I have no objection, either to let it be considered now or accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee and let it be passed over by unanimous consent, to be recurred to hereafter.

Mr. LINNEY. I prefer its consideration now. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 13, by striking out from the bill the paragraph beginning with line 15, down to and including line 24.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out a portion of the paragraph, which I believe has precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. TATE. No, sir; to strike out a part of the paragraph, which amounts to an amendment to perfect the text of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, unless the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina is temporarily withdrawn, that under the circumstances it would be first in order.

Mr. SWANSON. A motion to strike out takes precedence of a motion to perfect the text? As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, a motion to amend would take precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia to be read, and will then determine whether it has precedence.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in lines 18 and 19 of the paragraph, the words "including payments for information and detection of such violations."

Mr. TATE. The Chair will see that the purpose of my amendment is to strike out the provision providing for the payment for information or the purchase of information on the part of the Government, and leaves the appropriation as it was made in the bill for the detection and prevention of frauds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia has precedence.

Mr. TATE. If the gentleman from North Carolina wishes to proceed, I do not want to take the floor from him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that the amendment to perfect the text takes precedence of the amendment to strike out entirely. The gentleman from Georgia has sent up an amendment to perfect the text, which the Chair recognizes as first in order.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Let us have the amendment again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Chairman, this question has been gone over by the House heretofore in discussing the bill to pay district attorneys, marshals, and other United States officials salaries in lieu of fees, and it seems scarcely necessary to discuss it at length now, and I will not undertake to again discuss this question in the short time allowed. The purpose is not to strike out the entire section of the bill nor to prevent the appropriation from being used for the purpose of detecting, arresting, and bringing to trial people who violate the internal-revenue laws. The purpose is to strike out that clause and that provision which allows the purchase of information by the Government and to pay for criminal information against the citizen who may violate the law.

The question of fees, and the manner in which the fees in the Internal-Revenue Department have been made heretofore, by which expenses have been piled up against the Government; the work of the informer, the manner in which he makes his fees and how these detestable spies and informers are used to harass the people and how they are paid for the same, has been gone over very thoroughly, as I said, in the discussion on the fee bill a short time ago. Under no other system of prosecution does the State courts or any other court provide money for the purpose of buying information. I undertake to say that such a proposition would not be tolerated by the State courts for a moment. The appropriation of money by the States for the purpose of buying information in criminal cases has never been done.

Mr. Chairman, I again appeal to this House to break up the business of the professional spy and informer by adopting this amendment. We should not appropriate the people's money to pay a class of people who are generally the greatest criminals to be found.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I feel constrained to differ with the gentleman from Georgia who offers this amendment, as well as with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY], who proposes to strike out the entire provision. I believe there is no more important provision in this bill than the one now proposed to be stricken out, and I shall urge upon the House not to paralyze the arm of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by striking out or altering this proposed section of the bill.

This is a very broad country of ours, and the internal-revenue service ramifies the whole of it, and unless the Commissioner has authority, and money to pay for the exercise of that authority in the detection of fraud and in acquiring information concerning fraud, you had as well not undertake to prevent fraud in the internal-revenue service at all. It seems to me to be a most wise provision, not only wise in terms, but wise by the experience of the Internal-Revenue Service, for it is probably a quarter of a century since there was the absence of such a provision in the law as this.

I insist that it should not be stricken out, that the words suggested by the gentleman from Georgia remain in, and that both of the amendments be voted down. I think the House will forget the importance of the provision if we yield to either of the proposed amendments.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say a few words only, Mr. Chairman. This particular service is not the only one in which the Government makes use of informers. The alien contract labor law, under which the informer is entitled to receive pay for information which leads to the arrest, indictment, and conviction of a person violating that law, and other laws pertaining to other branches of the service, under which informers are also employed and paid, are as susceptible of criticism as the clause under consideration.

Now, I agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. EVANS] that if this appropriation be stricken out the arm of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will be paralyzed, and that illicit distilleries will spring up in certain parts of the country, and especially in the good old State of Virginia, and in North Carolina and in Georgia. Certain gentlemen, whether Republicans, Democrats, or Populists, must depend for their election to Congress, to some extent at least, upon the votes of those who are engaged in this illicit and unlawful business. I am told, Mr. Chairman—I do not assert it as a fact—that when conventions are held in certain districts by the three parties there is one plank in the platform which is absolutely identical in all. We hear much about the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, but in those parts the burning question is, "Freedom to the moonshiners and permission to violate the internal-revenue laws of this country with impunity." Now, this is no exaggeration. Gentlemen may smile when I make the assertion, but it is believed by many to be true. I have before me the official statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the manner in which the appropriation of $50,000 made at the last session of the last Congress for the current fiscal year has been expended during the last eight months.

First I will take the State of North Carolina. If gentlemen will turn to their Congressional Directory they will find out who represent the Fifth and Eighth districts of that State. During eight months of the present fiscal year in the Fifth district of North Carolina 160 illicit distilleries were seized and destroyed. The persons operating them were violating the law and making a hell of one of the fairest portions of this country, converting into whisky the corn which should have been used for furnishing bread to their families and food to their stock.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] may rise in his place and talk most eloquently of the old Flag and the Union, and yet in his very district men are thus violating the laws of his country. The number of fermenters seized and destroyed in his district were 558, and the number of gallons of beer seized and destroyed were 32,550. All this during the past eight months.

But what of the Eighth district of North Carolina? I can not recollect which gentleman represents that district, but I believe he sits on the majority side of this House. We find that in that district during the past eight months 100 illicit distilleries, 755 fermenters, and 78,650 gallons of beer were seized and destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, this is an important item, and gentlemen will assail it most vigorously. I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. During the same time 11,047 gallons of spirits were also seized and destroyed. The report does not show whether it was brandy or whisky. So much for North Carolina. And it is enough. We will now turn to Georgia, represented in part by my good friend [Mr. TATE], who has already spoken and who has offered the pending amendment. Here we find in the Ninth district that 299 illicit distilleries were seized and destroyed during the past eight months.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. In one district?

Mr. SAYERS. In one district; and also 3,645 gallons of spirits.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What kind of spirits?

Mr. SAYERS. My friend lives in that State and he knows better than I. There were also seized and destroyed 292,535 gallons of beer. As to Virginia, the good old State, the mother of Presidents, the home of Madison and of Jefferson, so ably represented on this floor by gentlemen of high character and ability, we find that in the Fifth Congressional district alone 83 illicit distilleries, 8,394 gallons of spirits, 600 fermenters, and 75,100 gallons of beer were seized and destroyed. I ask leave, Mr. Chairman, to print the entire statement in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

In large cities, viz., San Francisco, Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee, New York, and Brooklyn, it has been impracticable to separate the items expended from the "fraud fund" according to Congressional districts, owing to the fact that when a man is employed on Form 10 and paid from this fund he may often do work in two or more Congressional districts in the same day, thereby rendering it impossible to give actual data, as above stated.

While this report shows approximately the amount expended from this fund, it does not exhibit the correct results, for the reason that many cases discovered within the time named have either not been reported or are before the courts or pending a settlement by offers in compromise in this office, the aggregate results of which would materially increase the sums reported.

Attention is further called to the fact that the limited time allowed for gathering this data and putting it in its present shape was not sufficient to make the most accurate report possible.

In some districts the reports show violations of law and seizures of property and assessments resulting therefrom, while but little, and in some instances, none of the "fraud fund" was expended. The results reported in such cases are due to the individual work of the agents or the deputies under their direction, and the "fraud fund" is not entitled to the credit for such work.

Five hundred and thirty-two arrests have been made within the time named which it is proper to report as a part of the work resulting from the use of this "fraud fund."

But I do not wish gentlemen who live in the North to think that the violation of the internal-revenue laws is confined to the States that I have mentioned. Let us go to the State of New York. We were told by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that in the basement of a house standing upon one of the most prominent streets in the city of New York an illicit distillery was being operated and that the illegal act was discovered and the gentlemen—I refer to them thus courteously—who were thus engaged in the willful, premeditated, deliberate, and continual violation of the law, when arrested paid to the Government $12,000 and costs at one time in order to escape further prosecution.

Mr. EVANS. I will remind the gentleman that this appropriation yields to the Government better returns than any other appropriation in any appropriation bill, in my judgment.

Mr. SAYERS. I think so. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to my colleague, Mr. Chairman, that in recovering this revenue for the Government, private houses, private bureaus, private closets are entered and broken open and searched without warrant, under no legal process whatever? I want to ask my colleague if he indorses that part of this system?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that such things are done, and until a case is made and established I will not express an opinion. But I know this, that if the houses of innocent men are broken into and their property destroyed, they have their recourse under the Constitution and laws of the country.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, will my colleague bear with me, because I do not want to make any speech on this subject?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Their recourse, Mr. Chairman, is through the courts of the country; and it would cost them more to fee a lawyer in most cases than the damages accruing. It is not the amount of property that they lose so much as the insult and injury that they sustain, being free citizens of a country over whom the flag of the country floats, when their houses and premises are searched without warrant. Now, I want to ask my friend if he would be willing, and if the chairman of this committee will, if this clause is kept in, add an amendment to the clause, "Provided, however, That all search and all investigation of private houses and private closets shall be done under legal process of law"?

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Are you willing to do that?

Mr. SAYERS. I will answer. If such should be done, Mr. Chairman, it will only advertise to the fellows that the officers are coming [laughter], and there are nine chances out of ten that the officers will never reach the house when the illicit distillery is being operated. The newspapers of the country give us, week by week, accounts in which some one has been shot down at night at his fireside with his family, and when the authorities endeavor to find out who it was that did the assassination, it is found that some man suspected of moonshining has suddenly left the country. This appropriation ought to be made, not only for the purpose of maintaining the majesty of the law, but for the purpose of relieving these sections of the deplorable consequences which always result from the illicit distillation of liquors. The House can do as it pleases. This law does not affect my constituency. Illicit whisky is not distilled there. The duty of this committee is plain; it should sustain this appropriation.

Mr. KIEFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAYERS. I will.

Mr. KIEFER. What does the gentleman understand by the statement, so many thousand gallons of beer have been destroyed?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know anything other than what is contained in the statement from which I have read. I am not acquainted with the revenue laws.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That is the mash that has not been sufficiently fermented.

Mr. KIEFER. Then it is not the beer, as we understand it, under the term of "lager beer," but is a mash?

Mr. SAYERS. I suppose not; it is the mash.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee longer. I have said all that I care to say on the subject, and if the committee should strike out the clause and leave the Internal-Revenue Office to the mercy of those who are engaged in the violation of the law it must bear the responsibility. The load will not be on my shoulders.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The gentleman from Texas has been rather severe on the State of North Carolina, and especially on two districts, the Fifth and the Eighth. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that, if the conditions are similar, his State is vastly more derelict than mine. I see from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of this year, on page 385, that while North Carolina reports and paid tax on 708,971 gallons per year, the distinguished gentleman's State only reports 4,623 gallons per year. Texas is as large as four or five North Carolinas; she is the greatest corn State of the age, and drinks more brandy than 10,000 Maines, and yet only reports 4,623 gallons per year. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SAYERS. We feed our corn; we feed it to our horses and our hogs.

Mr. LINNEY. Then where do you get the vast amount of liquor that you enjoy so much in the great State of Texas? [Great laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Has the gentleman been in Texas?

Mr. LINNEY. Many a time. I own property in that State.

Mr. SAYERS. Where?

Mr. LINNEY. In Floyd County, where there is no brandy.

Mr. SAYERS. There are not 350 voters in Floyd County.

Mr. LINNEY. You are just 600 citizens behind the times. You know as little about Floyd County as about the liquor of North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Now, let me show, Mr. Chairman, the great iniquity of this appropriation. I maintain before this intelligent body of legislators and statesmen that no fund has ever operated upon the popular mind at any time in the history of the world that has produced as much corruption, save and except that thirty pieces of silver that were connected with the wonderful treachery that we read of in sacred history, as does this $50,000 which provides for the payment of special agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like about ten minutes on this subject.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LINNEY. I want to state further, for the benefit of this Committee of the Whole and of the distinguished gentleman from Texas in particular, that while North Carolina pays out annually over $2,000,000 under the internal-revenue system in excess of what she receives by way of pensions, the gentleman's own State does not pay a tithe of that amount, so that to-day my State is feeling the weight of the Government burdens growing out of this internal-revenue system ten times more than the great State of Texas, and therefore this is a matter of ten times more interest to the people of the Eighth district and of the Fifth district of North Carolina than it is to any district in the gentleman's State.

But now, Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself to the proposition which I have already announced, that this $50,000 stands in your appropriation bill, not as a fund for the purpose of enforcing the law, but as a very dangerous corruption fund, and to show that I am correct in that statement I ask the attention of the House to page 20 of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year ended June 30, 1895. I find in that report that one B. B. Bouldin received $12,116.20 last year for his work as a spy, and on another page I find that a man by the name of Pitts received $13,504.29 for his services as a spy. Neither of those men has one-fiftieth part of the brain power which the distinguished gentleman from Texas possesses, and yet for engaging in this disreputable business they receive about four times the salary that the gentleman receives for his valuable public services.

I want to call attention to another fact, to show that this fund acts as a corruption fund. From the reports which these agents have made—not the regular officers, but these spies—it appears that in each of these States they have reported something like 3,000 violations of internal-revenue laws, and yet there have been only about 600 arrests upon the information so received, and I undertake to say that probably not one-tenth of the parties arrested upon the information of these agents are ever prosecuted and convicted. This shows, sir, that there have emanated from these special agents over 3,000 falsehoods, that 3,000 of the citizens of the State of North Carolina have been slandered by them, and that that slander had its origin in this appropriation. It was your appropriation of $50,000 that produced those slanders. It was this $50,000 that constituted the motive, the incentive, which prompted these men to make these 3,000 false and slanderous reports.

Now, sir, I ask this House if it is not infinitely better that we should have a little blockade whisky occasionally than that the Government itself should go in partnership with a force which deals in lies and gets those lies placed upon the records of this country? By encouraging these men the Government of the United States becomes a party to one of the most disreputable enterprises known to mortal man. That is why I oppose this appropriation. It is not that we in North Carolina are not in favor of the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws, because we are in favor it. If the people of North Carolina were opposed to the enforcement of the internal-revenue law you would not see $2,000,000 pouring from the pockets of those people into the Treasury annually in excess of what they receive from the Government, but you would find North Carolina dwindling down in this respect to the condition occupied by the State of the gentleman from Texas, giving a sum so meager that you must have a spyglass to see it at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised anyway that the distinguished gentleman from Texas should become the champion of the internal-revenue system in the South. [Laughter.] I will venture to say that he never made a speech in Texas in which he did not denounce the internal-revenue system. [Laughter.] If he did, he is about the only Democrat in the South that ever did so. It has been suspected that the Democracy were blowing hot and cold on this question, but they have always denied it so vigorously that sometimes it has dampened the ardor of some good Republicans in opposition to it.

But, seriously, Mr. Chairman, this appropriation ought to be stricken out. In that way you will save $50,000 a year from a fund that has never yet since it was first appropriated resulted in one good prosecution—not one. It is wrong, also, from another point of view. This matter of employing spies in a republican form of government is wrong, it is odious, it is distasteful to every honest and good citizen. Why, even the Athenians called their informers "sycophants." It has come down to us from ancient times that men whose business it was to lie around their neighbors' houses and catch the conversation going on there and twist and torture it and misuse it so as to make it the basis for a prosecution were engaged in a most disreputable business, and they were described by the disreputable term "sycophant." For one, I shall not join the army of sycophants, but I call upon this House to rise to the importance of the occasion and to strike from our statute books this fund, which simply fosters the most disreputable business that ever was encouraged by a law of the United States. I will not occupy further time.

[Mr. SWANSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I am sure that if the members of this committee could fully understand and appreciate the purpose and manner in which this money is used that this feature will go from the bill. Now, those who are opposed to the appropriation are not opposed to the enforcement of the internal-revenue law, but they are in favor of having it enforced in a high and honorable way, not through a detective agency, but by known officers of the law. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] sanctioned the suggestion by the gentleman from Kentucky, and stated that there was more profit derived to the Government from the expenditure of this money than any other known expenditure made.

I challenge that statement. There is the report of the Attorney-General, in which you will find that of all the convictions in these courts in the States named and elsewhere for infractions of the internal-revenue law, there is not 1 per cent of the fines collected, although the Government pays the expense of the entire proceedings. But, further, the gentleman will find that there is not 25 per cent of those arraigned by means of this appropriation who are ever convicted, and still the Government pays the bills.

The class of men who will get the benefit of this appropriation are leeches on the Government. They are men who come to your home, ingratiate themselves into your confidence, sit at your table, break bread with you, sleep and eat under your roof, and to-morrow, if possible, will scheme to entrap you and drag you to the court or to the prisons of the country. That is the class of men who are affected by this provision.

Why, Mr. Chairman, a few days ago one-half of the membership of this House were on their feet denouncing the inspectors of the Post-Office Department. We heard New York members say that the letter carriers of that city were hounded by men who followed them around and were not known to be Government officers. You heard later the friends of the pensioners telling you how great an outrage it was to employ detectives to go around through the country and bring charges against the pensioners with a view of depriving them of their pensions. You said that it was an outrage that ought not to be tolerated. You said it was a damnable outrage upon the people. We come to you from the South—and two-thirds of this appropriation is spent in the Southern States—we say our good people, our poor people, are hounded down by the Government sleuthhounds, who by means of frivolous prosecutions are enabled to involve our innocent citizens in illimitable trouble and enormous expense; men who know how to take advantage of the confidence of the people, of the illiteracy of many of the people, men whose living depends on their labor, men whose very names mean that we employ them to bring information for use in criminal cases, men who understand that if they do not bring the information their job is lost, while if they do bring information they will be paid for it.

It is "information or no butter." That is what it amounts to, and they will descend to any kind of villainy in order to hold on to the Government jobs that they have, at $100, $200, or $300 a month. I appeal to the members of this House, and I ask them to think well before they continue a detective agency to go up and down the length and breadth of this country for the purpose of enforcing the law. I say to you, when this Government has come to that pass that the law must be enforced through a detective agency, we have come to a bad pass indeed. Let us enforce the revenue law, but let it be done in a high-minded, honorable way, openly and aboveboard, by the known officers of the law, and not by hired spies and detectives, to follow in the tracks of every suspected citizen and drag him from his home into imprisonment and into the courts, and to compel him to incur large expenses in order that they may hold their jobs.

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I beg to say a few words more upon this subject, chiefly in answer to the very remarkable statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY]. He stated that one reason why this amendment should be adopted was that there was one man, named B. B. Bouldin, who received $12,116.28 last year as salary out of this appropriation. Now, the remarkable part about that statement is that that man did not receive a dollar, except as the mere disbursing officer of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Commissioner is required by this section, and has always been required from the time this clause was first put into an appropriation bill, probably twenty-five years ago—for it was as necessary then as it is now—to make a detailed statement to Congress of how this appropriation, which is usually, and for short, called the "fraud fund," was expended. In his report last year, on page 20, he made a statement pursuant to that provision of law showing in detail how this money was expended. The statement from which the gentleman read was headed—

Amount expended through revenue agents for fiscal year 1895.

One of those revenue agents through whom this fund was thus expended was named B. B. Bouldin. The sum of twelve thousand one hundred and odd dollars was expended through him, though he did not and could not get one dollar of it as his own. Yet the gentleman says that was paid to him in salary, which sum of $12,000 the gentleman thought was enormously more than the distinguished gentleman from Texas could or did earn in the way of salary.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. EVANS. I will yield for an inquiry.

Mr. LINNEY. What is the meaning of the last item in that column, "C. J. Fleming, $36"?

Mr. EVANS. That means that C. J. Fleming, a revenue agent, was allowed to expend, under the direction of the Commissioner, $36 in that one year for the detection of fraud, and that is all. Now, I say again that this committee will, in my judgment, commit an act of folly if it permits itself to adopt either of these amendments. I say again that no appropriation, in my judgment, yields better returns to the Government than this, not perhaps in dollars and cents coming into the Treasury, but in the prevention of frauds upon the revenue, because those who know the workings of this law know that the services required for the expenditure of this money can not be performed as well by deputy collectors, marshals, and commissioners as by special employees. This money is probably for the most part expended in cities for the detection of frauds upon the revenue; and if it be wise to detect frauds, if it be wise to have these gentlemen who represent constituencies in which there are moonshiners disturbed by their arrest, if that be wise, then we ought to insist upon this expenditure. Some of these gentlemen, I am inclined to think, are disturbed to-day by the fact that perhaps some of the members of the legislature in their districts have, under the operations of this appropriation, been detected within the last forty-eight hours in having five or six barrels of illicit spirits in their own houses. I was so informed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue this morning.

Mr. LINNEY. If the gentleman will allow me an interruption, I am satisfied that he is wrong. Will the gentleman look at page 19 of the Internal Revenue Commissioner's report? He will there find this:

There has been expended from the appropriation for salaries and expenses of revenue agents the following sums: Salaries of agents, $46,000.

Mr. EVANS. That is a very different thing. That is for the salaries of revenue agents. That has nothing to do with the $50,000 appropriated for the detection of fraud. That sum of $46,000 expended for salaries of revenue agents has nothing more to do with this item than the sum expended for the salaries of deputy collectors. It is a different work, a different service.

Now, gentlemen, I speak with some knowledge and experience upon this subject, and I say that you will, in my judgment, commit a most unwise act, an act of folly, if you sustain either of the amendments of these gentlemen.

I should like to include in my remarks an extract from the last annual report of the Commissioner, and the one the gentleman from North Carolina had before him when he spoke, explanatory of the statements I have made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let it be read.

The statement referred to by Mr. EVANS is found on page 20 of the report, and is as follows:

EXPENDITURES FOR THE DISCOVERY AND PUNISHMENT OF VIOLATORS OF LAW.

In accordance with the provisions of the act making the appropriation, the following detailed statement of expenditures for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating internal-revenue laws is submitted.

Amount expended through revenue agents for fiscal year 1895.

Name.	Amount.	Name.	Amount.
A. H. Brooks	$2,942.10	Wayne Ferguson	$3,439.53
B. B. Bouldin	12,116.28	David A. Gates	480.00
W. H. H. Bowen	1,117.20	James W. McGinnis	1,329.16
W. H. Chapman	8,578.76	A. C. McGlachlin	2,698.10
George B. Clark	1,685.96	W. L. Pitts	13,564.29
B. L. Cromwell	619.79	J. M. Tobin	152.12
T. B. Carson	372.14	M. L. Wood	56.00
H. P. Dunlap	486.20
C. J. Fleming	36.00	Total	49,673.63

RECAPITULATION.

Amount expended by revenue agents	$49,673.63
Amount expended by collectors	5.90
Amount expended for rewards	125.98
Amount expended for miscellaneous expenses	194.49
Total	50,000.00

The accounts for expenditures under this appropriation are rendered monthly, with an itemized statement, and in all cases supported by proper subvouchers duly sworn to. These accounts pass through all the accounting offices in the Treasury Department and are filed in the Register's Office.

Mr. SKINNER. When I classified myself as a Democrat I was proud to belong to the Randall school as distinguished from the Carlisle school. I never have seen any reason in the many years since Mr. Randall has been removed from the leadership of this House for changing my opinion, either in respect to the abolition of the internal revenue, or what he tried to teach the Democracy of the country, that the internal-revenue system was an infringement upon the individual and natural rights of the individual citizens of this great Government, and through the great doctrine of protection that you could not only have the natural rights of the citizen but the great blessing of American prosperity through the doctrine of protecting and fostering her every interest and industry.

Mr. Chairman, I was brought up in the school of Democracy that led me to believe that when it attained the majority this system of internal revenue, a system of spies and detectives, would be wiped from the statute books. But when it came in power the enforcement of the internal-revenue system was made more odious to the people than it was under prior Republican Administrations. Yet under the general policy of the Government, the great will of the majority, we are willing to submit to the internal-revenue law as a means of collecting revenue to support the Government and to supply the deficiency in the Treasury; but as an honest people, as law-abiding people, as the people of North Carolina have ever and anon proven themselves to be, we appeal to the American people to relieve us of the suspicion that we are dishonest, that we are scoundrels, and that we must have a detective service to enforce this branch of the public service.

If the internal-revenue laws are so odious to the vast majority of the people of this country that it has to employ special detective service to enforce them—a service that is contemptible and despicable, and a stench in the nostrils of honest men and liberty-loving citizens—then the time has come when they should be wiped from the statute books, because we want no law, whether it is in favor of this section or that section of the common country, that can not be executed by the legitimate officers of the Government that are intrusted with the power to execute this branch of the service without special detective agents. I am satisfied that so far as North Carolina is concerned the service is abused; that it is turned to political and partisan purposes for the view of helping the party that happens to have the administration of the office at the time; and besides, Mr. Chairman, you can not name any other coordinate branch of the service where you are called upon to administer the law, except perhaps when you administer pensions, where you treat the individuals and the citizens of the country in such a way as you do the people engaged in distilling—as a people who desire to avoid the execution of the law. So far as North Carolina is concerned, I repel the imputation upon the good name of her citizens. We are opposed to the internal revenue because freedom was born upon our soil and our natural inclination is to rebel against any infringement upon our natural rights, especially so when you accept as a premise that we desire to evade the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to have a vote upon this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment is to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE].

Mr. CANNON. Let it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. To strike out parts of lines 18 and 19.

Mr. CANNON. Let us see. I did not catch what that was.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CANNON. Now, a single word, and then, so far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to have a vote. I never have been particularly zealous in advocating appropriations anywhere in the public service for detective work. I have the prejudice against detectives that most people have. But, after all, it does seem, not only in the public service but elsewhere, in the enforcement of law that it takes sometimes a pretty sly man, and, I have sometimes thought, a pretty mean man under some circumstances, to detect people who were evading the law. Now, then, the whole thing is in a nutshell. You can make from 4 to 5 gallons of whisky from a bushel of corn, and the tax upon each gallon is $1.10.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is pretty thin whisky. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of the latest improvements—not diluted—from 4 to 5 gallons. It runs as high as 5 in many instances. Now, then, a bushel of corn is worth about 30 cents. The tax upon the product of a bushel of corn is, say, $4 to $5. You can see at once what the temptations are to a man who thinks that his natural rights are being curtailed in what he regards as a legitimate business. The temptation is very strong if he can, and if he is inclined to do so, to make that profit by escaping the tax. Well, for year after year this appropriation has been made. Year after year that great temptation to evade the law leads many to attempt its evasion. Now, I want to say to the gentlemen down South you have no monopoly in moonshining. Perhaps you have more of it down there——

Mr. SAYERS. You call it by another name in your country.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). But not infrequently you find people evading this law elsewhere. In the city of New York there have been seizures this year and elsewhere throughout the country.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We may have a monopoly of making it down South, but we never have been charged with a monopoly of drinking it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Well, as far as my observation has gone as to individuals, I never saw any evidence that you gentlemen were unable to get away with your share. Of course I can not speak for all, but only for the Southern gentlemen that I have had the good fortune to meet. [Laughter.] In my own State of Illinois I suppose that more of this commodity is produced than anywhere else in the United States. From the Peoria district alone I think the internal-revenue returns are up toward $20,000,000, and it is only necessary to consider the great profit there is in the business if the producer can escape taxation to see the necessity that all of the product shall pay the tax if any does. Our internal revenue is about $160,000,000, a large part of which comes from whisky.

Now, I have no doubt that there are instances, perhaps many instances, where hardship is worked and where it looks, perhaps, like oppression rather than like due enforcement of the law, but, after all, that is true all along the line. There is no system of law that does not here and there work hardship in its enforcement, and there is a great necessity, in the interest of justice as well as of revenue, that the internal-revenue laws shall be fully and equally enforced, so that I am inclined to be of the opinion, while I am not in love with this appropriation, that it would not be safe to strike it out, and if I am correct in that, neither would it be safe to adopt this amendment, which virtually strikes out the very meat of the appropriation.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman proceeds I should like to come to some agreement about closing the debate on this paragraph.

Mr. LAYTON. I want to say only a few words.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will ask consent that debate on this paragraph close in five minutes, and that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON] have leave to occupy that time.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I have just come into the Hall, and I understand that there is an amendment pending to strike out the appropriation for the employment of agents for the purpose of detecting violations of the internal-revenue laws, what is known as the secret service, connected with the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the gentleman that the Commissioner is entitled to 20 regular agents, who are paid out of a different fund.

Mr. LAYTON. Oh, yes. Of course the members of the subcommittee, of whom I had the honor to be one, are perfectly familiar with this subject and with all the facts connected with it. This appropriation has no connection with the regular officials to whom the gentleman from Virginia refers. The service for which this appropriation provides is of an entirely different character, and in this connection I want to call the attention of the law-abiding members of this House to certain facts. The testimony which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue gave before the committee was to the effect that the particular business or duties performed by these special agents could not be transacted by the regular officials of the Government. In other words, he stated that every dollar of this appropriation was necessary and could be usefully and profitably expended, and that by means of it in the past fiscal year he had been enabled to detect and locate from 1,000 to 1,100 illicit moonshine distilleries in the mountain districts of the South. It will be observed, I have no doubt, that the opposition to this appropriation comes especially from the Representatives of the mountain moonshine districts in Tennessee, in North Carolina, in Virginia, and in Georgia. [Laughter.]

Now, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue stated—I repeat it so that every member may know just what is involved here and why he is voting for or against this appropriation—that the Commissioner himself asserted that by means of the agents employed under this appropriation, by means of these detectives, these informers, if you please to call them so, he was enabled to discover, detect, and destroy from one thousand to eleven hundred illicit stills in the States I have mentioned and a few in the Northern States, which would not have been done by the regular officers. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this statement of fact is sufficient to fully meet the objections of gentlemen who represent the moonshiners of the mountain districts of North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, and Georgia. The question resolves itself into this: Whether you will permit the gradual but certain destruction of the internal-revenue system, so far as revenue from whisky is concerned by permitting these moonshiners to go on and manufacture and sell this illicit whisky, or whether they shall be suppressed by a proper enforcement of the law.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue said that in no other way than by such an appropriation as this could the result be successfully achieved. As is well understood by members of the committee and by everyone who has given the matter consideration, the regular officers of the Government to whom the gentleman on my left [Mr. SWANSON] has referred are well known in their respective localities, so that it is utterly impossible for them to detect this illicit business and the persons engaged in it, and hence it is only by employing persons who are not known to those engaged in the business that it can be ferreted out. By means of these special agents, paid from this appropriation, the Department has been enabled to discover and suppress the number of illicit distilleries I have mentioned, and the Commissioner emphatically says that it is only by such means that that work can continue to be done with any large degree of success.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TATE, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LINNEY. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 71; so the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment that I offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish food, fuel, and clothing to the native inhabitants on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, Alaska, $19,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I raise a point of order against the clause just read, being lines 12 to 15, inclusive, on page 45. I raise this point on the ground that the appropriation is not authorized by any existing law. The first appropriation of this kind was passed four years ago; and it has every year since been passed in exactly the same language, but no point of order has been raised upon it heretofore.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this point of order is not well taken. To give the history, so far as I recollect it, of this appropriation will lead me necessarily and incidentally to speak of why it was made and under what authority. Of course the Chair will take notice of the acquisition of Alaska from Russia and will also take notice of the location of these islands—St. Paul and St. George. They are the Seal Islands. The Chair will also take notice of the contract which was made with the American Fur Company, which contract resulted in the employment of the inhabitants resident upon those islands. The public history also is that as the catch decreased the means of support of these Indians diminished, that being all they had to live upon, the employment they received and the product. Perhaps this matter can be stated in fewer words if I read from the hearing of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury before the committee on this subject. It is short.

By the terms of the modus vivendi the number of seals allowed to be taken on the Seal Islands was reduced greatly, and it became necessary in consequence to provide for the support of the native inhabitants on the Seal Islands. An annual appropriation of $19,500 for this purpose has been made since 1892. Of the appropriation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, $3,325 was used to reimburse the bishop of the Greek Church for moneys collected by him as gratuities from the natives and which were redistributed to the donors by order of the Government agent in charge of the Seal Islands. This action, which was directed by the Congress, reduced the appropriation to $16,175, which was insufficient for the support of the 21 families, comprising 89 persons, on the Island of St. George, and 54 families, comprising 196 persons, on the Island of St. Paul.

I think this is the fourth or fifth annual appropriation which has been made; I believe four have already been made, and made upon information that led Congress to believe that these people would starve if the appropriation were not made. It does seem to me that a fair construction of the rule——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether any points of order were reserved against the bill when it was reported to the House?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect. The Journal will show.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk reports to the Chair that no points of order were reserved. In view of that statement, the Chair would like to hear from the gentleman making the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. When this bill was introduced the gentleman from Pennsylvania reserved points of order and an opportunity to discuss certain measures. Following that, when an agreement was about to be made for one hour's debate, I arose, and before consenting to limiting general debate to one hour I inquired of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether he would explain in his thirty minutes this paragraph, and if not I wished to reserve my right to object to the paragraph. A general understanding was had then——

The CHAIRMAN. The question which the Chair is now raising is whether any points of order were reserved against this bill when it was reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. Gentlemen about me say that no points of order were reserved, but I have no recollection on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk says that the Journal shows that no points of order were reserved.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if it should transpire that no points of order were reserved, the question then arising would be a very important one, which ought to be discussed and decided very carefully. In my opinion (in which I think I am supported by the highest parliamentary authority in this House) it does not make a particle of difference, when a bill is reported, whether points of order are reserved or not. The questions arising in connection with the bill come up one by one as the Committee of the Whole considers the particular paragraphs or subjects.

I know it has been customary to reserve points of order on an appropriation bill when reported by the committee, but it has never been held, so far as I know, that the failure to do so waives any point of order upon any given paragraph of the bill. I have no interest in this question except as a matter of parliamentary propriety.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will allow me to suggest as a fact that the Speaker, at the opening of this session, upon an inquiry of mine, held that it is necessary to reserve points of order when appropriation bills are reported. Subsequently the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] made the same inquiry in the House, and the response of the Speaker on that occasion was to the same effect.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is not my recollection of the suggestion of the Speaker; my recollection is quite the reverse.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio, if he desires to discuss the matter, that according to the understanding of the Chair the Speaker has held more than once during this session of Congress that points of order must be reserved when a bill is first reported. The Chair of course desires to make a ruling that will be in accordance with the precedents, and will be very glad to hear from any gentleman who is informed upon the subject.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the Speaker made that ruling it is, of course, the law of the House, and I would not controvert it. But I can see no philosophy, under my observation of parliamentary law, that bears out such a construction of the rule as that. The House has control over its legislation; this is the first time that it reaches the point or comes to the particular paragraph in question; the question then arises, Is that paragraph within the jurisdiction of the rules of the House? And whether the points of order were reserved upon the bill or not, that question there arises for the first time, and could not have arisen at any other point in the proceedings.

Mr. DOCKERY. I agree very fully with the gentleman from Ohio, but, as a matter of fact, the Speaker did so rule.

Mr. LACEY. Let me ask the Chairman how is a member of the House, or a member of the committee, to have an opportunity to know anything that may be contained in the bill on which he may desire to make the points of order? These bills are handed in sometimes, and very frequently, too, when the House is not full, when the members are absent, sometimes just on the point of adjournment; and in that way, perhaps, when there are not 20 members present, the chairman of the committee submits his bill, which is not read for the information of the House, but is simply ordered to be printed and go upon the Calendar; and for all the information the House has to the contrary it may be loaded down with matters that are objectionable under the rule.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is simply a vain thing and has no application. For instance, I stand here and say, "I reserve all points of order upon the bill" when it is reported. Why? Because there is presumably something in the bill that I think is not in harmony with our rules or warranted by the law. But how am I to know, when the chairman of the committee comes in and presents the bill, that anything of that character is contained in it? It sounds almost like an imputation upon him that he will bring in a bill here which contains some illegal legislation; but, acting on that assumption, I say I reserve all points of order, when the chance is that, as a matter of fact, he has done nothing but what the law allows him to do.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not undertake to say what the ruling has been on this subject. I have a very high regard for the clearness of the rulings of the Speaker of the House, and his ruling on a question of that kind would have very much weight with me. But what the law is in principle I have no doubt; and I have no doubt but that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is entirely correct as to what the rule should be and is, in principle, taken independently of what may have been the drifting course of the House.

I have frequently myself, and very many other members also, reserved points of order on appropriation bills when reported, because there has been a controversy always as to whether or not it was necessary to reserve the points of order in advance. But I have never seen any foundation or any reason for the claim that it was necessary to reserve points of order against a bill that had never been read, its contents unknown to the House, not at that time to be entered upon for consideration, no possible means by which the membership of the House should know that there was an infraction of the law in the bill, and when, on the contrary, every presumption was that it had been framed in strict accordance with the rules of the House.

I trust, therefore, the Chair will look very carefully into this matter before deciding so important a question. I do not remember that it has ever been decided directly, when the point of order was raised actually upon some provisions of the bill. Opinions have doubtless been given by the Chair at different times, or suggestions thrown out with reference to the matter, and it has been held safer to reserve the points of order. But I think it has been done more from custom and abundant caution that on any fixed principle of parliamentary law which makes it necessary to do so.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a single suggestion with reference to this matter: That the gentleman in charge of the bill will allow this clause to pass over until to-morrow morning, the point of order being reserved, and the Chair can then make inquiry into the law. It is a matter of importance.

Mr. CANNON. That will be entirely satisfactory to me after a minute or two, which I wish to devote to the question of order.

Mr. DALZELL. I would suggest that the same question will arise in a few minutes again.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; I am perfectly willing to have it out now. A single word on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide on the point of order——

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair does not desire to hear argument——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like very much to hear any gentleman who desires to be heard on the subject, although the Chair has views of his own upon this question.

Mr. CANNON. I have no desire to be heard, or to consume the time of the House for the mere purpose of talking——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair only meant to say that the Chair had views of his own, to which he will adhere unless he shall see cause to change them by reason of arguments that may be presented. But he is not so set in his views as to be entirely unwilling to be guided by gentlemen who are informed upon the question.

Mr. CANNON. Then, perchance, I had better say a single word now.

I can see a reason for the ruling that points of order must be reserved in the House. This bill is committed by the House to a Committee of the Whole House for consideration in committee, and I suppose it is the duty of the committee to consider it. Therefore if it is to be returned for consideration by the House because points of order have been made, it seems to me that the direction ought to have been given in the House, namely, that the Committee of the Whole should consider the bill and report it to the House, except as to such portions of the bill as may be subject to points of order.

Mr. GROW. Will the Chair allow me a moment?

The regular course of procedure on an appropriation bill would be first to have it read through. Every member would then know what is in the bill; and I can see that there would be propriety in the Chair holding that without that all points not reserved could not be subsequently brought up. But when, by unanimous consent, the first reading of a bill is dispensed with, how is the House to know what is in the bill except as it comes up? The committee reports it at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and calls it up the next morning when the House meets at 12 o'clock. It does not come back from the Printing Office until 12 o'clock; so that, the first reading of the bill being dispensed with, it strikes me that it is proper to make points of order as we proceed, section by section; but if the bill had been read through the first time, as of course the rules require, and no one had made any point, then I think the decision would be right that the point of order was not reserved.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, there must be some reason for a ruling such as is sought to be made here, and that reason must be based upon some philosophy of parliamentary procedure.

It may be said, and I think it has been said, that the committee can not reject, as not in order, that which the House has sent to it. That is the ground upon which the proponents of this proposition must stand, and I may say that that was the ground upon which the intimation of the Speaker was based; but I ought also to say in that connection that the present Speaker of the House, than whom there is no better parliamentary authority in the United States, said he would hear argument upon the proposition. And that was said in response to the inquiry by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Now let us see how much there is in that proposition. Has the House sent to the committee anything that is binding upon the action of the committee? And if so, what is it? It is reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and nothing is said about it. It is true that the House makes the reference of the bill.

I will turn aside right here and say that the doctrine of waiver can not apply. Nobody has waived anything, for the very first underlying principle of a waiver, in all relations of life, whether in law or anywhere else, depends upon the knowledge on the part of the party of the existence of the thing which he waives the existence of. So, therefore, the fact that the members of the House have stood by and made no objection can not have any effect. And why not? It is a vain thing to make this reservation. It is made in the House, and not in the committee. The House can not hear it, for the House has no jurisdiction. Suppose when this bill came in a point of order had been made instantly. Suppose some member had risen and said, "Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that paragraph 1 of section 2 is not in order." That question could not then be heard. There was no tribunal to try it. It was simply an utterance that was idle, because it would have no effect whatever. So nothing has been waived.

Now, what did the House send to the committee? It sent that bill to the committee, and it said: "Take that bill, subject to the rules of the House." What are the rules of the House? Why, in the first place, that we shall not consider that bill except at a time when there is a quorum of the Committee of the Whole present. You must have that as a foundation of your jurisdiction. And next, you take it subject to another rule of the House, which is that there shall be no new legislation upon that appropriation bill. That is one of the rules that is to guide you in the consideration of that bill. Can it be said that the House has, by a mere reference to the committee, purged that bill and given to these proposed enactments a quality that they did not have when they were brought in here by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

This is a matter of very considerable importance. The trouble under which we labor has been very well put by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. It is this: Just as the House is about to adjourn—as it was in this case—the chairman of the committee asks that the motion to adjourn be withdrawn just to permit him to introduce an appropriation bill. The whole membership of the House is moving to leave the Hall. Is it possible that we are in the midst of a procedure so entirely and wholly technical, that because that consent is given and no objection or reservation is made and no vain thing is done, that therefore we are bound by all the provisions of that bill? We ought to be compelled only to do things that have intelligence about them. We ought not to be compelled to do unintelligent things, and we ought not to be compelled to say there are irregularities in that bill. We ought not to be compelled to say, "I charge that there are things in that bill that violate the rules of the House," when we know nothing about it.

Suppose I should stand up now and reserve all points of order, and the distinguished chairman should turn around and say, "What is the matter with the bill? What is there in this bill subject to the point of order?" Why, I should have to say, "I have no confidence in you. I am afraid you have got something in there which should not be there." See how unintelligent the whole proceeding is. See how unreasoning it is, that because I have not seen a bill, and have had no opportunity to examine it, I must do a vain thing, an abrupt and unparliamentary thing, or else I am estopped afterwards to say that the thing is not in order.

Now, I have said this much, Mr. Chairman, out of my high regard for the propriety of the rulings in the Committee of the Whole House. I have no interest in this paragraph. I do not know what it is. I do not know what is the subject-matter; but I have always held this view and have always stood ready to occupy the position which I now do in the interest, in my judgment, of sound parliamentary law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is desirous of rendering a decision which shall——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Unless the Chair is abundantly ready to decide the question, I ask whether we might not pass over the paragraph, reserving the point until to-morrow?

The CHAIRMAN. If that is the will of the committee——

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I have no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. The same question may come up again.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, if it does, we shall have two of them.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the pleasure of the committee?

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent, if the Chair would prefer, to let the matter go over; but if the Chair is prepared to rule, I would be glad to have a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that if pressed to a decision he is ready to decide the question now, but if there is any member of the committee who desires to be heard, and time be taken up so that this matter can be brought out more clearly, the Chair would be glad to defer the decision.

Mr. GROW. The Chair might as well decide it now, as it may come up in the next section of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and should like to say a word. I believe that this question is in some doubt. It being res novo, I take it it ought to be decided in favor of the liberty of the member; that is, that the member should not be cut off for his failure to raise the point of order to the items in the bill when the bill is first brought in. Now, I believe that this appropriation should be passed; but I frankly say that I do not think any member of this House or committee ought to be deprived of his inherent right to object to any obnoxious legislation as soon as it is brought to his knowledge; and, as has been stated by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], it is impossible to take up one of these large appropriation bills and to be fully informed of all it contains without examination, and thus see if there is anything in the bill that is obnoxious to the rule. And unless the Chair feels bound by precedents, I think the decision should be in favor of the liberty of the member and substantial justice.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to make one further suggestion in regard to paragraph 2 of section 21. You will observe that it reads:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—

Drawing the distinction between an appropriation reported and one not authorized by law—unless in continuation of an appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress—

Now notice the section of the clause—

nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

There are two distinctive propositions. First, that it shall not be reported—that is, any appropriation that is not authorized by existing law. That would be a point of order against reporting the bill. Next, that a provision changing existing law shall not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if that language is not identical with the language found in section 3 of Rule XXI of the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. LACEY. I do not know how it runs in the Forty-eighth Congress. It is different in some respects to the same rule, Rule XXI, of the last Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the rules of the Forty-eighth Congress before him, and will read a few lines of section 3.

Mr. LACEY. If the Chair will read them I will compare them with the rule I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). It says:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Mr. LACEY. This is like it that far. Is that all there is?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. LACEY. Now read the balance.

The CHAIRMAN (reading):

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order unless such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, etc.

The only difference between that clause of the Forty-eighth Congress and the last Congress is the exception:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order.

The exception, however, so far as this point is concerned, is immaterial.

Mr. LACEY. So that, having passed the point of reporting, it not being in order to report matter in the bill when you did not make an exception at the time it shall not be in order in the bill itself. Then the point of order can still be made as to its existence in the bill. You can object to it when you come to the point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In determining this question, the Chair thinks it is important to take into consideration the organization and power of the Committee of the Whole, which is simply to transact such business as is referred to it by the House. Now, the House referred the bill under consideration to this committee as an entirety, with directions to consider it. The objection raised by the gentleman from North Dakota would, in effect, cause the Chair to take from the committee the consideration of part of this bill which has been committed to it by the House. The committee has the power to change or modify this bill as the members, in their wisdom, may deem wise and proper; but it is not for the Chairman, where no points of order were reserved in the House against the bill——

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota (interposing). Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed now to withdraw the point?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the Chair gets through. As the Chair was observing, the effect would be, should the Chair sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from North Dakota, to take from the consideration of the Committee of the Whole a part of this bill which has been committed to it by the House without reservation of this right to the chairman. Now, inasmuch as no points of order were made in the House and none were reserved against any of the provisions in the bill when it was committed to this Committee of the Whole, the Chair holds that the point of order of the gentleman from North Dakota should be overruled and the Committee of the Whole should be allowed to consider the bill in its entirety, as was proposed by the House when it committed the bill to the Committee of the Whole. In rendering this decision the Chair thinks he is sustained not only by the views of the present Speaker of the House, as intimated to the House in a recent instance, but also by those of Chairmen of the Committees of the Whole in preceding Congresses. In the Forty-eighth Congress this question was presented when the river and harbor bill was under consideration. In that bill, as the Chair now remembers, there was a provision for the project known as the Hennepin Canal. When the bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole the point of order was made against that provision. In that case points of order had been reserved in the House when the bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole; but the Chair held that if they had not been reserved he would have overruled the point of order and remitted the question to the committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then let me say, Mr. Chairman, that that case is no authority whatever, because the question was not before the committee. It was simply an obiter dictum of the Chairman, and that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. In the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress this question was directly considered on a parliamentary inquiry made by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Holman, and the Chair then said:

The Chair will cause to be read what is said by the compiler of the Digest in regard to the practice in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

"In a case of an appropriation reported by the Committee on Appropriations in conflict with Rule XXI, clause 3 (the language of which is identical with the corresponding rule that governs this body), and committed with a bill, it is not competent for the Committee of the Whole or its Chairman to rule it out of order because the House are presumed to have received, as in order, the report in its entirety. So far as the proposed amendments are concerned, the current of the decisions of the Committee of the Whole House have been to exclude not only an appropriation not previously authorized by law, but also independent legislation, admitting, however, limitations and provisions which are themselves in order."

In accordance with this principle, the Chairman then ruled that, inasmuch as points of order had not been reserved by the House when the bill was committed, he therefore could not entertain the point of order made.

With these precedents in view, and in accordance with the reasons given above, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, now I move to strike out lines 12, 13, 14, and 15, on page 45, and, in accordance with the agreement as to the closing of general debate, I hope that I may have a reasonable time to discuss the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I do not think I shall occupy more than fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed twenty minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations states that there are 275 of these Indians residents on the Pribilof Islands. He states that there was a contract of employment with the American Commercial Company. Mind you, the Government of the United States was not a party to that contract. These Indians are in no sense the employees of the Government. They are in no sense the pensioners of the Government. They have no claim whatever upon the Government for support. They are not, except in a very peculiar sense, natives of those islands. Those islands were uninhabited a hundred years ago. These Indians and their ancestors were brought there as laboring men for the exclusive purpose of killing and skinning fur seals, and they were given a monopoly of that business. They have that monopoly to-day. Your constituents and my constituents have no right to go to those islands and compete with those Indians for employment.

During the twenty years when the Alaska Commercial Company had a lease of the islands these Indians lived on the fat of the land. They were making at that time enormous wages for the time they were employed. According to their contracts they could make twenty or thirty dollars a day each, and did make twenty or thirty dollars a day each at times. As contradistinguished from the other Indians, they were familiarly known throughout the Alaskan and the Aleutian regions as "the rich Aleutians." They were rich. The Alaska Company, under its contract, was authorized to take a hundred thousand seals per year. As nearly as they could compute the number they took about a hundred thousand seals a year for about twenty years, and these natives—there were only a very few of them—got 40 cents apiece for killing and skinning those seals, and it took them but one month to do it. There are only 76 families; there are less than 76 able-bodied laboring men among them. About fifty or sixty men did this work. In some months they would earn and did earn $40,000. When the Alaska Company first took charge of the islands it required three months to do the job, to kill and skin a hundred thousand seals, the maximum that the company was allowed to take annually; but by improvement in methods of living, of education, of instruction, and in the health of the Indians, they were trained and kept in such condition that at the close of the twenty years' lease they could perform this task in one month. That left them eleven months of absolute idleness, during which they lived on the earnings of one month—lived extravagantly as a rule, especially for the first few months after the close of the season.

When we first commenced to appropriate money for food, fuel, and clothing for these natives there was some reason for it. The first bill was passed at the first session of the Fifty-second Congress. Coincident with the expiration of the contract of the Alaska company and when the American company took charge we had difficulty with the Canadian poachers and other robbers; and by order of the Treasury Department these natives were then forbidden to catch more than 7,500 seals per annum. As they received only 40 cents apiece, of course this regulation of the Treasury Department reduced immensely their income. They could not then earn enough in one month to support them in idleness the other eleven months of the year. There was some reason then why we should contribute toward their support, because they were forbidden by the Treasury Department to catch more than 7,500 seals per annum during the modus vivendi according to our treaty relations with the British Government. The Treasury Department forbade them to earn any more than that. But now it is different; now they are earning more. Last year the restriction was removed, and they were allowed to catch as many seals as they could find of the class that it was profitable to catch. They worked last summer for three or four months, and they found 16,000 seals of a marketable grade. Forty cents each on 16,000 skins would amount to something like $6,400—a very fair income for 76 families of Indians.

Those Indians are not destitute; they had a pretty fair income last summer. But even if they did not receive enough to support them in idleness during eleven months of the year, we must ask ourselves the question, When shall the time come when these Indians shall become self-supporting? Will it ever come? In my opinion never, so long as they are dependent exclusively upon that business. But if it be true that this business during the time it continues can not yield enough for the whole support of these Indians, is there any more reason why we should pay the hired men that are working for this company than that we should pay the hired men who go to the pineries in the winter and to the wheat fields of North Dakota in summer?

I am situated in my business in very much the same way that this American Commercial Company is in its business. That company needs a large number of hands for a short time, and finds it cheaper to get the Government to keep these men the year round than to ship laboring men up there during the season when they are required and then ship them back again. My laboring men come to me from the pineries of Minnesota, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and from the Great Lakes or from the railroads. They go into my wheat fields in August and September. I pay them for the time I employ them; and when I discharge them they go elsewhere to find employment. Those men are not allowed to go to the Aleutian Islands, because the contract with this company gives these Indians the exclusive right to that employment, which was very profitable up to 1890. I do not ask you to appropriate money to feed the men that I employ for two months of the year. I pay them good wages for two months in the year, and then when the work is done let them go. I do not ask the Government of the United States to come in year after year and support these men in idleness for ten months in order that they may be on hand when I want them for two months the next year. Yet that is exactly what the Government is doing for this company.

These people on those islands were first taken there by the Russians as slaves; they were to all intents and purposes slaves when we bought Alaska.

Mr. KIEFER. Not slaves, but serfs.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Well, serfs is perhaps the better term. Now they are as free to go or come as we are. In my judgment the monopoly which has been maintained in reference to that seal industry should be broken up. American citizens should have a right to visit every foot of soil over which the Stars and Stripes float, and to seek employment there. If my laboring men wish to go to those islands in the Bering Sea to seek employment for two or three months in the year and to earn in a luxurious season $20 or $30 a day for a few days, they should have the right to do so.

Those Indians were brought there simply for the purpose of having their labor during the short season when that labor was necessary. Until the British Government sent a squadron of war ships into the Pacific Ocean for the express purpose of following the seal herd throughout the winter and mapping their course and publishing their charts, and until our Government by submitting to the Paris arbitration stood idly by and saw those charts published, it was possible to preserve those seal herds; but after the report of the Paris Tribunal, and after the British Government published those charts showing exactly where the seal herd is in the broad Pacific every day of the winter, there was scant reason to hope for the permanency of the seal industry.

After we had failed in our contention that the seal herd was our property when 3 leagues, or at a later day 60 miles, beyond the islands, then we could not hope to recover our right of property in that seal herd while on the ocean. Every poacher and every pirate on the broad Pacific now has those charts, prepared under the direction of the British Government, and can stay right by the herd as accurately as you can stay by a flock of sheep in your pasture. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Hamlin, in giving his testimony this winter before the committee, said: "I can tell you now, within a few miles, the exact spot on the Pacific where that seal herd is in its migration toward Sitka."

Since the British Government published those charts and gave them into the hands of their poachers—since the Paris Tribunal compelled their publication and our Treasury agents reported them, it is as utterly impossible for us ever to save a remnant of that seal herd as it is for you to restore the buffalo herds on the prairies of Kansas and Illinois.

How many of these seals have we left? In 1887 there were six and a half million. Now the evidence of experts, given before the committee this winter, showed that there were only 175,000 of them left, and they doomed to extermination.

The occupation of these Indians is gone. They must sooner or later seek other employment. We have only one thirty-fifth or one thirty-seventh as many seals now as we had in 1887, and the only protection they had, namely, secrecy as to where they lived in the winter, has been removed, and you can no more save the Alaska seal herd from extermination now than you could restore the mastodon, the Irish elk, or the great auk, when God decreed the entire extermination of the species.

How long shall we go on appropriating $19,500 a year to the support of 59 families of Indians in idleness? If you want to support people in idleness, if you propose to expend the money of the Government in that way, then let us select somebody who pays taxes, who bears some of the burdens of Government, or who can bear arms. I do not want it done for my constituents in my district; I do not want it done for the labor that I employ; and I protest against having our public moneys expended in this manner to support these Indians in idleness, when they are better off and happier if they are employed like other Indians making a living—following hunting, shipping, fishing, or whatever other work they can secure.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to follow the gentleman from North Dakota in discussing the fate of the seal, except as the fate of the seal, so far as this appropriation is concerned, means either subsistence or starvation, as the case may be, for some 289 people in these two islands.

And I want to say to the gentleman that I do not understand that to be the most luxurious agricultural country in the world. If I have a correct knowledge about it, the two islands are but two rocks in that inhospitable ocean, and the only possible means of subsistence to the inhabitants of these two islands comes from the seal life.

The gentleman says that these people were taken there perhaps a hundred years ago—long before we acquired Alaska. I do not know about that. I am not informed. It is very likely that it is true, for the gentleman is usually correct in his statement of facts. But at all events these people are there—men, women, and children. They got along fairly well as long as the Alaska company, under contract with the Government, furnished medicines, cared for the sick, and paid them 40 cents for their services for each seal caught. It was not a luxurious subsistence. The gentleman says that it paid good wages for about a month in every year and supported them in idleness for the other eleven months. Now, in the name of all that is good, what else could they do, or find to do, except to be idle under the circumstances?

But, Mr. Chairman, when this company quit killing 100,000 seals a year, when the Government said, "You shall not kill a hundred thousand, but a smaller number," every reduction made in the number killed took away the subsistence of these 289 people. Then, when under the modus the company killed only 7,000 or 7,500 seals it reduced them from the fatness of the land to less fatness, for you do not get much fatness out of 7,500 seals, and the compensation of 40 cents a head for killing them, for 289 people, instead of the compensation that they got at 40 cents a head for a hundred thousand. The gentleman says this year they killed 16,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. They killed 16,000 last year.

Mr. CANNON. Last year. Well, that would be $22 per head, at 40 cents compensation, to support these 289 people. The bare statement shows that it means poverty and simple starvation for the inhabitants of these two islands.

Mr. KIEFER. Can not they be taken away from there?

Mr. CANNON. Likely they could——

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Is it not the obligation of the people who employed them to pay them and take care of them?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. My recollection is that the company is required to take care of them, as it pays the compensation fixed by the contract, namely, 40 cents a head for killing the seals. The company is required to furnish also certain fuel under a contract, I think, and once, indeed, I believe, a deficiency appropriation was made to the company for extra amount of fuel and provisions furnished that it was not bound to furnish under the contract, and but for that these people would have starved then; but it has grown worse since the Government has further limited the catch.

Now, I will give you all the information I have, except my general recollection, on the subject. We had this information in 1893. The Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary Carlisle, says in his report:

With reference to the appropriation of $19,500 for food, fuel, and clothing for the native inhabitants of the islands of St. Paul and St. George, Alaska, which has been made annually for two years past, I have to say that while the appropriations have been in excess of the sums actually expended, yet in view of an opinion of the First Comptroller—to whom this subject was to-day referred, to the effect that the appropriation is not a continuing one, and therefore can be used only for the payment of expenses incurred during the year for which the appropriation is made, the full amount appropriated for the current year would be required for the ensuing fiscal year. The suggestion made to your committee yesterday by Mr Maher, of this Department, that $10,000 would be sufficient, was upon the assumption that such an unexpended balance of the appropriation for the current year as might remain would be available during the ensuing year. It is therefore recommended that $19,500 be appropriated for the purpose stated.

Now, we did not go very fully into this matter at this time. It was looked into as fully as we could look into it when it commenced, if I recollect, in the Fiftieth or Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. The Fifty-second, I think.

Mr. CANNON. Perhaps it was the Fifty-second. Our action at that time has been followed since, so that we only gave it a casual examination this time. We asked Mr. Hamlin, Assistant Secretary—

As to the next item—

Which is this item—

I suppose it is absolutely necessary, to enable you to procure fuel and clothing for the inhabitants—$19,500?

Mr. Hamlin replied:

That is absolutely necessary. Up to 1892 or 1893 we killed anywhere from 30,000 to 100,000 seals, and the natives were paid 50 cents each. The catch in 1892 was cut down to 7,500, and the natives would starve if it were not for this assistance.

Then we asked him to write us a letter about it, giving the number of these inhabitants, and so on, and he gives the number on one island at 21 families, comprising 89 persons, and on the other, 54 families, comprising 196 persons. Now, I think the gentleman has probably correctly stated that the seals are doomed, and these people are doomed, so long as they remain there with the seals. One proposition is to kill all the seals. The law has been enacted which provides that unless we can get a modus with Great Britain and perhaps other countries—certainly Great Britain, including Canada—which will absolutely limit to the lowest amount the seals that are to be destroyed, that the whole herd is to be killed off, the killing to take place in the open sea or elsewhere. Then, indeed, the occupation of these people will be entirely gone.

My friend asks, "Are we to support them always?" I hope not; but the United States, in dealing with the Indians on this continent elsewhere than Alaska, has always, in the presence of starvation, appropriated money to support the Indians, although they could go anywhere 3,000 miles across this magnificent continent of ours. The Government has done that rather than let them starve; and in other instances are supporting, rather than fight them. Now, there are those poor people. They and their ancestors have been there for a hundred years, and the means of support provided for them has, by the action of this Government and other governments, supplemented, if you please, by accident, disappeared. They can not get away. There is no land for them to plow. There is for them neither seedtime nor harvest. Pending the solution of the question as to what is to be done with them, I shall, for one, vote for this appropriation to keep them from starving.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Lighting the Capitol: For lighting the Capitol, including the Botanic Garden, Senate and House stables, Maltby Building, and folding and storage rooms of the House of Representatives; for gas and electric lighting; pay of gas fitters, and for materials and labor for gas and electric lighting, and for general repairs, $16,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I submit the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 48, line 20, after the words "pay of," insert "superintendents of meters, lamplighters"—

Mr. CANNON. That should have been reported in that way. It is for current service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $250,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and other surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of reservations, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, and in cases of exceptional difficulties in the surveys, when the work can not be contracted for at these rates, compensation for surveys and resurveys may be made by the said commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, at rates not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $15 for township, and $12 for section lines: Provided, That in the States of California, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, and Washington, there may be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $25 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $23 for township, and $20 for section lines. And of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $15,000 may be expended for resurveys, and not exceeding $40,000 may be expended for examination of public surveys in the several surveying districts in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and for examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I should like to offer.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 52, line 4, strike out "and," after the word "Wyoming," and insert "Colorado and Utah," after "Washington."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has offered his amendment. If he yields the floor now, he will be entitled to it in the morning. If he will yield, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Very well, Mr. Chairman.

And then (on motion of Mr. CANNON) the committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1861) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens;

A bill (H. R. 4254) granting to the Duluth and North Dakota Railroad Company right of way through certain Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. 4698) to provide an American register for the steamer Matteawan;

Joint resolution (S. R. 111) to authorize Benjamin Harrison to accept certain medals presented to him while President of the United States; and Joint resolution (S. R. 114) authorizing and directing Bernard R. Green to exercise the duties and powers heretofore conferred upon the late Gen. Thomas L. Casey in relation to the construction and completion of the Library of Congress.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, a reprint of the bill H. R. 306 was ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BROSIUS, for the remainder of this week, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHNSON of California, for five days, on account of illness.

To Mr. BRUMM, for one week, on account of important business.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. EDDY, desires to have his leave of absence prolonged for another ten days, on account of serious illness in his family.

There was no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. CANNON (at 5 o'clock p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Mr. ALLEN (for Mr. THURSTON) presented a memorial of Rescue Council, No. 1, American Protective Association, of Omaha, Nebr., remonstrating against the placing of the statue of Père Marquette in Statuary Hall; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also (for Mr. THURSTON) presented a petition of Omaha Lodge, No. 31, International Association of Machinists, of Omaha, Nebr., praying for an investigation of the treatment of the employees in the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Navy-Yard and other navy-yards of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Dallas, Tex., praying for the passage of a bankruptcy law that will be just to both creditor and debtor; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GORMAN presented a petition of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in session at Roanoke, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation giving relief to the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McBRIDE presented a petition of Milwaukie Grange, No. 268, Patrons of Husbandry, of Clackamas County, Oreg., praying for the passage of House bill No. 2626, providing for the protection of agricultural staples by an export bounty; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment providing for subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission and the expenses of a commissioner, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2694) for the relief of the heirs of Lorenzo Andenino, Francisco Ronchietto, and Stanislao Vittone; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. GORDON on the 31st ultimo, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5672) to grant to railroad companies in Indian Territory additional powers to secure depot grounds, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on February 12, 1896, the amendment providing for the establishment of fish-culture stations in the Black Hills, in the State of South Dakota, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 2695) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane V. Davidson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2696) granting arrears of pension to Daniel Lucas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2697) to complete the military record of Stephen Joiner, and granting him an honorable discharge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2698) for the relief of David S. Quinn, jr., administrator of David S. Quinn, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 2699) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain lot in the District of Columbia to John H. Gause and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2700) for the relief of the heirs of certain seamen lost in the foundering of light-vessel No. 37; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAFFERY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2701) for the relief of Whitty S. Miller, administrator of Whitty M. Sasser, deceased, and Jessie W. Pollitt, administrator of Amanda Sasser, deceased, both decedents late of Rapides Parish, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLEN (for Mr. THURSTON) introduced a bill (S. 2702) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (for Mr. THURSTON) introduced a bill (S. 2704) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joshua B. Webster; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HILL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2705) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the limitations of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and of the District of Columbia"; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2706) to extend New Jersey avenue northwest from Brightwood avenue to Whitney avenue; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2707) to extend Eleventh street northwest from Florida avenue to New Jersey avenue extended; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 2708) authorizing the purchase by the United States and the making free of the toll roads passing over the Yosemite National Park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2709) for the relief of Michael Z. Hammen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 118) to prohibit the contracting of a liability or obligation on behalf of the United States in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EQUALITY OF LEGAL-TENDER MONEY.

Mr. BUTLER. I introduce a bill and ask that it be read in full for information.

The bill (S. 2703) to prevent discrimination between various kinds of legal-tender money of the United States, and to maintain the equal debt-paying and purchasing power thereof, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any note, bill, bond, draft, check, exchange, contract, mortgage, public or private obligation, or pecuniary liability, hereafter made or contracted, which may provide for its payment in a specific kind or kinds of legal-tender money of the United States, may be paid or discharged in any kind of legal-tender money of the United States current at the time of its maturity or collection, at its face value, such stipulation or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I should like to explain the bill in a few words.

By its title, it will be seen that it is a bill to maintain the equal debt-paying and purchasing power of all the legal-tender currency of the country. I see that the various State conventions which are now being held to elect delegates to the coming Republican national convention are declaring in favor of this policy and pledging their party to give the people such a currency. Both of the old parties declared that it was their policy in their last national platforms, and will probably so declare again this year. In order that we may be able to turn some promises into performances before another campaign, I hope the Committee on Finance will report this bill promptly. We shall then be able to redeem before their next national conventions are held the promises which both of the old parties made, so that they will not have to make the promises over again. The People's Party stands ready to help either party to redeem this promise, and we are ready to do it now.

The bill proposes to put a stop to the gold mortgages and gold notes that are now being taken all over the country. Every day men are forced to make contracts under dire necessity to pay their mortgages and notes in gold. The gold they can not get without buying it at a premium.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment? Does the bill propose to affect existing contracts at all?

Mr. BUTLER. It does not. The present law allows such gold notes and mortgages to be taken. Contracts have been made under this law. It is a hard bargain which men have been forced to agree to, but this bill does not propose to nullify those contracts. It proposes to make such contracts illegal in the future. The clause in the Bland-Allison Act which allows contracts to be made payable in gold only, known as the "gold exception clause," is the provision to which I refer. It is the law, but it is a bad law, and I believe it was put into that act for the benefit of the bondholder. But the money lender has used it in his private contracts, not only to the oppression of the creditor, but also to advance the price of gold in which his debt must be paid. I think that law should be repealed. Both parties have promised to do it. The opinion of the country by a large majority is opposed to continuing the present policy. The law as it now stands tends to cause a disparity between different kinds of legal-tender money. The law is a discrimination against silver and greenbacks, and also against the debtor class.

Mr. President, we can pass this bill by both Houses, if the committee will report it, and let both parties redeem one of their pledges before they go before the people again. Gold mortgages are plastered over every town and hamlet in this country. In every little town of even a thousand inhabitants every man to-day who borrows money is forced to give a gold mortgage or note. No Government should allow any such discrimination against any of its legal tender and lawful money. It is not only an injustice to the debtor class but it is a suicidal governmental policy. It is wrong. No party can defend it. Both the Democratic and Republican parties say that they are opposed to such a policy, but they have done nothing to correct it. They can correct it by passing this bill. The law as it now stands, instead of maintaining the equal debt-paying power and purchasing power of all lawful money, actually makes gold dearer. How can the Government deliberately legislate to increase the purchasing power of gold, and then insist on paying its own debts in this dear money, and force private debtors to do the same?

The money lender and the bondholder are the only people benefited by the present law; it is to the detriment of everybody else. The bill which I offer will correct this wrong.

I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance, and hope that they will report it back to the Senate at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

ALLEGED ATROCITIES IN CUBA.

Mr. CALL. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it be read and lie over under the rule until to-morrow.

The joint resolution (S. R. 119) relative to the putting to death of prisoners of war in Cuba and providing for intervention by the United States, if necessary, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the continued violations of the usages and rules of war between civilized peoples, the inhuman and brutal outrages on men, women, and children constantly reported on reasonable evidence, either authorized or permitted not only on the Cuban revolutionists, but also on citizens of the United States, in the war now carried on between the Government of Spain and the revolutionary forces organized as the Republic of Cuba, demand the immediate action by the United States of America not only for the protection of the citizens of the United States who have become residents and acquired interests in Cuba under treaties with Spain for their protection, but also under the higher considerations of the rights and interests of a common humanity and of a civilization shamed and imperiled by barbarities and cruelties known only in the darkest, most cruel, and bloody periods of human history.

Resolved, That an adequate naval force of the United States shall be immediately sent to Cuba as shall be sufficient to protect by force, if necessary, citizens of the United States from wrong and the violations of treaty obligations between Spain and the United States.

Resolved, That the President of the United States communicate to the Government of Spain these resolutions and inform that Government that the United States will forcibly intervene to protect the rights of American citizens and the interests of civilization if there shall be further occurrence of murder and outrage or the shooting or putting to death of prisoners of war in the conflict between Spain and the revolutionary forces in Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table at the request of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I understand that the joint resolution will come up to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule the joint resolution has been read the second time, and will lie upon the table. It can be reached by a motion at any time the Senator desires to move to take it up.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAKER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPHIC CABLES IN THE PACIFIC OCEAN.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That the hearings before the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to the bills S. 1316, to facilitate the construction and maintenance of telegraphic cables in the Pacific Ocean for the use of the Government in its foreign intercourse, represented by Messrs. Z. S. Spalding and Wager Swayne, and S. 876, to provide for telegraphic communication between the United States of America, the Hawaiian Islands, and Japan, and to promote commerce, represented by Messrs. James A. Scrymser and Edmund L. Baylies, be printed for the use of the Senate.

FRANCIS HALL AND JURIAH HALL.

On motion of Mr. MCMILLAN, it was Ordered, That Senate Report No. 581, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, accompanying the bill (S. 2469) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to quitclaim and release unto Francis Hall and Juriah Hall and their heirs and assigns all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the east 20 feet front by the full depth of 100 feet of lot 2, in square 496, in the city of Washington, D. C., as laid down on the original plan or plat of said city, be reprinted, together with additional papers.

REPORT ON RACING COMMISSION BILL.

On motion of Mr. McMILLAN, it was Ordered, That Senate Report No. 330, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, accompanying the bill (S. 1866) for the incorporation of associations for the improvement of the breed of horses, and to regulate the same, and to establish a racing commission, be reprinted, together with additional papers.

BOOKS FOR THE SENATE LIBRARY.

Mr. CAFFERY. I submit a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary be directed to purchase for the Senate Library the following books on international law, viz:
Bar's International Law.
Bluntschli's International Law, translated by M. C. Lardy, 1894.
Hall's International Law, 2 copies.
Halleck's International Law.
Lorimer's International Law, 2 volumes.
Wheaton's International Law, Dana's edition.
Wheaton's International Law, Lawrence's edition.
Woolsey's International Law, edition 1890.
And that the same be charged to the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask what the resolution proposes. I did not hear the first part of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that the very efficient librarian of the Senate library has stated to me that these books are frequently called for.

Mr. GRAY. They are for our library?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes; and the librarian desires to have them in the library to meet the calls of Senators.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that the law requires the resolution to be referred to the Committee on Contigent Expenses. That reference ought to be made.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It has to be made.

Mr. CAFFERY. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on March 31, 1896, approved and signed the act (S. 1179) to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by chapter 46 of the laws of 1884, relating to the appointment of officers in the Army and Navy of the United States.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the other House upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

UNSURVEYED PUBLIC LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 27th ultimo, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be directed to inquire and report such legislation, by bill or otherwise, as may be necessary to prevent the unsurveyed public lands of the United States from being approved and patented without a survey and examination, and report as to their being swamp and overflowed in the meaning of the act of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will be passed. When I introduced it I accompanied it with a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, stating that the land in the southern part of Florida, near Cape Sable and covering a considerable part of the peninsula, had been patented to the State of Florida, or approved, rather, as swamp and overflowed land and as unsurveyed land. The letter was in reply to persons who had settled or desired to settle as homesteaders on that land. It is quite obvious that under the swamp and overflowed land act of 1850 an examination and report is required before there can be any approval of public lands under that act. This is unsurveyed land, and therefore must be land that has not been examined and has not been reported upon, and that it has been selected without authority of law, to the detriment of homestead settlers who have a right to it for free homes, if it is, as they allege, not swamp and overflowed, but, on the contrary, dry land fit for cultivation.

Mr. HOAR. I have an impression that the resolution is intended and does in some way affect a controversy about land with a railroad of which I believe people from my State are the owners. I do not know anything about the merits of the controversy, at least I do not remember what it is; if I have ever heard of it I have forgotten; but the resolution proposes peremptorily to order the Committee on Public Lands to bring in a bill. Perhaps the Senator from Florida will be content to have the resolution referred to the committee. That will give the committee full jurisdiction over the subject, and if they find it is proper that some action shall be taken they will report a bill. It seems to me it is a little doubtful whether the Senate ought peremptorily to commit itself, however clear may be the doctrine, in advance of an examination by the committee. I therefore suggest that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts give some reason why when it is reported here officially from a Department of the Government that they have patented or propose to patent lands unsurveyed under the swamp and overflowed land grant act——

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator say that the Department have patented the lands?

Mr. CALL. I understand that they have either approved or patented the land; and when it is evident that it is done without authority of law (because it is a self-evident proposition that no land unsurveyed can be approved under that grant), why should not this action be taken? The grant requires that the field notes of the survey shall be taken, and there being no survey, there can be no rightful approval of the land as swamp and overflowed. Neither can there be any examination or selection of land as swamp and overflowed and unfit for cultivation under an act of Congress that requires the greater part of each 40 acres to be so swamp and overflowed as to be thereby rendered unfit for cultivation.

The resolution proposes to direct the committee to inquire whether that is true or not, and to report by bill or otherwise such legislation as may be necessary. It seems to me that there is no reason, because a railroad company may have some claim to land, why it should not be investigated, and if the claim is not right why that should not be deferred in favor of the homestead settlers. I think there is no reason why the resolution should not be passed.

It is entirely evident that great wrongs have been inflicted on the people of the United States, and especially on the people of Florida, in the nullification of the homestead laws as to the public land, and depriving the people of Florida of their right to free homes, and approving the homesteads of the people to individuals, railroad corporations and their agents, who have grown rich on the labor of the people wrongfully forced from them.

Mr. HOAR. The stronger the reason for having the resolution passed, the stronger the reason, it seems to me, for sending it to the committee without tying their hands. Here is a Department of the Government, as the Senator from Florida says, which has come to the conclusion that it is proper and right and lawful to patent certain lands without a survey and examination. Whether that is true of course I have no information except what I derive from the Senator from Florida; but if they have come to that conclusion there must be some reason for it. Whether it is a good reason or a bad one, there must be some reason for it. Now, it is proposed that the Senate shall come in and commit itself absolutely. If we were to pass a bill it would have three several readings and hearings. It seems to me that as there is no member of the Committee on Public Lands present on our side of the Chamber—the chairman is absent, certainly—the proper course to pursue is to send the resolution to the committee, and if a grievance exists, the stronger the grievance the more absolutely certain the committee will be to act upon and deal with the subject.

Mr. CALL. Does not the resolution send it to the committee?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the honorable Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] on the left of the Senator from Florida is likely to be silent or inactive or indifferent if there is anything wrong being done with the public lands of the country. My only suggestion is in favor of orderly proceeding. I do not think that resolutions in the morning hour, which are not expected to be debated, ought to assert principles of legislation and bind and tie up committees in advance.

I have not investigated this matter. I do not know what the reason is. The Senator says the resolution is to condemn in substance the action of some Department. I do not mean to say that he uses that term, but he says that the Department has done something which is clearly illegal. That I know nothing about. I only suggest to the Senator that, instead of making the Committee on Public Lands absolutely bound to report a bill of a certain character, they be directed to inquire whether such a bill is necessary, and if necessary, then to report it.

Mr. CALL. That is just what the resolution does.

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. CALL. It directs them to inquire and report. If they inquire and find there is no reason for it in their opinion, they will so report.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand the resolution.

Mr. CALL. That is the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. CALL. It is a self-evident proposition, it seems to me, that if the Interior Department is approving and patenting lands unsurveyed, as to the character of which they can have no proper information, if they are approving land of that description——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me a moment? If he understands the resolution as he states it, and will put in before the words "may" the words "in their judgment," so as to read "report such legislation, by bill or otherwise, as may in their judgment be necessary," I will consent to the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Very well. I have no objection to that, because it does not make a particle of difference in the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. It will save the whole trouble.

Mr. CALL. But I wish to say a word more. A great part of the area of the State of Florida has been taken away from the settlers upon the public lands of the United States who have, by law, a right to them. We should not be so considerate of the claims of the nonresident people in the shape of corporations as to deprive the people who are to live and labor on this land of their right under the law. The Interior Department should not be allowed to approve and patent land that is obviously not within the terms of the act and which they are prohibited from doing. This is a subject which should have the attention of Congress. Nothing can be more oppressive to the people than to allow the public land to be unlawfully approved in great bodies to individuals and land speculators, agents, and corporations.

I have not drawn the resolution with a view of censuring or affecting any corporation, but I have a letter from settlers who in that far region of the South, away down upon the coast near Cape Sable, desire to make a home there, and they are making application for the land and stating that it is high and dry land and suitable for settlement, and they are informed from the Interior Department that without a survey and without examination it has been approved as swamp and overflowed land under the selection of some agent or other. That is the whole of it, and I was further informed by an official letter from the Department some months ago that there was an agreement to approve nearly the whole peninsula of Florida, under the name of the Everglades, by its exterior lines and without an interior survey or examination, to the State, and that would be to railroad corporations and would cover the whole area with a denial of the right to free homes.

Mr. HOAR. If any citizens of the United States, wherever they dwell, or any corporation composed of citizens of the United States, have got hold of, or are trying to get hold of, any land they ought not to get and have not a title to, of course they ought to be stopped, and it is the business of the Department to do it; and if the Department does not do it, it is the business of Congress to see that the proper legislation is enacted. There is no objection to that. What I do object to is the coming in and taking of those things for granted and having the Senate order legislation before the committee have inquired into the facts or into the necessity for it; but if the Senator now consents to the amendment that they shall report such legislation as in their judgment may be necessary, I have not anything further to say.

Mr. CALL. I only wish to say before the subject passes away that I have been protesting year after year against this deprival by the action of the Department of the people of the United States of their right to free homes, secured to them under the acts of Congress. I state that there has been a vast portion of the State of Florida that has been approved under the swamp and overflowed land grant act which is as high and dry as the top of this building, and that under this action of the Interior Department free homes have been and are to-day denied to a large portion of the people who are endeavoring to obtain them, who have a right under the law to have them, and that it has been and is now the imperative duty of Congress to examine into this subject and to see that the Department executes the law as Congress makes it. This is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I do not know exactly the purpose of the present resolution. I have not been consulted with reference to it, and I did not suppose it would be called up in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, at whose request it went over the day it was first introduced. I can only say that the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am a member, has always been disposed to protect the actual settlers and to see that they have their proper rights upon the public lands. Those who have already settled upon them and those who desire to make entries and establish their homes there have no better friend than myself. Since I have been in the Senate, and even before, I have endeavored to secure fair and just treatment for them, and I have done so as a Senator, as an individual, and as a member of that committee. Their interests are safe in the committee, and if the resolution is referred there for examination it will receive all proper attention and consideration.

I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is but little difference between passing the resolution and referring it to the committee, but I hope that motion will not be agreed to, as the resolution simply proposes, and the Senator from Massachusetts has agreed to it, that the committee shall be directed to inquire and report. After what I have said I hope it will not be referred, but that the Senate will direct this inquiry, because we have an official statement from the Interior Department, upon the application of a settler for a homestead upon the public lands of the United States, that it has been approved under the swamp and overflowed land-grant act, without an examination and without a survey, and that is a sufficient reason for directing the committee to inquire and report. I do not see why there should always be opposition made to resolutions of this kind, which only seek to affirm and protect the right of the people to their free homes on the public lands.

I have no criticism to make upon my colleague or upon the Committee on Public Lands. I state facts which are contained in the records of the Interior Department and of Congress. I state here that the people of Florida and the people of the United States who may emigrate there are to-day deprived of homes upon more than two-thirds of the area of public land, the greater part of which is as high and dry as the roof of this Capitol, under an unlawful selection of the land as swamp and overflowed, each 40 acres of which is required to have the greater part of it so "swamp and overflowed as to be thereby rendered unfit for cultivation, and in the further condition that the land should be sold and the proceeds applied to its reclamation by the construction of the levees and ditches necessary to make it dry and fit for cultivation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], and withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], and for the present withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and not knowing how he would vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. Not seeing him in the Chamber, I will withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. MANTLE. I have a general pair on political questions with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I will vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire whether the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with that Senator and withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORDON. Has the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with that Senator and withhold my vote.

Mr. GEORGE. I have a right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—28.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. MORGAN. I give notice that on next Tuesday at the conclusion of the routine morning business I shall call up a resolution which I submitted on the 9th of March and which has been lying upon the table, proposing to instruct the Committee on Pacific Railroads. I desire to discuss the proposed instructions on that day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 55) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near Big Oyster Bed Shoal, New Jersey; and

A bill (H. R. 6408) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboeler, and John R. Scott.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 494) constituting Stamford, Conn., a subport of entry.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6425) for the relief of Clifton R. Anderson; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 159) to authorize the Secretary of War to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Portland, Me.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the compilation of all the annual, special, and veto messages, proclamations, and inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to March 4, 1897; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 1861) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens;

A bill (H. R. 4254) granting to the Duluth and North Dakota Railroad Company right of way through certain Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. 4698) to provide an American register for the steamer Matteawan;

A joint resolution (S. R. 111) to authorize Benjamin Harrison to accept certain medals presented to him while President of the United States; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 114) authorizing and directing Bernard R. Green to exercise the duties and powers heretofore conferred upon the late Gen. Thomas L. Casey in relation to the construction and completion of the Library of Congress.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I had reached this point yesterday evening when I surrendered the floor. One of the main points relied upon by the advocates of Mr. Du Pont's right to a seat in the Senate is that the speaker as speaker can not exercise the office of governor after the expiration of his legislative term.

EXPIRATION OF THE LEGISLATIVE OFFICE.

Our opponents make another objection which they seem to think formidable—another incongruity. It is that the office of representative in Delaware always expires and the office of senator may expire before the time when the powers of a speaker exercising the office of governor will terminate.

They argue that as the speaker must be a member of the house over which he presides, that when his membership ceases he must cease to be speaker, and as he must, in case of the speaker of the house, always exercise the office of governor after he ceases to be a member, therefore the constitution could not mean what it plainly says—that he "shall" exercise the office of governor all the way through as speaker; and therefore our construction of the constitution must be wrong.

I take the case of the speaker of the house being most favorable to the other side, as his membership in the house always expires before the termination of his exercise of the office of governor, as the basis of the answer I shall make.

The members of the house are elected for two years from the first Tuesday in November of the even-numbered years—as 1892, 1894, 1896. Hence their term of office always expires in two years from that date. This date necessarily precedes the expiration of the governor's term at least two and one-half months, his term only expiring on the third Tuesday of the succeeding January.

I agree that the office of speaker of the senate also terminates at the same time, for that is the end of that legislature.

I make freely on this point all the admissions required by the other side, and they are all required by the constitution of Delaware.

This construction of the constitution of Delaware, admitted on both sides, fixes this situation as the true one and the one before the framers of the constitution of Delaware. That the vacancy in the office of governor, which causes a devolution on either speaker, must occur during the terms of the speakers, viz, prior to the first Tuesday in November in the even-numbered years. If it occurred after that time, and before the first Tuesday in January succeeding, when the legislature meets and elects new speakers, then there would be no speaker of either house during this interim, and under the fourth clause of the said section 14 the exercise of executive authority would go to the secretary of state, there being no other person who under the provisions of the constitution can exercise that office.

So that, and this must be remembered, when the framers of the constitution provided for the devolution of the exercise of the duties of the office of governor on the speaker of either house they knew that the office of speaker of the house would cease in all cases, and might cease in every case as to the speaker of the senate, at least two and one-half months prior to the third Tuesday of January, when such duties must cease. The same thing is true with reference to the membership of these speakers in their respective houses.

When, therefore, they said the speaker shall exercise the office of governor at a time when his office as speaker would otherwise cease, they ordained necessarily that his office should not then cease; otherwise they made a command which could not be obeyed.

I have already shown, and shown conclusively, that during all this time of such exercise that the speaker is and remains speaker, at least as to the exercise of the command of the constitution that the speaker shall exercise the office till a new governor is qualified. I have not made this proof with reference to the office of senator or representative. I admit, if it will gratify the Senator from Oregon, that I can not make it. And I admit further that if it be necessary to make out so much of our case as depends on the construction we place on section 14, that the speaker is not governor, but exercises the office of governor as a superadded power and duty imposed on him, that I show he remains senator or representative after the expiration of his term as such, I have failed on that point. I admit that it is of the essence of a free representative government (and it can not be free unless it be representative) that the periods which the people in their organic law have fixed for the return to them for a new selection of the political power they have granted to their representatives are so essential to free government that these periods can not be changed by mere inference and argument, but only by clear and unmistakable language. We can have substitutes—provisional and ad interim selections for executive and judicial officers, but none for senators and representatives. These have been selected by the people to stand for them, to act for them, and under a responsibility that comes from a return of their power at stated periods to the people themselves. They are entitled to representatives chosen by them, who are to stand for them at all times as active, living agents, whose commissions can neither be enlarged nor diminished nor suspended.

I find nothing in the constitution of Delaware which changes or modifies this in the least. But I find in this constitution ample provision to retain the old regular representative system with full senators and representatives all through the time that the speaker of either house is exercising the office of governor.

It must be borne in mind that there is no provision in the constitution of Delaware which requires the speaker of either house to be a member of the body over which he is chosen to preside. Notwithstanding he is an officer under the State of Delaware, and all officers are prohibited from being a senator or representative, I have admitted, and do now admit, that he may be selected from the members. I am also willing to admit that he has always been so selected in Delaware; and except where the constitution has provided a speaker or presiding officer for a legislative house, I admit that he has always been so selected from the members in every State in the Union. But why, when there is no provision in the constitution regarding it? The only answer is, that by the common, unwritten parliamentary law the selection should be made from the members of the house over which he presides. This law, however strong it may be, however binding it may be on each house separately, in electing a speaker is not beyond constitutional or legislative control. This is seen in those States where a lieutenant-governor is made the presiding officer of the senate. This is a total abrogation of that rule as to that branch of the legislature in those States. If the constitution can abrogate the rule wholly, as all must admit it may, it is equally clear it may abrogate it partially, and in any particular instance.

It has been abrogated partially in Delaware by express constitutional provision. The constitution commands that the speaker shall exercise the office of governor, as speaker, as I have shown, beyond his regular term as a senator or representative. This must mean either that the term of the senator or representative is also extended with that of the speaker or that the speaker, as to that duty, that exercise, remains speaker till the exercise is finished, though he may cease to be a member.

I have shown that the first alternative is not allowable. It follows that the second is the true one. A constitution never commands the doing of a thing and at the same time annexes conditions to the doing which renders performance impossible.

This common law parliamentary rule, like every other rule of the common law, may be repealed by legislative action. It would not alter the constitution of that State as expressed in section 14, if in pursuance of an act of the legislature the houses should select as speakers persons not members. The being a member is not a constitutional qualification for being speaker, but a mere common-law regulation, which must yield to the constitution making provisions contrary to it, as in the case of a lieutenant-governor made the presiding officer of a senate.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The importance of this contest is such that I feel compelled to add yet another argument, based on another provision of the constitution, to remove the slightest doubt, if any yet remain, as to the true character in which the speaker of the senate, or of the house, acts in exercising the executive authority of the State of Delaware.

The provision of the constitution referred to is section 5 of Article II, and is in these words:

> Each House shall choose its speaker and other officers; and also each house whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor may choose a speaker pro tempore.

This section, as to the speaker and the other officers, is mandatory. It commands the house to choose a speaker. It ought to have stopped here, as the Constitution of the United States does in case of the Speakership of the House of Representatives, if the framers of the constitution of Delaware were content to leave the power to choose a speaker pro tempore where it rests in parliamentary law—namely, in the absence of the speaker, either voluntary, or caused by disability or otherwise, for it is an essential and inherent power in a legislative body authorized to choose its speaker to do these two things—

First. To remove the speaker for just cause, to be judged of by them.

Second. To choose a speaker pro tempore in the absence of the speaker, however occasioned.

I suppose I ought to read from authorities on that last point, and I read from Cushing's Parliamentary Law, page 121, chapter 2, as follows:

> The power to choose one of their own members a temporary presiding officer, in case of the absence or other disability of the officer designated, though expressly given in most instances, is a necessary incident to a parliamentary assembly in this country, and would be considered as given unless expressly withheld.

So that it was wholly unnecessary to add this power, as was done by the words, "and also each house whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor may choose a speaker pro tempore,"—"may" being used simply in the sense of conferring a power upon the house—if the power to elect a pro tempore speaker was intended to be given only when the speaker was absent, whatever might be the cause of such absence, whether voluntary or enforced.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator states, what we all admit, that even in the absence of any express power given in a constitution this power to elect one of their own number exists under general parliamentary rules. That being so, does it not strike the Senator that the very fact that they inserted such a clause in this constitution indicates that it was the intention of the constitutional convention to make the clause, as I think it is, mandatory?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And that the word "may" there should be construed as "shall."

Mr. GEORGE. My friend now, as throughout this whole debate, has insisted on using or constructing the English language as employed in the constitution of Delaware in a directly contrary sense from that which it ordinarily has. I will answer the Senator on that point, and it is part of my argument:

But there was no power to elect a speaker pro tempore, outside of or without this clause, when other and independent powers not relating to presiding in the house were conferred on the speaker. It existed only in his absence. The power existed to elect a full regular speaker whenever the office was vacant. So this was the situation confronting the framers of the constitution of Delaware. If we make the office of speaker vacant when he exercises the executive authority, then no further authority is needed, for it is already conferred under the first clause, "each house shall elect its speaker." That power is just as full when he vacates it by going into the office of governor as when he vacates it by death or resignation. There is no speaker. The language of the constitution and the power conferred by the constitution is in full operation.

If we intend—I am now speaking of the situation which presented itself to the framers of the constitution of Delaware—that such exercise of executive authority shall not vacate the speaker's office, then further power is needed, unless we intend that there shall be no choosing of a speaker pro tempore except when and as often as the speaker shall be absent.

So in this situation, determining, as they did, not only in section 14, on which I have so fully commented, but in this very section, that there shall be no vacancy in the office of speaker when in the exercise of executive authority, they confer this power to elect a speaker pro tempore in a new casus, wherein it did not exist before—namely, when the speaker was in the exercise of executive authority. This power was conferred so that it may be exerted at any moment after the commencement of such exercise of the executive authority. Whether the speaker was absent or present, it made no difference as to the exercise of the power. When the choosing was made this pro tempore speaker presided or not as the regular speaker might be absent or present, just as the President pro tempore of this body presides.

This reasoning establishes beyond controversy, as I respectfully submit, that the office of speaker was not vacated by his exercise of the executive authority, and also shows the true reason for the power given—not the duty imposed—to choose a speaker pro tempore.

It equally establishes that there was no suspension of the speaker from his office as speaker during such exercise. If the suspension took place at all it continued, as the advocates of Mr. Du Pont contend, till the end of his exercise of the executive power. This is exactly in plain English equivalent to a provision that he shall not exercise the office of speaker or any part of it till the end of his exercise of the executive authority. I have shown already that the speaker's office always ends, without exception, at the very moment of the termination of this exercise of the office of governor. Not one jot or tittle of it either in power or in name ever extends beyond that moment.

So that if on his entry on such exercise he was suspended from the office of speaker, or, in plainer English, he lost the power to fill the office or to exercise the office, he necessarily remained in that condition till the end of his exercise of the executive authority. A suspension from office or its equivalent, a loss of power to exercise an office, which must necessarily continue till the end, the full and complete end, of the term of the officer, is neither more nor less than, nor in the slightest degree different from, a full and complete vacancy in the office. Recollect, I admit that the so-called suspension or loss of power to execute the office must, not merely may, extend through the whole term. If there be a contingent remainder in the exercise of the office, or a possibility that the alleged suspended speaker may, in any event provided for in the constitution, go back to the office and hold it as of his old term, I do not make out suspension to be equivalent to vacating the office. There is in fact no such remainder, no such possibility.

He can not resign the exercise of the office of governor, because the constitution says: "The speaker of the senate (or of the house) shall exercise it till the elected governor is qualified." As I have demonstrated over and over again in this argument, he exercises this office as speaker and in no other way. He can resign the speakership or be removed from it, as the first clause of section 14 says he may, and thus create a further vacancy in the office of governor; but having so resigned or having been so removed from the speakership, his whole office of speaker is gone; there is left no contingent remainder in it for him.

But I should add a statement to prove what I have already said—that this very section 5 of Article II, providing for the election of a speaker pro tempore, asserts in the plainest terms that the speaker exercising the office of governor exercises it in his character as speaker. The language is, "And also each house whose speaker shall exercise the office of governor may choose a speaker pro tempore." Here again we have a direct and unequivocal assertion that the speaker, as such, exercises the office of governor. This choosing of a speaker pro tempore manifestly can never take place simultaneously with the beginning of such exercise nor prior thereto. It must take place afterwards if at all, and as the legislature is in session but for a small portion of the term of a speaker, the choosing may be many months after the entering of the speaker on such exercise, yet the plain meaning of the section is: That the choosing shall be only when the speaker shall exercise the office of governor.

This is but a repetition of all the statements of the constitution on that subject—that it is the speaker and no one else who exercises the executive authority all along through the whole period of such exercise. Recollect, now, we are considering a case of vacating the office or suspending the officer by implication and inference, and not a case of an express declaration that the office shall be vacated, as in the Pennsylvania constitution, nor a case of express suspension of the officer, as in case of the constitution of Maine. Of course, when the constitution says expressly one or the other, the constitution must be obeyed, just as much as when it says the speaker shall exercise the office of governor. But when it is argued, as here, that such must be the result—from provisions of the constitution in relation to the office, arising from an alleged incongruity of such provisions with the idea of a full office—then we may argue, as I have done here, that no such incongruity exists, and that the meaning of the constitution is directly the reverse. And I may add here that it is impossible to conceive that the framers of the constitution meant either total vacation of the office or suspension of the officer, since they refused to say either.

This ends what I have to say on the true meaning of clause 1 in section 14, Article III, of the constitution of Delaware, wherein it is provided that "upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified." I have demonstrated that this speaker, by the plain words used, as above quoted, exercises that office, as he is therein commanded to do, as speaker, in that character alone; that this exercise in that character was imposed on him in the beginning and remained with and on him from that moment to the end of such service, with his powers as speaker unimpaired and unaffected. And further, that his powers as senator were likewise unaffected as long as his term of senator was unexpired, and that as Mr. Watson's term either as speaker or senator had not expired on the 9th day of May, 1895, when he voted for Senator, that such vote was legal and valid in all respects whatsoever.

I add as fully sustaining this view certain authorities, which are conclusive on the subject:

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me at this point?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In order to test the validity of the Senator's argument, as I think it has a bearing upon the question, I would inquire of the Senator whether, in his judgment, Mr. Watson, while exercising the office of governor, could be impeached as governor? The constitution of Delaware provides that the governor of the State may be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, as I believe it reads. Could he, in the event of his being guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors, be impeached by the house of representatives, and could he be tried by the senate of the State of Delaware on that charge?

Mr. GEORGE. The answer is very plain. Under the constitution of Delaware all civil officers are liable to impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors. The speaker of the senate is a civil officer under the constitution of Delaware, as I demonstrated yesterday. Those executive functions having been annexed to him, imposed on him by the constitution of Delaware, they became his duties and his functions as speaker of the senate, and he could be impeached as speaker of the senate for high crimes and misdemeanors in his office in not discharging those extra duties imposed on him under this clause of the constitution. That is my answer.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. He could not be impeached, then, I understand, as governor, according to the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GEORGE. If they were to impeach him as governor they would use a misnomer, but they could impeach him as president of the senate exercising the office of governor and allege as the cause for the impeachment that it was a part of the exercise of the office of governor to do so and so, and that he did not do it, or that he did it wrongfully and falsely.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is another question. Suppose while exercising the office of governor he commits a high crime and misdemeanor after the time for which his term as speaker would run: can he then be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, and would he then be impeached as governor or as speaker of the senate, although his term as speaker had expired?

Mr. GEORGE. I have proven, if any faith can be put in human reasoning, that he remains speaker of the senate notwithstanding the expiration of his term as senator and his original term as speaker of the senate, up to and including the very last moment of the exercise of the executive authority.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi has charged me pretty distinctly several times in his argument with interpolating and striking out——

Mr. GEORGE. Obliteration and interpolation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. With obliteration and interpolation. The Senator then is forced to the conclusion which he maintains here by being compelled to insist that this clause of the constitution imposing upon the speaker of the senate the duties of governor extends the term of the speaker?

Mr. GEORGE. I have argued that, and for the very plain and manifest reason that it is impossible, under the constitution of Delaware, for the end of the speaker's service under clause 14 ever to be prior to the qualification of the governor in January. So the framers of the constitution, knowing that his office as senator and speaker would expire in November, commanded him as such officer to exercise those powers until the third Tuesday in January, and they necessarily conferred upon him the power to exercise the duty imposed on him. The constitution says so.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator's argument compels him to that position, namely, that notwithstanding, in my judgment, there is nothing in the constitution of Delaware to warrant it, the term, the tenure of the office of senator or of speaker of the senate, at least——

Mr. GEORGE. Only of speaker——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is extended.

Mr. GRAY. There is nothing in the constitution——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In other words, it extends the office of speaker beyond the time for which he was elected speaker and after the time of the expiration of his term as senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I am under no compulsion in this case except the compulsion to get at the true meaning of the constitution of Delaware. The answer to all that my friend says is found in the first clause of section 14:

> Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

That is never before the third Tuesday in January succeeding the November in which he may go out of office, or must go out of office, as speaker.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I simply wanted to have that position made plain.

Mr. GEORGE. Let it be understood. I am not here, as I fear my friend from Oregon is, to construe this constitution according to an ideal which I have framed in my mind as the proper mode of framing a constitution. I am here to ascertain what the people of Delaware did when they framed their constitution; and if they have put incongruities and inconsistencies into it, it was within their constitutional power to do so.

Mr. President, I said I would read some authorities. The people of Delaware were originally a part of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator means that the people of Pennsylvania were originally a part of the State of Delaware.

Mr. GEORGE. Have it that way. They were both under the same government. William Penn gave those three counties in Delaware—Newcastle, Kent, and Sussex, I believe—the privilege of establishing a separate and independent government, with a legislature, which was called "the government of the three counties of Sussex, Kent, and Newcastle." So there was a sort of kinship, a community of ideas and feelings, between the people of the two States, and it is found in the framing of that constitution. I wish to show how they went together. The first thing I will read here is simply to show that the one constitution was copied from the other, and that the great statesmen of those two States thought in the same channels and in the same words.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What is the date of the constitution from which the Senator is about to read?

Mr. GEORGE. The constitution of Pennsylvania of 1838, which was seven years after the constitution of Delaware was framed.

Each house shall choose its speaker and other officers; and the senate shall also choose its speaker pro tempore when the speaker shall exercise the office of governor.

They said "shall." There is a little difference. They "shall" choose a speaker pro tempore. The people of Delaware said "may." That shows they were running along in the same language.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. They used a different word which meant the same.

Mr. GEORGE. It is the same language except in that respect, and they reached a different conclusion.

The Pennsylvania people wanted to make their legislature elect their speaker pro tempore, and the people of Delaware did not want to have that thing. They merely gave them the power.

The Senator from Oregon seems to think it such a great outrage, such a great anomaly, for the speaker of the senate of Delaware to exercise the office of governor and at the same time to preside in the senate. How many members compose the senate of Delaware? Not so many as compose some of the committees of the United States Senate. So that his duty in presiding over the senate would not much more interfere with his business than being chairman of one of our committees would interfere with being a Senator in this body. It is a very small body. There are nine members. The legislature of the State ordinarily sits—how long?

Mr. GRAY. Three months.

Mr. GEORGE. Three months every two years, one and one-half months a year.

Then right here, to show that the States have a right to do as they please about it, I will state that the constitution of Rhode Island makes the governor the presiding officer of the senate or council, and then the old constitutions to which I referred yesterday, that is, those quoted from by Mr. Madison in the forty-seventh number of the Federalist, made their governor not only presiding officer of the senate, but one of them also made him judge of the supreme court of the State. All those things are very incongruous. All those things are very much against the idea which my friend from Oregon, the ideal, not the idea, which he has fixed in his own mind as the one by which all constitutions ought to be framed.

Here is another provision. I believe it is in exactly the same words as the constitution of Delaware:

No member of Congress, or person holding any office under the United States or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

I believe that is verbatim.

Then I come down to section 14. It seems they have the same sections meaning the same thing. Section 5 here is the same as section 5 in the constitution of Delaware. Here is section 14, which is the same as the section we have been commenting on so long, conferring powers upon the speaker:

In case of the death or resignation of the governor, or his removal from office, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be duly qualified.

It is the same thing exactly, and yet, as I showed to the Senate yesterday, when Governor Johnson, one of the most distinguished men in this country, was speaker of the senate and exercised the office of governor of Pennsylvania, under that clause he felt it his duty to resign his office of senator and his office of speaker of the senate before he took upon himself the newly elected office of governor, never assuming or aspiring to be governor until he took it under the election by the people. The people of Pennsylvania somehow or other did not like the way that thing worked.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. About when did Mr. Johnson resign?

Mr. GEORGE. He was elected in 1848, and served in 1848 as speaker of the house. I remember it very well.

Mr. BROWN. In 1849.

Mr. GEORGE. In 1849.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Did Mr. Johnston resign his speakership and senatorship prior to the time when he ceased to exercise the office of governor?

Mr. GEORGE. I think he was to go into the office of governor on the 15th.

Mr. BROWN. On the 17th.

Mr. GEORGE. Or the 17th, and he resigned on the 13th.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What I want to get at is whether, as a matter of fact—my impression is it is a fact—he continued to exercise the office of governor, to which he had succeeded by reason of being speaker of the senate, after he resigned the speakership.

Mr. GEORGE. He might have thought he had a right to do it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If he did, that is rather a little antagonistic to the argument of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know about that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Because then, according to the concession of the Senator, he could not exercise the office of speaker if he ceased to be speaker.

Mr. GEORGE. He could not resign the office of speaker if he ceased to be speaker either.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It seems to me it is authority in our favor.

Mr. GEORGE. He could not resign the office of speaker if, as the Senator contends, he had vacated both of them. He would have nothing to resign.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Mississippi will allow me. It does not militate from the force of the precedent that the Senator from Mississippi cited yesterday from Pennsylvania that Governor-elect Johnston resigned his position as speaker of the senate and afterwards as senator on the 13th in preparation for his inauguration as governor-elect on January 17, four days prior thereto. The point of that precedent is that undoubtedly within the contemplation of the legislature of Pennsylvania and probably of all its people he continued to be senator, by that showing, and speaker, notwithstanding his exercise of the office of governor. Whether or not by his resignation of the office of speaker and senator there was an interregnum in which there was no governor does not at all affect the argument of the Senator. There may have been.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Mississippi will allow me to answer the Senator from Delaware. It affects the question which is the real one we are reaching at as to whether the governorship or the exercise of the office of governor is connected with the speakership in the opinion of Mr. Johnston. He is cited merely as an authority to show that it was one and the same; that they are exercised together. He resigned as speaker on the 13th, which was Saturday, and he resigned as senator on the same day, but continued in the office of governor——

Mr. GRAY. It does not say so.

Mr. BROWN. Exercising that office——

Mr. GRAY. There is nothing to show it.

Mr. BROWN. Until the 17th.

Mr. GRAY. There is nothing to show that he did.

Mr. BROWN. Very well. If the Senator will refer to the authority from which he has clipped that extract, he will see that there is. On the 16th he still remained as governor.

Mr. GEORGE. The answer to that is all very plain. He only tendered his resignation on the day fixed, and it was not complete until it was accepted by the senate, to whom it was addressed.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will allow me, I think if he will examine the record of the journal from which that must have been taken, he will see that his resignation was accepted on the 13th. He continued as governor for the other four days.

Mr. GRAY. Then there was no vacancy in the exercise of the office?

Mr. GEORGE. In 1873 the people of Pennsylvania made a new constitution. They were not satisfied with that state of affairs, and this is the way they provided in the same section 14. In the meantime they had provided for a lieutenant-governor who was to succeed to the governorship in case of vacancy, and then here in section 14, which makes provision for vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor.

In case of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor, or when the lieutenant-governor shall be impeached by the house of representatives, or shall be unable to exercise the duties of his office, the powers, duties, and emoluments thereof for the remainder of the term or until the disability be removed shall devolve upon the president pro tempore of the senate.

I do not know that that is very different from what the constitution of Delaware says on that subject, and it is not material whether it is or not. But here comes the point:

And the president pro tempore of the senate shall in like manner become governor if a vacancy or disability shall occur in the office of governor.

They discard the old constitutional language of the constitution of 1838, "He shall exercise the office of governor," and use language which I insisted on yesterday——

Mr. GRAY. Which the Senator from Oregon uses.

Mr. GEORGE. And which the Senator from Oregon uses. They use that as proper language in the constitution. They had a right to strike out, because they were framing a new constitution. They struck out the words "shall exercise the office of governor" and inserted "shall become governor," and when they made him a real governor it became necessary to make some other provision which was not in the constitution of 1838, and that is in the following words:

And the president pro tempore of the senate shall in like manner become governor if a vacancy or disability shall occur in the office of governor; his seat as senator shall become vacant whenever he shall become governor, and shall be filled by election, as any other vacancy in the senate.

That is the way in which constitution makers express the idea which the Senator from Oregon and those who agree with him insist is in the constitution of Delaware. They abandoned the language in their old constitution, which was exactly the same on this point as the constitution of Delaware, and they inserted language which makes their meaning plain.

Mr. President, I have another authority. I read now from the constitution of Maine. The Senator from Oregon called our attention to an opinion given by the supreme judges of Maine, or at least three of them, in relation to the meaning of their constitution. The Senate will do well to note the difference between a decision of the court, made on argument by counsel, where it decides the case, and where it is a mere unargued, unadvised opinion of a judge.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to section 5. It seems that sections 5 and 14 in these three constitutions are the same.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is very singular.

Mr. GEORGE. It is very singular, but it is a fact.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I noticed that.

Mr. GEORGE. Section 5, of article 5 of the constitution of Maine is in the exact words of section 5 of article 3 of the constitution of Delaware.

No person holding any office or place under the United States, this State, or any other power—shall exercise the office of governor.

I believe that is added—

That is in the constitution of Maine.

Section 14 is in substance exactly the same as section 14 of the constitution of Delaware, so far as the question before the Senate is concerned:

Whenever the office of governor shall become vacant by death, resignation, removal from office, or otherwise, the president of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be duly qualified.

It does not say until another governor is elected by the people. It says merely another governor. That is about the only difference. The same judge or set of judges who were quoted in seventh Maine were asked their opinion on that subject.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Seventh Maine?

Mr. GEORGE. Sixth Maine. The Senator quoted from seventh Maine.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I quoted from Greenleaf.

Mr. GEORGE. Sixth Greenleaf. You can call it Sixth Maine.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What page?

Mr. GEORGE. Page 508. Somebody asked the judge about how the speaker of the senate exercised the office of governor, and he uses this language:

The fourteenth section of the second article of the constitution provides—

That is the very thing which I have just read, and I want to read it again, and no man who will hear read or read clause 1 of section 14 of the constitution of Delaware will be able to discover the slightest particle of difference between that constitution and this one.

Whenever the office of governor shall become vacant by death, resignation, removal from office or otherwise, the president of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be duly qualified.

That is the quotation. Here is what the judge said:

This office he is to exercise because he is president of the senate and in virtue of his character as such officer at the time of such exercise of the office, and not because he had been president during the year next preceding.

That establishes as the construction of the constitution of Maine the exact construction which we place upon this. I think there is another part of one of the opinions here that also ought to be noticed. Notwithstanding these judges thought that the office of governor was so annexed to the office of president of the senate that when the president of the senate went out of office it went to his successor, they yet were compelled to admit that the interval of two or three or four days occurring between the expiration of the office of speaker of the senate and the date of the inauguration of a new governor—they did not give a very good reason for it, as judges never do who give offhand opinions without argument—they were compelled to admit that from necessity he was constrained to fill up these two or three days by the exercise of executive duties. That would be a horrible incongruity, enough to make the gentlemen who have this high ideal about constitutions blush almost with shame that any American people should ever have framed a constitution with such a provision in it. Now, what does this judge say:

So in case of vacancy in the office of governor, the president of the senate the preceeding political year, whose term of service as senator expires with the year, must from necessity act as governor, and the council of the preceding year continue to act as such, under the like necessity as above stated in qualifying the new legislature. (6 Maine Reports, page 512.)

He must go on from necessity. There was no provision in the constitution of Maine that he should continue the exercise of his office until a new governor elected by the people was qualified. He fell short of that in the opinion of these judges, and yet there was a hiatus, an interregnum, and they filled it by saying it was a matter of necessity that he should continue to exercise the duties of his office until the other one was qualified.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I look at the book?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I think the Senator ought to read that. It is very useful reading.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have read it.

Mr. GEORGE. I know the Senator has. He had better study it and sleep on it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have studied it also.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, I come to the Seventh Maine case.

Mr. GRAY. The Seventh Greenleaf case.

Mr. GEORGE. The Seventh Maine, too, in which my friend from Oregon and a majority of the committee have exercised, I will say, a remarkable ingenuity. Here is the question: They have a way up in Maine, whenever they want a constitution construed—under a provision of their constitution, too—to write a letter to the judges of the supreme court—I believe that is the name of the court, and ask them what they think about it, and frequently, without getting together, as stated in one of these cases and consulting, each one of the judges writes what his views are on the subject. I do not know that it is stated in the constitution anywhere what effect these opinions of the supreme court judges shall have, but I know there is a provision there that they shall give opinions. I suppose they are intended to be given for what they are worth, and if that is the standard by which they are tried in Maine I believe I will state that if they are all like the one I am going now to read in the hearing of the Senate they are worth exactly nothing.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. How about the one you have just read?

Mr. GEORGE. They reason that out. They give some reasons for that. They ask the judge this question:

Has the president of the senate, when the office of governor is vacant, and when he ought to be acting as governor, a right to preside and vote at the senate board? (7 Maine Reports, page 488.)

Here is the opinion of the court:

As to the second question—

Not the opinion of the court, but the opinion of one member of it, concurred in by all of the three members of the court—

As to the second question my opinion is that, while the president of the senate, in virtue of his office as such, is clothed with the power of exercising the office of governor, he has no right to preside over the senate or vote as a member of that body. (7 Maine Reports, page 489.)

Now, if the constitution of Maine on that point had been like the constitution of Delaware there might be, even with this unargued, unconsidered opinion of the judges, some weight attached to it. But my friend from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, has discovered a difference and has made some remarks on this subject. There is a vast difference. He tried to whittle it down to a very small difference, but there is a very vast difference when we come to that part of the case, and that difference will be seen at once by anyone who will give attention to the reading of the following clause:

And whenever either the president of the senate or speaker of the house shall so exercise said office he shall receive only the compensation of governor, but—his duties as president or speaker shall be suspended.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But not his power?

Mr. GEORGE. No, it does not say that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It says simply duties?

Mr. GEORGE. Simply duties, and I am very glad that my friend has called my attention to the fact, because I was about to forget it, that it only said duties and did not include powers. Since my friend has called my attention to the fact he must deem it as a matter of some importance.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do.

Mr. GEORGE. Does he insist, will he state, that a suspension of the duties did not suspend the power of the president of the senate to preside in the senate?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think there is very serious question about it.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator only thinks there is a serious question. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Personally I am frank to say I do not believe the suspension of duties simply in a constitutional provision is a suspension of power, although it may be a debatable question.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all there is to it. Then, if I understood the report of the committee drawn up by the Senator from Oregon, his opinion is that he could, though he was not obliged to do so, preside in the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Exactly.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, Mr. President, I am going to make some remarks on this point. I have some already written on this subject, but the easiest way in the world to overturn the Senator on that point is to read the question and the answer. Here is the question, and I want to call my friend's attention to it:

Has the president of the senate, when the office of governor is vacant, and when he ought to be acting as governor, a right to preside and vote at the senate board?

"A right." The answer is, as I have read:

As to the second question, my opinion is that while the president of the senate, in virtue of his office as such, is clothed with the power of exercising the office of governor, he has no right to preside over the senate or vote as a a member of that body.

Now, I should like to have the Senator tell me, if he has the power to preside over the senate, why he did not have the right to preside over it? The Senator says he had the power, and in his report he says he might exercise it or not, as he saw proper; and yet in this very authority which he brings to the attention of the Senate the judge says he has no right to preside or to vote. The Senator sees it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I stated just what the court states.

Mr. GEORGE. No; the court says, or the judge says, he has no right. I am not going to call that a court any more than I would call this body a Senate if they were scattered down here on Pennsylvania avenue talking about the weather or politics. It is not a court. It is the judge. The judge says he has no right.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am not on the witness stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Oregon has made what seemed to me a very attenuated distinction between powers and duties. I should like to call his attention to the language of that clause in the constitution of Maine which the Senator from Mississippi has been discussing. After saying that the duties of the president of the senate, when he exercises the office of governor, shall be suspended (and the Senator from Oregon says there is a difference between duties and powers), the constitution goes on to say:

And the senate or house shall fill the vacancy until his duties as governor shall cease.

What become of the powers, or duties either, if a vacancy has been filled in obedience to that provision of the constitution?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I did not hear all of the Senator's statement. Will he please repeat it?

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Oregon made the comment, when this provision of the constitution of Maine was read by the Senator from Mississippi, that there was a difference between powers and duties; that is, in the provision of the constitution that where the president of the senate exercises the office of governor his duties as president or speaker shall be suspended. If only his duties were suspended and his powers remained, which was the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, what shall become of either duties or powers if the following provision of the constitution is carried into effect?

And the senate or house shall fill the vacancy until his duties as governor shall cease.

What shall become of the powers or the duties if that vacancy shall be filled in obedience to that provision of the constitution?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Delaware attracts my attention to the latter clause of section 14, which I admit is an argument on your side of the case, in favor of the suspension of the power as well as the duty. I am frank to admit that it is an argument on your side of the case so far as that is concerned; but I want to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Mississippi to this feature of the clause.

Mr. GRAY. On what page?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On page 22 of the report. The opinion of the court—I call it the court—the supreme court of Maine, in responding to the question submitted to it, concedes this:

As to the second question, my opinion is that while the president of the senate, in virtue of his office as such, is clothed with the power of exercising the office of governor, he has no right to preside over the senate or to vote as a member of that body. (Opinion of the justices, 7 Greenleaf, 483.)

The constitution says nothing at all about suspending his right to vote. It simply relates to a suspension of his duties as speaker. Now concede, for the sake of the argument, that suspension of duties carries with it suspension of power. After all, it relates only to his duties and his power as speaker of the senate, and not to his duties and power as a senator, So this opinion of the court, so far as the right to exercise the duties and the power of a senator is concerned, proceeds exactly as though the constitution of Delaware and the constitution of Maine were precisely alike. Is not that a fact?

Mr. GEORGE. I think not. I will answer the Senator's point.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think there is no question about that.

Mr. GEORGE. I will show the difference.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think so, because the only difference in the two constitutions, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi very correctly, is the fact that the Maine constitution has in it a provision providing that while the presiding officer of the senate exercises the office of governor his duties as speaker of the senate shall be suspended, but it does not suspend either the power or duty of senator. Therefore I contend that this opinion, for whatever it is worth, of the supreme court of Maine is upon a constitution in all respects similar to the constitution of the State of Delaware so far as that point is concerned.

Mr. GEORGE. I have looked through my manuscript, I will say to the Senator from Oregon, and I find that in the course of fifteen or twenty minutes I shall reach a discussion of the very question which he now propounds, which I prepared in answer to the same position which he takes in the report of the committee, and so, to prevent repetition, I hope the Senator will indulge me until I get to that part.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly; that is all right. I am very anxious to hear the Senator upon that point.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, Mr. President, we have got to the point where the judge in Maine said that under that constitution where is suspended his exercise of the office of vice-president he can not preside or vote. I have corrected, I think, sufficiently the argument of my friend about the distinction between powers and duties by calling his attention to the fact that the judge decided he had no right, and if he did not have any right he did not have any power. If he ever had any power it was suspended, and therefore he had no right. I think that ends that part of it, but the Senator insists that this word "suspended," as used in the constitution of the State of Maine, applies only to his suspension of the duties of the office of president of the senate and not of senator. I am not going into that now. I will go into it further on. As I have just stated, I arranged to discuss the question further on, and so I will postpone it until I reach that part of my argument.

Mr. President, I claim with confidence that the plain words of section 14, Article III, devolve the exercise of the duties of the office of governor on the speaker of the senate or of the house as such, as the judges expressly said those words did in the constitution of Maine and that was their obvious meaning. And I also claim that it not only can not be construed to mean that he became governor, but that the contrary meaning is not only supported by the language of that section, but by all other parts of the constitution which can have any application to the subject. But even if we could legitimately call him governor when in the exercise of the executive authority, it makes no difference as to his exercise of the office of speaker or the office of senator—to his being speaker and senator.

I have shown in the first part of the argument that there is no common-law incompatibility between the exercise simultaneously of an executive and legislative office; that to constitute this incompatibility, to use the language of the supreme court of New York—

The offices must subordinate one the other, and they must per se have the right to interfere one with the other.

The same doctrine is announced by Meacham on Public Officers, in section 422, in the same words.

It is equally clear that there is no vacating the first office—I want to call the attention of the Senator to that—where the party has no lawful right to decline the acceptance of the second, for this whole doctrine is founded on the principle that the officer voluntarily chooses to accept the second office. There is a decision which I could bring to the attention of the Senate if I saw proper to enforce that view which says that where a penalty imposed upon a party accepting the second incompatible office if he do not accept it, this rule of incompatibility did not apply.

It is equally clear that there is no vacating the first office where the party has no lawful right to decline the acceptance of the second, for this whole doctrine is founded on the principle that the officer voluntarily chooses to accept the second office and relinquish the first. If the law or the constitution commands an officer to discharge the duties of another office in a certain contingency or for a certain limited time, and such command shall be construed to mean that he shall actually become or be the second officer for the time specified, then without a positive provision, as in the constitution of Pennsylvania, declaring the first office vacant, the officer does not vacate the first office, however incompatible they may be by the common law, for in that case the command of the constitution destroys the incompatibility. The constitution commands "the speaker to exercise the office of governor." Construe that to mean, as my friend from Oregon contends it does mean, "that the speaker shall be governor"; still it is a command, a positive and plain command, of the constitution that the speaker "shall" be governor. It commands nobody else to be governor. The speaker is the officer filling the speakership. He can not be speaker unless he is in the office of speaker. The office and the incumbent of the office are inseparable. Then, when the constitution commands the speaker to be governor, if we attribute that meaning to "shall exercise the office of governor," as it plainly does here, to fill an unexpected vacancy, an emergency which must be met at once, and for a time limited by the emergency, is it possible to conceive that the constitution meant not what it plainly says, but directly the reverse, viz, that the speaker shall not be governor? And that is what the argument of the Senator from Oregon means, because as soon as he touches the office of governor he ceases to be speaker. Does implicit obedience to the constitution by an officer have the effect to make him not an officer, but an ex-officer? That the constitution means what it plainly says, that the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office, or, under the construction of the other side, "shall" be governor as speaker, is further evident from the fact that if he refuses the office of governor and remains speaker, as our opponents say he would remain if he refused the office, then it would turn out as I demonstrated yesterday, that the office of governor could never go to any other person, for while he is speaker no other person in the world can "exercise the office of governor," as the constitution says, or "be" governor, as the Senator says. I think that answers it exactly.

If the Senators on the other side rely on other provisions of the constitution which prohibit generally other officers from being governor or senator, and claim that these vacate the office of senator when a senator becomes governor under clause 1 of section 14, otherwise these different parts of the constitution are repugnant, then I rely with confidence on the argument I have already made as to these repugnancies—that section 14 must be treated and held as an exception to the general rule laid down in other parts of the constitution. I have shown that these repugnancies are greater on the theory of the other side than on our theory. I call the attention of the Senate to what I said on that subject, without repeating it, except to say that this new governor, as our opponents insist he is, may be without a single qualification required by the constitution for the office of governor, either as to age, citizenship, or residence, or the manner of election, and must necessarily have as a qualification property to the amount of $5,000, which, the constitution says, shall not be required of the governor. What do our opponents say to avoid these manifest repugnancies?

But if it were possible that all the arguments I have heretofore advanced should be by anyone regarded as fallacious, I direct another argument to that person which can not be overturned. It is the same argument on this point presented with such force and ability by the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and to support it I use the same authorities he relied on.

I read sections 477, 478, and 479 of Cushing's Parliamentary Law, the very same sections which were read by the distinguished Senator from Indiana:

477. Whenever a member ceases to possess those qualifications which are in their nature continuing, or which members are expressly required to possess during their continuance in office—as, for example, when a member removes from the State or other local constituency in which he is required to continue to reside whilst in office—the seat of such member is hereby liable to be adjudged vacant, upon the fact of such disqualification being brought to the knowledge of the assembly. To the disqualifications of this kind may be added those which result from the commission of some crime which would render the member ineligible, or from some gross official or other misconduct, in consequence of which he is expelled, or discharged from being a member. In all these cases, unless there is some express provision of law by which the subject is regulated, the fact of disqualification can only be inquired into and decided upon by the assembly itself.

478. The distinction has already been explained between those offices or employments the possession of which at the time of the election renders a person ineligible and those the functions of which are merely incompatible with the functions of a member, the former avoiding the election, the latter only preventing the person elected from exercising the functions of a member until they are removed. When, however, a member has once been duly elected and taken his seat, this distinction no longer exists, the acceptance of disqualifying and incompatible offices being equally effectual to create a vacancy.

479. The only practical question in cases of this kind usually relates to the time when the acceptance of an office takes place. The subject is sometimes regulated by law, but where this is not the case it may be considered as a rule, founded in the reason of the thing and corresponding with the practice, so far as it is known, of all our legislative assemblies, that in order to vacate the seat of a member by the acceptance of a disqualifying or incompatible office the election or appointment thereto alone is not sufficient, but the member must either have signified his acceptance of the office in a formal manner, or have done what is incumbent on him tc qualify himself to discharge its duties, or have actually entered upon their discharge. In cases of this kind the existence of the vacancy must be declared by the assembly itself.

If it be required to support so eminent an authority by argument, such support will be found in the following considerations:

Conceding for the present, for the sake of the argument (what I have heretofore shown to be utterly unfounded), that the speaker of the senate becomes governor and that by the constitution of Delaware the act of becoming governor is incompatible with the office of senator, still there is no vacancy in or amotion from that office, as shown by the Senator from Indiana, until the senate of Delaware so adjudges. There is no other tribunal in the world which has jurisdiction—power—to make such judgment. The constitution of Delaware requires the speaker of the senate to issue a writ of election in case of vacancy. He is the only person authorized to issue such writ when the vacancy occurs during the session of the legislature. What he does as speaker, the senate being in session, he does as the organ of the senate and by their direction and order; and yet four or five instances are found in the history of Delaware where, when the speaker of the senate was exercising the office of governor, other vacancies in that body occurred, and there is a direction for the writ, or for the requisition of the writ, for filling the vacancy in everyone of them; and yet, although there have been ten speakers who were exercising the office of governor, and who, under the theory of the advocates of Mr. Du Pont's right to a seat, all ceased to be senators, there is not a single iota on the journals of either house of the legislature of Delaware to show that either body ever considered the offices as vacant. The journals show the writs to fill other vacancies existing at the same time, and yet no notice was taken of these.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That antagonizes but one branch or theory of our case.

Mr. GEORGE. But one theory.

This necessarily comes from the exclusive right of the senate to judge of the qualifications and election of its own members. Mr. Watson had been admitted as a member possessing all the legal qualifications and thereby adjudged to be qualified. It is now alleged that since that time he has become disqualified, thereby vacating his office by accepting an incompatible office. He denies the incompatibility and asserts his right to be a senator and to act as a senator. Who must judge? Only the senate of Delaware, for they are the exclusive judges of his qualification, or, if you please, his disqualification. No other tribunal in the world can so adjudge, as was shown so clearly and conclusively in the able argument of the Senator from Indiana.

But Senators on the other side say that an incompatible office accepted ipso facto vacates the first. That is the language, I believe, of the law books; but still there must be an adjudging as to the incompatibility unless the officer admits it. If he admits it, that is resignation, because the books say that when he accepts the one he resigns the other.

It may be a doubtful question, or it may be, as here, an alleged incompatibility only; in reality no incompatibility at all. When and where and before whom must the question of this incompatibility be tried and determined, and what is the condition of the officer—the senator—pending the trial of this question? These are very important questions. It can be tried by no other tribunal in the world (leaving out now the power of this body to be afterwards considered) but the senate of Delaware. Will Senators favoring Mr. Du Pont say it may be tried before a judicial tribunal in Delaware by quo warranto proceedings? They will not, I am sure, because every authority in the world on such questions says the senate of Delaware has full and exclusive jurisdiction over the matter. Can any such tribunal decide it in any collateral proceeding wherein Mr. Watson is not a party, such as deciding on the validity of any act done by him as senator after the alleged acceptance of the alleged incompatible office?

I ask Senators, any of them on the other side, to answer that question.

There is but one answer, and that is in the negative.

THE IPSO FACTO ARGUMENT.

If I am met again by the assertion that he ipso facto by acceptance vacates the office and therefore can no longer act, I answer that if it should be decided that the offices are not incompatible, then there is no ipso facto vacating of the office, as they allege. If decided by a competent tribunal—the senate of Delaware—that the offices are incompatible, what is the effect of that judgment as to the acts of Mr. Watson between the acceptance of the office and the judgment—his amotion from his office of senator? This is an important inquiry. Will the Senator from Oregon answer? I hope he will now, or some other Senator on the other side. If not, I will answer from the law books.

Why, Mr. President, in all the many contests about seats in Congress, in either House, and the legislatures of the States of the Union, the judgment of the legislative body turning out of their seats men who had been seated, either for want of qualifications or for not being legally elected, there has never been a question up to this day of the validity of the official acts of the person so ejected, so declared not to have been a rightful member.

The condition of a person occupying a seat in a legislative body who was without the qualifications necessary to entitle him to a seat, or who was never elected to a seat, can not be better as to this fact than that of a person who was properly elected, had the necessary qualifications, but lost them by accepting an incompatible office. In both cases the incumbent is unlawfully and improperly in office, and ought to be ejected, but he is in office until he is turned out.

If the Senators on the other side assert that there is something peculiar, something different, as compared with other cases, in this acceptance of an incompatible office, that in that case the law is that by the very act of acceptance he vacates or is ejected from office, still they do not help Mr. Du Pont's case, for it is settled by the highest authorities that in a case of that kind the incumbent still remaining in office, still recognized as in office, is a de facto officer, and that his acts as such are valid as to all the world. These same authorities, too, without an exception, so far as I have observed, assert another principle equally destructive to Mr. Du Pont's case, namely, that the validity of his title to the office can not be inquired into in a collateral proceeding; that it can only be questioned in a direct proceeding instituted by the State whose officer he claims to be to eject him from the office, or in some cases by an action against the officer himself. I here quote from the case of Woodside vs. Wagg, 71 Maine Reports, pages 209 and 210:

That the two offices, judge of the municipal court and member of the legislature, were incompatible can not be denied. (Constitution of Maine, Article IX, section 2; Commonwealth vs Hawkes, 123 Mass., 525.)

That to accept and qualify for one of these offices while holding the other would be a resignation of the one first held, is a rule already adopted by this court. (Stubbs vs. Lee, 64 Me., 195.)

It follows that when Judge Humphreys was qualified as a member of the legislature his strictly legal authority to act as judge of the municipal court ceased. He was no longer judge de jure. If he continued to exercise the functions of a judge, he might have been ousted by an information in the nature of a quo warranto. (Commonwealth vs. Hawkes, 123 Mass., 525.)

But the immediate question under consideration is, What was the character of his acts, as to validity or invalidity, during such continuance in the exercise of the duties of his judicial office, after expiration of the legal tenure? They must be void, unless they are to be upheld on the ground that a judge holding over under such circumstances is to be regarded as an officer de facto.

Mr. President, I shall read other authorities to sustain that view as to incompatible offices, the same as to every other office. In the first place, I suppose it will help the understandng of the argument which I am making if I shall read from a distinguished court the difinition of a de facto officer, so that we may all know with what we are dealing. I read from volume 1 of Allen's Massachusetts Reports, page 557. Say the court:

The precise definition of an officer de facto is, One who comes in by the forms of law—and acts under a commission or election apparently valid, but, in consequence of some illegality, incapacity, or want of qualification, is incapable of lawfully holding the office.

I think Mr. Watson got in in that way—

That is what the Senator from Oregon alleges to be the case of Mr. Watson.

The exact distinction between an usurper or intruder and an officer de facto is this: The former has no color of title to the office; the latter has, by virtue of some appointment or election.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Our claim is that Mr. Watson went in under the form of law and went out under the form of law.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that, and I am going to show you he had not got out.

I read from 122 Massachusetts Reports, page 446, from an opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Gray, now of the Supreme Court, then chief justice of the supreme court of Massachusetts. In that case a man by the name of Hawkes had been a justice of the peace of the State of Massachusetts and had been elected to a seat in the house of representatives of that State. After he had taken his seat in that house, the offices being incompatible, he issued a judicial warrant. The only question was as to the validity of that warrant. Says Mr. Justice Gray, speaking for the court:

But if Mr. Hawkes, upon taking his seat in the house of representatives, ceased to be a justice de jure, he was, by color of the commission which he still assumed to hold and act under, having the usual signs of judicial office—sitting in the court, using its seal, and attended by its clerk—and no other person having been appointed in his stead, a justice de facto.

Then he cites a great many cases to the same effect. I will read another:

Judicial acts done in a court baron by a steward not duly appointed, or by an understeward who kept court as steward without authority of the lord or high steward, or even by a clerk holding a court without disturbance by the lord, were held good, as done by color of authority, the lawfulness of which the suitors were not compellable to examine or inquire into.

Then several cases from the State of Vermont are quoted. Says the court:

The constitution of the State of Vermont declares that no person holding any office of profit or trust under the authority of Congress shall "be eligible to any appointment in the legislature, or of holding any executive or judiciary office under this State." In McGregor vs. Balch, 14 Vt., 428, a plea to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, that at the time of signing the writ, and at the time of the trial, he was a postmaster under the authority of Congress, and as such was ineligible to the office of a justice of the peace, and unauthorized to take cognizance of the action, was adjudged, upon full consideration, to be bad, because he was a justice de facto, and the question whether, on the one hand, upon accepting and qualifying as a justice, he resigned the office of postmaster and became a justice de jure, or, on the other hand, continued to hold the office of postmaster, and therefore could not legally hold the office of justice also, could not be tried and determined in an action to which he was not a party.

These are all cases about the incompatibility of offices and this ipso facto vacating.

In 123 Massachusetts Reports, on page 254, there is another opinion by Justice Gray to the point only that I have just made, that the right of a man who was elected and had accepted an incompatible office could not be determined in a collateral proceeding. The court say:

As, upon the allegations of the plea, he was at least a judge de facto, his jurisdiction could not be controverted upon this ground, nor the question whether the two offices were incompatible be tried, in a proceeding to which he was not a party.

The court also refer to the following cases:

Milward vs. Thatcher, 2 T. R., 81, 87; McGregor vs. Balch, 14 Vt., 423; Coolidge vs. Brigham, 1 Allen, 333; Sheehan's Case, 122 Mass., 445.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator think that this is in the nature of a collateral proceeding or like unto it?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that I can say that it is like a collateral proceeding. It seems to me to be no proceeding at all. Neither the State of Delaware nor anybody else has any notice here. The Senate of the United States are requested by Mr. Du Pont, and that request seems to have met the assent of a majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, without any proceeding, without any process, to turn a member out of the legislature of the State of Delaware. If it is any proceeding at all, it is collateral; it is not a direct proceeding against Mr. Watson to vacate his office.

I read now from one of the greatest judges who ever presided in any of the courts of the Union, the old Chief Justice Parsons. The Senator from Oregon will recognize that I am right in describing him in that way. This is as to de facto offices generally; the others all relate to persons holding incompatible offices.

The question which, by the plea before us, we are called on to decide in this action is whether the service of the original writ by Rodney Day was legal.

That Jonathan Smith, jr., is sheriff of the county of Hampden de facto is very certain; but whether he is sheriff de jure is the question made by the defendants.

Mr. Smith is no party to this record, nor can he be legally heard in the discussion of this plea—although our decision would as effectually decide on his title to the office as if he were a party. This would be judging a man unheard, contrary to natural equity and the policy of the law. From considerations like these has arisen the distinction between the holding of an office de facto and de jure.

Neither can Mr. Watson—

That is enough. If my friend from Oregon will not believe these witnesses, then, in the language of Holy Writ, he would not "be persuaded though one rose from the dead" to testify.

So, Mr. President, whatever view may be right as to whether Mr. Watson held the office of governor, and if so holding, whether such office was incompatible with the office of senator, still he was at least a de facto officer and his acts valid, and that defeats Mr. Du Pont's pretensions.

This is the law of the Senate as expressly laid down in the case of Clark and Maginnis. All the judges and courts where the English language is spoken, where English liberty is enjoyed, where common right and justice is supposed to be the end of government, are in perfect accord with the idea that Mr. Du Pont can not try the question of the title of Mr. Watson in a case like this; and also upon the further great principle that while he is in office, actually exercising the duties of the office, and before he has been adjudged out of the office, before there has been a judgment of a motion or removal, his acts are valid. Not only all these, but the Senate—this court—has announced the same doctrine. The Senate was asked to adjudicate the title of certain members of the legislature of the State of Montana who actually voted for Senators.

Mr. TURPIE. For United States Senators?

Mr. GEORGE. For United States Senators. Those gentlemen, without the votes of those men in the legislature of Montana, were not entitled to seats in this body. That case was tried before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I will just read one sentence from the report of the committee, and that will be enough. The committee were asked to adjudicate those men out of office, and they said:

This adjudication is only operative for the future, and has no retroactive effect whatever.

So Clark and Maginnis did not get their seats in the senate, and the other men remained in the legislature. Will this same court now, on exactly the same facts and principles, undertake to seat Mr. Du Pont, because the Senate may think that one man who voted for him ought not to have been in the legislature when he was? Are they going, contrary to the express doctrine here laid down and sanctioned by the Senate, to give their judgment a retroactive effect, and seat Mr. Du Pont in this body?

But he was not only de facto, but also, under the unanswerable argument of the Senator from Indiana, a legal officer—a senator—until the senate of Delaware should otherwise adjudge. I have argued as if he were a de facto officer; but under the argument of the Senator from Indiana, which has not been answered and can not be answered, and under the authorities read in support of it, Mr. Watson does not become a de facto officer; he still retains his character as a legal senator until the senate adjudges otherwise. I ask my friend, the Senator from Indiana, whether that is not correct?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. This that senate has never done, but on the contrary, as I will hereafter show beyond successful controversy, they have adjudged that he was a rightful officer, and he was recognized as such by the other branch of the legislature.

Mr. President, the argument I have made up to this point seems to dispose finally of the question as to whether Mr. Watson by entering on the exercise of the office of governor vacated his office of senator.

But it may be as well to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the uniform construction of the constitution of Delaware by the State authorities and the people of that State for one hundred years has been, without a single break or exception, to the effect that the speaker of the senate or of the house exercising the office of governor under this same section 14 has not vacated his office of legislator, but uniformly returned to his place in the legislature after the end of this exercise.

I will ask the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] whether he thinks I need refer to the cases. They have been referred to. There are five cases of that sort.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is conceded. There is no controversy on that question. In five instances they returned.

Mr. GEORGE. There are five cases of that sort running over nearly a century, I believe.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But it is also admitted, I suppose, in the same connection, that in not a single instance did any presiding officer, either of the senate or of the house, who succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor, attempt to exercise the office of speaker of either house, or senator or representative while he was exercising the office of governor.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. That is the fact. I will dispose of that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And we claim that the uniform construction of a hundred years upon this point ought to be good.

Mr. GEORGE. In other words, the Senator claims, as I will show before I get through—I will put it right here, in short, by consent, as is sometimes pleaded in the courts—that five cases of neglect of duty on the part of five separate and distinct officers constitute a revocation of the constitution of Delaware, an annulment of the constitution of Delaware. I will come to that question directly.

As to the binding effect of this construction on this Senate I will discuss hereafter, quoting on this point now only an extract from the report of a committee of this body in the contested election case of Potter vs. Robbins, in Taft's Election Cases, on page 94. This is a very important case, Mr. President. I will read from the report of the committee directly, but I want to tell the Senate who composed the committee. If there ever was a committee of this body which had five men on it of equal distinction and ability as lawyers I am not acquainted with it.

Here are those who formed the committee: First, there was George Poindexter, of Mississippi, than whom no greater man except the great trio, Clay, Webster, and Calhoun, ever had a seat in this body, who as a jurist stood in the first rank of his profession. The next man was William C. Rives, of Virginia. I think he has a history in this country as one of the ablest statesmen and lawyers who ever came into the Senate of the United States from the grand old State of Virginia. Here was another, Mr. Frelinghuysen, the gentleman who was so able and so distinguished that he was made the colleague of Mr. Clay in 1844 as a candidate for Vice-President. Here is another, Silas Wright. It is not worth while for me to say anything about Mr. Wright, of New York, though I will state right here that Mr. Wright dissented from the views of the others. But his ability insured that the question and every question before the committee should be fully argued and understood. Then there is another, Mr. Peleg Sprague, of Maine, one of the ablest lawyers who ever came here from that State, and who after his service in this body went on the United States district court bench and won a reputation as a jurist second to but few in this country. They were the committee who made the report. Silas Wright did not agree, but the committee had the benefit of Mr. Wright's talents and his arguments in committee in making up their opinion.

The attempt was made in that case to set aside the election of a Senator upon the ground that one house of the legislature of Rhode Island was a nullity; that they had actually legislated themselves into office. It seems that under the peculiar constitution of the State at that time they had an election every six months, I believe, for representatives and senators, and it required a majority vote to elect. The result was they frequently missed fire, and it became an intolerable evil, having elections and nobody elected. And so this legislature, becoming tired of it, passed a law that when their successors came around to be elected that the old members held over until men were elected by a majority vote. So they put themselves in office for six months, and then they elected a man to the Senate. Then the next legislature met. They thought it was a usurpation that those men should thus have continued themselves in office, and they passed a resolution declaring the election void—that that was no legislature—and elected another man. The contest was between those two. Here is what that distinguished committee say:

> It would seem to your committee a very dangerous assumption of power in one branch of Congress, or even in every department of the General Government combined, to interfere with the internal regulations of the State, and to denounce the body by which these laws and resolutions were passed as a mere assemblage of citizens without any public authority whatever, and not the legislature of the State. Such a power does not belong to the Federal Government, and would, if claimed and carried out to its full extent, annihilate all the reserved rights of the States. It is a general principle of national law, applicable to all distinct and independent governments, that if there arise any disputes in a State on the fundamental laws and public administration, or on the prerogatives of the different powers of which it is composed, it is the business of the State alone to judge and determine them in conformity to its political constitution. No government has a right to intrude into the domestic affairs of another State and attempt to influence its deliberations or to control its action. This principle is recognized in the Constitution of the United States, by which the respective States united and formed themselves into a Federal Republic.

That is the doctrine. We are not through with the case yet, or with the report of the committee. It had to come before the Senate. The report was sustained by a vote of 27 yeas for the report to 17 against it. I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon and the Senate generally, if it takes any notice of those things, as to how certain men voted on the report.

The second name I find among the yeas is Mr. Bibb of Kentucky, a man who sat for a long time in the supreme court of that State, and one of the ablest judges who ever lived in this country. The next man is John C. Calhoun. Then comes Henry Clay.

Mr. GRAY. They did not divide politically.

Mr. GEORGE. Then comes John M. Clayton, of Delaware. He was somebody in those days.

Mr. GRAY. We thought so in Delaware.

Mr. GEORGE. Then Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, one of the ablest men who ever was in public life in this country. Then the same Mr. Frelinghuysen who was on the committee. Then passing over many names of great distinction, and all able men, I come to a man whose ability as a lawyer placed him in the front rank of the American bar—Alexander Porter, of Louisiana. All of you—we are nearly all living here in common-law States—may not have read and considered the opinions in the old time of the supreme court of Louisiana, when Alexander Porter and Francis Xavier Martin were on that bench; but all of you have read Story's Conflict of Laws, and when you read that book you will find that Mr. Porter, up to the time that book was written, had done more than any and all other American jurists put together to naturalize in this country private international law. He voted "yea," too.

I pass over a good many and come to the last name, that of Daniel Webster. I think, Mr. President, some years ago Mr. Webster had some standing in this country as an expounder of the Constitution of the United States. That is the way Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Webster and all of the great men whose names I have alluded to expounded the Constitution of the United States on the exact point involved in this controversy.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me right at this point?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi has stated in a very general way what the controversy was up in that State. Then he has read an extract, a very ably written extract, of glittering generalities from the report of the committee. I should like to have him tell the Senate the precise point this body voted on when those great men voted one way and other great men voted the other way.

Mr. GEORGE. They seated the man who was selected by the legislature which I described, who had put themselves in office by their own votes.

Mr. GRAY. Extending their terms.

Mr. GEORGE. Extending their terms. That was the result. They seated the man.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There was a controversy as to which of the two bodies claiming to be the legislature was the legislature of the State.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That was the controversy.

Mr. GEORGE. They had a right to decide it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That was all there was in that case.

Mr. GEORGE. And a great deal of it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And a great deal of it, certainly. It has always been held by the Senate that where there are two bodies each claiming to be the legislature of the State, it has the right to determine which is the legislature.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Because there can be but one legislature of a State. That was all there was to that controversy.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir. As shown by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] the other day, for one hundred years no Senate has ever dared to inquire into the qualifications of a member of a legislature who had cast his vote for a Senator.

Mr. TURPIE. It never has been done.

Mr. GEORGE. Never.

SUSPENSION OF MR. WATSON AS SENATOR AND ABEYANCE IN THE OFFICE.

But the Senator from Oregon contends that if there was no vacancy in the office the office must have been suspended, or at all events the office was in abeyance. I asked him to state which of these was correct, which he would place his case on, but while he stated that as an original question he would say the office was vacant, yet he would not state which of these conditions was right now. And he never has stated it. Only one of them can possibly be right—vacancy, suspension, or abeyance. If it can not be made out that one of them is right, then it follows that none of them are right. You can not splice them together, because they are incompatible, to use the phrase of my friend. An office can not be in the condition of all of them combined. If it be vacant it has no incumbent and there can be no suspension of an incumbent, for there is none; and if the incumbent be suspended there can be no abeyance of the office. I asked the Senator from Oregon to state one or the other of these to be the true situation. He declined to do it. I give him the opportunity now to do it if he wants to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I stated most distinctly in answer to the Senator, when I was addressing the Senate and he interrupted me some days ago, that it is my opinion——

Mr. GEORGE. As an original question we put it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Clear and distinct that a proper, fair construction of the constitution of the State of Delaware makes it an absolute vacancy.

I said in the same connection that the fact that four or five of the speakers of the senate and of the house who had succeeded to the exercise of the office of governor had gone back after they had finished their terms as governor and resumed their seats was a construction, so far as they could give a construction to the constitution of the State of Delaware, to the effect that the duties of senator and speaker of the senate were simply held in suspension while exercising the office of governor, because not one of the ten except Mr. Watson ever attempted to exercise any of the duties of senator or speaker of the senate while exercising the office of governor.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator's position exactly as he states it now.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is no controversy about it, then.

Mr. GEORGE. What I am trying to do is to ascertain whether the Senator will say now, and whether he will put Mr. Du Pont's case on it for the committee, that the office was vacant, or leaving out that, that the office was suspended, or leaving out both of the others, will say it was in abeyance?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator will allow me, it is not necessary for me to select one branch of a case and abandon another branch of a case, when either branch is good and makes out my case.

Mr. GEORGE. And whether——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Now, one moment. Then whether the office became absolutely vacant or whether the functions were suspended during his exercise of the office of governor, in either event Mr. Du Pont's case is made out. Why, then, should the Senator from Mississippi insist that I abandon one theory when I have two theories, either one of which is good?

Mr. GEORGE. I would have no right to make the Senator do that——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And, moreover, is there any inconsistency——

Mr. GEORGE. I was going to state that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is there any inconsistency upon my part and upon the part of those who agree with me in claiming before the Senate and before the world that here is a constitution of a great State which is susceptible of two constructions. It may be susceptible of three constructions. We say it is susceptible of only two, and no matter which one of those two constructions you give it, in either event it seats our man. I insist that we are not inconsistent in making such claim.

I might say further that it is susceptible of three constructions. The Senator from Mississippi puts one construction upon it, and says it is susceptible of that one construction and no other. We upon our side say it is susceptible of two constructions and only two, either one of which, if applied to it, makes our case. If his construction is the correct one, it makes his case out.

Mr. GEORGE. That is very plausible and very incorrect.

Mr. TURPIE. It is absurd.

Mr. GEORGE. I will not say absurd.

Mr. TURPIE. I will.

Mr. GEORGE. No constitution ever said, "I mean this or I mean that."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. Let me go on. The Senator has had his time. I must go on now. No constitution ever said that. When you come to apply your intellect to a constitution you may say, "I am unable to determine whether it means this or whether it means that or the other, but it means one."

Mr. GRAY. And only one.

Mr. GEORGE. And only one.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me now?

Mr. GEORGE. No; not now. It means only one and it means one of these, as he points them out, and each one of these as he points them out is inconsistent with the other.

I have just shown if an office is vacant the office can not be suspended, because there is nothing to suspend. If it is in abeyance it can not be suspended or vacant except sub modo, as I will show about abeyance directly.

No, the trouble with our friends is that they have tried each of those theories, and neither one of them will work out under the constitution of Delaware. When you come to your claim of vacancy the Senator himself stated the argument by which that was overthrown. The senate of Delaware and the people of Delaware for a hundred years have said it was not vacant. When he comes to suspension, then he has not the benefit of his incompatible common-law rule, that when a man holds two offices he vacates the first one. That is the rule. It never suspends. So you have nothing for that.

Now, when we come to abeyance, that is a very hard word, and I will say something about it hereafter. I will state that I know of but one instance in American law where an office is in abeyance. There may be others; I do not know them all. When a man asserts negatively that nothing can be found he makes a broad assertion. I am not going to do that. I am going to say that, so far as my poor and limited observation has gone, I know of but one instance in American law where it is said that an office is in abeyance. I will allude to that hereafter. That was made so by act of Congress.

The argument is so overwhelming that Mr. Watson's senatorial seat was not vacant that the advocates of Mr. Du Pont's case are driven to assert that though he was in law and in fact a senator he could not act as a senator, his functions as senator being suspended.

I may say at the outset that a suspension in the duties of an officer—he being still a legal and constitutional incumbent—is a status not favored in law, and is never held—I shall not be so broad, for I talked to a good lawyer who will probably vote the other way in this matter, whose name I will not give, and who agreed with me in this assertion—to exist except in pursuance of some positive provision of law authorizing it. If there be such an instance I ask Senators who support this view to bring it forward. There must be some positive provision of law to authorize the suspension of an officer. I am not now speaking of certain prohibitions which may exist against the performance of particular acts, as that a judge shall not sit in his own case, or a sheriff shall not execute a writ for or against himself. In such cases there is always a provision that these prohibited functions shall be discharged by another officer, as by the coroner for the sheriff, or another judge for the interested judge.

These cases are not suspensions of the power and duties of the officer in toto, but a restriction in law upon the exercise of his powers in certain cases. Nor am I speaking of a mere omitted or suspended exercise of the duties of an officer, coming from a voluntary neglect on his part to attend at the time and place required by law for the discharge of his official duties—or from his compulsory or enforced absence by sickness, arrest, capture in war, or absence from the State or jurisdiction. In such cases it may, though with no great propriety of language, be said that there is a suspension in fact of the exercise of the duties of the office. Though the incumbent is not deprived of his legal right to discharge them, he is by the circumstances placed in that condition where he is physically unable to act.

The suspension claimed in behalf of Mr. Du Pont is a total suspension of Mr. Watson's powers as senator, whereby, though remaining an incumbent—legal and constitutional incumbent, holding the office so as to exclude another incumbent—he can not perform a single official duty. In this sense, and in this sense only, can the alleged suspension of Mr. Watson from his office as senator be of the slightest consequence in this case.

This alleged suspension is claimed to come from the prohibitions in the constitution before referred to, as resulting from the incompatibility of the two offices coming from these interdictions, and the common-law rule that in such cases the acceptance of the last office is necessarily a vacating of the first.

But the answer to that is that in no case does such rule operate to suspend an officer; but always, universally, without exception, makes the office vacant, wholly vacant, to be filled by another incumbent. I have found no instance, and I believe no well-considered precedent can be found, where there has been a total suspension of the right of an incumbent to exercise his office, except when such suspension has been brought about by the exercise of a power conferred on another office to make that suspension, or is the result of an express enactment to the effect that in a certain case the powers of the officer shall be suspended. An instance of this last kind is found in the constitution of Maine, Article V, first part, section 14, which provides—

That when the president of the senate or speaker of the house of representatives "shall so exercise said office (of governor) * * * his duties as president or speaker shall be suspended; and the senate or house shall fill the vacancy until his duties as governor shall cease."

Now, I will answer what the Senator from Oregon asked me some time ago. It will be noticed that the provision is inserted in the constitution of Maine, notwithstanding there is a provision in it against senators or representatives holding State offices, exactly the same in substance as in the constitution of Delaware. Yet the framers of the constitution of Maine found it necessary to insert express suspension.

We are referred by the committee to the opinion of the justices of the supreme court of Maine to support the idea that a constitutional provision expressly suspending the president of the senate from the exercise of the duties of president while exercising the office of governor includes also a suspension of this officer from the exercise of his powers as senator.

The provision in the constitution of Maine on which this opinion is based is that which I have just read.

I have also read in the former part of my argument the very able and lucid opinion of the judge who delivered his opinion on that subject, not the opinion of any court. I read all of it. It is a mere ex cathedra opinion given by judges, formed without the benefit of argument by counsel and expressed without giving any reason whatever to sustain it. It does not say, however—I want the Senator to bear that in mind—that the office of senator is suspended.

We are left to mere conjecture as to the reasons which governed the judges. The constitution of Maine contains a provision, and a very important provision, on this point not found in the constitution of Delaware.

My friend was mistaken in supposing that there was no other clause of the constitution of Maine which could have the effect to give this judge the right to stumble on the idea that the office of senator could not be exercised than could be found or an equivalent one in the constitution of Delaware. But I will read to the Senate now something which is in the constitution of Maine and is not in the constitution of Delaware, and which has a very important bearing on this subject. I read from Article III:

SEC. 1. The powers of this government shall be divided into three distinct departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial.

SEC. 2. No person or persons belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others, except—except in the cases herein expressly directed or permitted.

Bear that in mind—

That is not the constitution of Delaware; it is in the constitution of Maine. The judge, as I stated, did not give his reasons. It is a mere ex cathedra opinion; "I think," so and so.

If I were to conjecture as to the reasons which influenced the judges, I would say the following probably controlled them. The above extract it will be noted, after dividing the powers of the government into the three departments, legislative, executive, and judicial, expressly prohibits any person "belonging to one of these departments from exercising any powers properly belonging to either of the others, except in the cases herein expressly directed or permitted," "properly belonging to either of the others, except in the cases herein," not by indirection, not by argument or inference, but "except in the cases expressly directed," authorized "or permitted."

The governor's office is expressly assigned in the constitution of Maine to the executive department. The office of speaker of the senate and the office of senator belong to the legislative department; hence are within the prohibitions, express prohibitions, of the constitution. Neither could exercise the office of governor unless he comes within the exception; that is, "except in the case herein expressly directed or permitted."

In Article V, section 14, the president of the senate is expressly directed to perform the duties of the office of governor in case of a vacancy. That brings him within the exceptions in Article III, which I have just read, as one "expressly directed or permitted" to so act. So he could act and so the judges held he did act as "president."

If the constitution of Maine had in section 14 stopped at commanding the president of the senate to act as governor, then the condition would have been exactly as in the Delaware constitution; he could have exercised the office of governor as president, and in that character, as was held to be the case in Sixth Maine Reports, which I have quoted, and could have exercised and performed the duties of governor and senator at the same time.

But the framers of the constitution of Maine were not content with that situation, and so they added the clause above quoted, in which they provided that when so exercising the office of governor his duties as president shall be suspended. No reference is made in this whole section to the office of senator, except so far as it was necessarily included in the office of president; so that considering the incumbent as one person, a suspension of the president was also a suspension of the senator—because you could not suspend half of him; you must consider him as one person. And considering the president as holding two offices now——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. He uses the word "duties."

Mr. GEORGE. I will get to that directly.

And considering the president as holding two offices—one president and the other senator—then it would follow—I call my friend's attention to that—that "a permission or direction" given expressly to him as president would not include him in his other office of senator under that exception which I read in the hearing of the Senate. And the office of senator not being included, that office remained under the general prohibition in said Article III, prohibiting persons having powers under one department from exercising powers in either of the others, and that settles the case.

Whether I conjecture right or not, I can not say. I am only guessing at the reasoning of the judge; the judge gave us no reasons.

But the committee were not satisfied with the ex cathedra opinion of the judge, and so they attempt to show that a suspension of the duties of the president did not include a suspension of his powers. It is true that the committee do not absolutely commit themselves to this position, but leave the matter somewhat in doubt by the suggestion that it is "not so clear," but that this view is the correct one. Yet as this "not-so-clear" position is made a part of the chain of reasoning by which they arrive at the conclusion that this express suspension of the duties of the president did not include a suspension of his powers as senator, it is well to make "it clear" that the committee is wrong on this point. The duties of an office are those acts which the incumbent ought in law to do as such incumbent; that is, whatever the law requires an incumbent to do constitutes the duties of the officer. The powers of an officer are no more and no less than the full power to do these acts which make up the duties of the office or of the officer. Without power to do a thing, as the committee rightly admit, there is no duty as to that thing except to refrain from doing it, as I hope the Senate will refrain from doing the thing which the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections asks them to do in this case, because they have got no power, as I shall show before I get through.

Duties in an office—what an officer ought to do—include not only the performance of what he ought to perform, but also the nonperformance of everything not committed to him to do. So that powers and duties—legal powers and legal duties—and we can consider no other, when considering an officer, are always correlated, are always coextensive—where the one begins the other begins; where one ends the other necessarily ends. Will the committee, or some member of it, tell the Senate what function, what act, what duty of the officer could be performed when his duties—all of them—were suspended? The committee say the power remains—but without obligation to exercise it. Then where is the suspension of his duties? In that view we must discard the word "suspend" and do what the committee and the Senator from Oregon so often do in this argument, insert other words, insert the words "excused from the duties if he wishes to be so excused." That is what the committee say this thing means—he is not suspended: he is only excused.

Whether I be right in my conjecture or the committee be right in their conjecture as to the grounds of this opinion is after all immaterial, since there is no such provision about suspension in the constitution of Delaware.

The word "suspend" occurs twice in the constitution of Delaware—once prohibiting the suspension of the laws without authority from the legislature, and once prohibiting the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. If the framers of the constitution had intended to effect suspension of the exercise of constitutional offices, they were not unacquainted with the language proper to accomplish it, and their failure to use the word "suspend," or any other word or phrase equivalent to it, makes it clear that they did not mean suspension in the case claimed by the committee, and of course they did not mean excuse.

An instance of the other kind of suspension—that is, by positive enactment authorizing a person to suspend, etc.—is found in the Revised Statutes, section 1768, authorizing the President to suspend an officer in certain cases.

It also must be noticed that in both of these cases provision is made for filling the office temporarily during the suspension.

The difference between a removal from an office and a suspension of the right to exercise it is fully explained and pointed out by the New York court of appeals through Judge Peckham in a case wherein the court decided that an express power to remove an officer does not include the power to suspend him.

The court says (113 N. Y. Reports, page 420):

The power to remove is the power to cause a vacancy * * * which may be filled at once, and if the duties are such as to demand it, it should be filled. The power to suspend causes no vacancy and gives no occasion for the exercise of the power to fill one. The result is that there may be an office, an officer, and no vacancy, and yet none to discharge the duties of the office. By suspension the officer is prevented from discharging any duties, and yet there is no power to appoint anyone else to the office, because there is no vacancy.

That is the way the supreme court of New York decided through the eminent judge who now sits on the Supreme Court bench of the United States, that a power to remove did not include the power to suspend.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The decision simply amounts to this: Where a statute authorized——

Mr. GEORGE. Authorized the removal and undertook to suspend——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That they could suspend.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. And the supreme court of New Jersey (see 25 New Jersey Law Reports, on page 544) is equally emphatic in condemning the idea of a suspended officer, saying:

This proceeding amounts to a suspension of the relator from the exercise of his official duties as a member of that body [common council of Jersey City]. It leaves his constituents unrepresented and without a remedy. Expulsion creates a vacancy that can be supplied by a new election. Suspension from the duties of the office creates no vacancy; the seat is filled, but the occupant is silenced.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Admitting all that to be true, which I do, as good law, does it touch this question?

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will wait, I will show that it does touch it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The question here is whether there can be, or whether there is in this particular case, a suspension of duties without a suspension of power? That is the question.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not arguing that. I have got through with that point. The point I am arguing now is that there can not be any suspension at all of the senator or representative. I have quit the other.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Well, go on.

Mr. GEORGE. Suspension is a condition which the law does not favor. You have an office, you have an incumbent, and yet nobody to perform the duties of the office.

Thus it is established that there can be no suspension of an officer by mere implication; never. The common law never creates an office and fills it and then suspends the right of the officer to exercise it. No statute law, so far as I have discovered, ever made a suspension in office without at the same time providing for the discharge of the duties of the office by another person or officer during the period of suspension. When an office is created, especially by a constitution, it is always, without exception, on the idea that the office is necessary; that is, that the discharge of the duties of the office is essential to the public welfare and to the maintenance of the polity established by the constitution.

If we apply these principles to the case of Mr. Du Pont we find that the argument is overwhelmingly against him.

Delaware has had three constitutions—one framed in 1776, one in 1792, and one in 1831.

There are just three counties in the State. In the beginning these three counties, being territories of the province of Pennsylvania, were permitted by William Penn to have a separate legislature. The government was styled "The government of the counties of New Castle, Kent, and Sussex upon Delaware." In 1776, pursuant to a recommendation of the Continental Congress, these three counties formed a State government and called it "Delaware State." In the constitution of 1776 provision was made for each county to have an equal representation in the senate and also in the house of representatives—the same in 1792, and the same in 1831—each county under each constitution having three senators and seven representatives. This apportionment of representation was wholly territorial, taking no account of population or wealth. The scheme was to have equality of political power in each of the three counties. The scheme was so in the beginning, and the scheme is so to-day.

I do not contend that there is any sovereignty in these counties which makes it impossible to destroy this equality of political power. That is not in question here. But I insist that this settled policy of the State fixed in the beginning, disregarding all consideration of population or wealth in the legislative apportionment, so as to have perfect equality in the political power of these counties, is not to be overturned by mere implication and construction. The legislature is small, nine in the senate and twenty-one in the house of representatives, so that any change in the representation, a loss even of one senator, makes a vast difference in the equality of political power thus sedulously preserved. The difference between three-ninths and two-ninths which a loss of one senator to a county would make is vastly greater than the difference between three-thirtieths and two-thirtieths, if the senate had been composed of thirty members, about the usual number in the United States. So, under these circumstances, I may fairly argue, not, I admit, that this policy of equality in the three counties is irreversible, but that it should not be considered as abandoned in any part of the constitution without a clear provision to that effect. And I may further fairly and justly argue that this policy must be considered as potential, even conclusive, in favor of that construction of any particular clause of the constitution which would carry it out if not against the plain meaning of the words used in it.

If we give the meaning to the clauses in question that the incumbent of the office of senator or representative is suspended from the right of exercising his office when he exercises the executive authority provisionally, we destroy this equality of political power so carefully provided for in all the constitutions of Delaware, from 1776 to the present day. We do more than this; we do that which the learned supreme court of New Jersey in the case I have cited and common right and justice declare ought not to be done in any case. We deprive the constituents of the senator or representative thus suspended of their guaranteed right as provided for in their constitution—in all their constitutions from the beginning. We do this, too, I feel free to say, without warrant of constitutional law, by our mere whim and caprice, following an ignis fatuus, an uncertain light, to have a constitution framed according to an ideal which never was realized in the United States or anywhere else.

Leaving out all consideration as to equality of political power in the three counties, we find the argument irresistible that in a free, representative, republican government no construction by inference or mere argument shall prevail to deprive the people of any part of their representation.

Right here, before I go any further, I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if he did not, on investigation, find out and so state to the Senate that in the House of Commons of England, whiel there was a right to suspend, it never extended to the suspension of the right to vote?

Mr. TURPIE. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. This suspension, even in a monarchical government, where it may be used to discipline a man, where it may be used to make him feel belittled in the presence of his colleagues, has never been carried to the extent of silencing, in the language of the supreme court of New Jersey, the voice of his constituents.

Mr. GRAY. They might punish him, but not his constituents.

Mr. GEORGE. Not his constituents. Let the man suffer, but preserve the great and sacred right of representation in a free government. This right of representation is, in fact, the foundation stone of republican government. This right is the substitute for the personal presence of the people themselves in an assembly authorized to make laws. This right can exist only where there is a selection of representatives by the people—by the electors whom they have authorized to perform that duty. In American constitutions we have had, and possibly have now, provisions for selecting officers other than by the free choice of the people. But in none has there ever been a provision to select the legislature, or either branch of it, otherwise than by the people, or, as in the single instance of the United States Senate, by persons selected by them and charged with the selection of legislators. So this great right is fundamental—essential even to free government. It may be, and always is, regulated by law; but it exists independent of law as the essence of free government. While the right thus exists it can be exercised only in accordance with law. Who are to be electors, when and where and how they shall vote, and the qualifications of the person they may vote for are all fixed by law. The right is fundamental, even sacred, in a free government, and is beyond the reach of him who would destroy or even impair it in the least degree. The people have it under the law and they have it to the full extent provided by law. It can not be enlarged nor diminished other than by law. As the law they have ordained is, so their right is—neither more nor less. So that when the law gives the right to have a senator or representative, or a certain number of them, they have the right to all of them, and the right to them and each of them as full senators or representatives, with all the powers incident to the office—with power of deliberation, debate, and voting, expressing the voice of their constituents with full legal force. There is no such thing in American constitutional law as a crippled, maimed, or emasculated representative. He is a full, complete representative, the equal of all others, or he is no representative at all. The Constitution of the United States, and, I believe, the constitution of every State in the Union, gives an express power to each branch of the legislature to expel a member; no constitution ever gave a power to suspend one.

ALLEGED GROUND OF THE SUSPENSION.

If what I have said be correct—and I do not think it can be overturned—the alleged suspension has been shown to be a mere figment of the imagination, and nothing further need be added.

But the necessity for a correct decision in this case is such that I fear to leave unpressed any argument which fairly tends to support the position I maintain.

I next inquire into the alleged grounds for the suspension of Mr. Watson's right to act as senator. It can not, as claimed, come from the alleged incompatibility in the office of senator and that of governor, for we have seen that in all cases of incompatibility, where any effect whatever is produced, the result is the full and complete vacating of the office first acquired. But whatever may be alleged in reference to this incompatibility of executive and legislative duties, as belonging to separate and distinct departments of government, that rule can not apply in this case, for if we allow that this incompatibility operates to any extent in suspending the simultaneous exercise of incompatible functions, it can not operate beyond the point where the incompatibility exists, and therefore the officer would be allowed to execute so much of the duties of the suspended office as were entirely consistent and not incompatible with the duties of the office he holds.

The choosing by the legislature of a State of a Senator is an executive act imposed on it by the Constitution of the United States. When a legislature acts in its legislative capacity it makes a law. The language by which it acts is, "Be it enacted," or, "Be it resolved, that the law shall be henceforth as by this act ordained." The result is a new rule of action by which men regulate their conduct.

The language which expresses the action of electing or choosing a United States Senator is, "We select this man, or choose this man, to discharge duties already fixed by the Constitution of the United States."

In the one case the result of the action is to make law; in the other it is to select an agent to carry out law. So the choosing or appointing an officer is in its essence always an executive act. The vote, therefore, of every member of a State legislature for Senator is an executive and not a legislative act. Hence there can be no incompatibility in discharging executive duties, or performing the executive act of voting for a Senator, and hence no suspension from office as to that act. The Constitution of the United States vests in Mr. Watson as the executive of the State the power to appoint a United States Senator to fill a vacancy, recognizing such appointment as an executive act. Would it not be a singular and unexplainable action if the Senate of the United States should refuse to allow Mr. Watson's vote for Senator to stand upon the ground that such vote was incompatible with his exercise of executive authority? The Constitution allows him to make a full Senator by his own act. The Senate of the United States is asked by the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to say that he shall not be one of a State body to help make a Senator.

The alleged suspension can not come from that provision in the constitution which merely prohibits an incumbent in the senatorial office from exercising the executive authority. For it has been shown that this prohibition on the words of the constitution—their true and plain meaning—does not apply to this case, and the settled construction of the constitution for one hundred years has been against that position.

Now, I will come to the point to which the Senator from Oregon was kind enough to call my attention sometime ago. I believe my friend from Indiana interpreted the Senator's remarks as meaning the refraining of Mr. Watson from voting.

Mr. TURPIE. The Senator from Oregon used the word himself.

SUSPENSION BY NONACTION.

Mr. GEORGE. But it is said that it appears that no senator while exercising the office of governor ever did discharge any duty as senator, though some or all of them whose constitutional term of senator had not expired when their executive authority ceased returned to their seats in the senate and filled them to the end of their senatorial terms. It is claimed that this failure to exercise simultaneously executive and senatorial duties constitutes a settled construction on the part of the proper authorities of the State that such senators had no right to exercise senatorial duties while in the exercise of executive authority. This certainly is a most remarkable claim, and shows into what straits the advocates of Mr. Du Pont's alleged rights are driven.

Certainly it has not before this been deliberately asserted that the failure or neglect of an incumbent to perform his official duties operated per se as a legal suspension of his right and duty to perform them. Let us see the exact situation. Under the claim that the speaker of the senate was suspended in the exercise of his senatorial duties we have this admitted fact, that he was, during the whole of the time of his exercise of executive authority, the constitutional and rightful incumbent of the office of senator even up to the expiration of his constitutional term. That is admitted in the claimant's contention. That being so, as I have shown beyond controversy, and as is admitted by asserting this ground of suspension, then he was a full senator with full powers and duties, given not for his own advantage, but for the interests of the people—his constituents—as a result of their plain constitutional right to full and constitutional representation in the legislature of Delaware. Then how can it be maintained that a mere failure of an incumbent, having other constitutional duties to perform, to sit actually in his seat in the senate caused a legal suspension of his right to do so? He by his neglect of duty might have incurred such censure as to have authorized his expulsion or removal; so that the people might have elected another to discharge his official duties; but it could not have effect to deprive the people of their right to full representation. Besides this, the failure of each of these incumbents in the discharge of senatorial duties may properly be attributable to other motives than a conviction that he had no right to discharge them. He may have refrained from acting as senator from motives of personal delicacy—personal convenience—and from a belief that no measure which he opposed would fail to be defeated, and no measure which he approved would fail to be enacted by reason of his absence. That his power to act during his absence from the senate chamber was in fact suspended by want of his personal presence I have shown may be true. But is it to be inferred that an actual absence, operating as a suspension of the discharge of his duties, terminable at his will, is a legal suspension of his right to represent his constituents and, what is more, a suspension of their right to full representation?

It results from this that the voluntary abstention by an incumbent from the exercise of his rights as such has no other effect than his voluntary suspension by his own act of the exercise of the duties of his office—terminable at his will. The repetition by all of the senators exercising executive authority of such abstention can not have the effect of making a legal suspension of the incumbent's right to exercise his senatorial office.

The multiplication of nonentity can not produce substance; the repetition of several acts of negligence and failure can not make that failure and that negligence no negligence and no failure, much less an actual performance of official duty. Yet such must be the conclusion if we adopt the view contended for. It can not justly be argued, as I have shown, that the failure on the part of these incumbents meant that each of them had the view that he could not act, for each may have had other motives for his conduct. Before any conduct can be held to be a construction of law such conduct must amount to an affirmation in actual practice that such is the law, and such affirmation can only come from such unequivocal conduct on the part of the official as would necessarily have been illegal under any other construction of the law. Such was the exact case with the senator who, after the expiration of his exercise of executive authority as speaker, resumed his seat and duties as senator: for such resumption necessarily meant that not only the senator but the senate in which he took his seat construed the constitution to mean that he had a right to do so. If such construction was not right such senator so resuming his seat would have been an intruder, without authority or color of authority to act.

In the case of this voluntary nonattendance of the speaker exercising executive authority, there was no occasion or opportunity for the senate to make any decision or take any action which would involve a construction of the constitution, for the senate had no power to compel his attendance. A minority of the senate, when there was no quorum, had the authority to compel the attendance of absentees; but even in that case a failure of the minority, which had no other power than to adjourn from day to day and compel the attendance of absentees, to send for the person exercising executive authority might, and probably would, have come from a desire not to interfere with the executive authority when such interference was wholly unnecessary to make a quorum, as they had full power to make the quorum by compelling the attendance of other absentees. Besides, a proper courtesy to the executive authority would have prevented his arrest to compel a quorum. It is respectfully submitted that other senates than this body have a right to regulate their proceedings with reference to senatorial courtesy.

CONSTRUCTION BY JOINT ASSEMBLY AND SENATE OF DELAWARE.

That I am right in this view, that the nonexercise of his senatorial powers by each of these speakers acting as governor was not understood in Delaware, and in the legislature of Delaware, as a construction of the constitution impairing in the least his full rights as senator, is conclusively shown by the very proceedings about the election of Senator which have given rise to the controversy.

It is shown even by the proof introduced by Mr. Du Pont that Mr. Watson took the speaker's chair of the senate a few minutes before that body went into the hall of the house of representatives to hold the joint assembly on May 9. Then he actually presided, taking the gavel, the speaker pro tempore surrendering it and the chair; that he announced that the senate would proceed in a body to the representative hall, which they did, headed and led by him.

He had communicated his intent to preside to several Republican senators on the floor of the senate. They were, therefore, not taken by surprise when he took the seat of speaker. They did not object when he took his seat. They obeyed his announcement to proceed to the representative hall by following him with all the other senators. When they arrived at the hall, Mr. Watson took his seat as president of the joint assembly without objection from any quarter. He conducted the election. There were many ballots, and there were 28 in which Mr. Du Pont received 15 votes, or just one-half the votes cast in all, counting Mr. Watson. At the end of each of these ballots or votes the announcement was made by the presiding officer that Mr. Du Pont had received 15 votes and all others 15; that no person having received a majority another vote would be taken. And in this way and in this exact state of the vote 27 other votes or ballotings were taken in order that the assembly might have the opportunity of casting a majority for some person.

During all this time and when all these announcements were made of "no election" and for proceeding to another vote, not one senator, and they were all present, not one representative, and they were all present, made any objection either to Mr. Watson's presiding or voting. No one claimed that an election had been completed. It was only after this last vote or ballot was taken, and when the joint assembly was about to adjourn, that one man alone presented a protest denying Mr. Watson's right to sit and vote as a senator, and he did not think enough of his protest to have it put on the journal, and it is not on the journal of either house. Is not that true?

Mr. GRAY. That is true.

Mr. GEORGE. This is strong and conclusive evidence of the construction put on the constitution of Delaware, not by the mere expressing of an opinion, but by the solemn performance of official acts, which could not have been performed except on the construction that Mr. Watson's seat was not vacant nor his power and duties as senator suspended.

I note this only on the question of construction, showing, as it conclusively does, that there was in such action a construction that there was no suspension of the power of Mr. Watson as senator. This should end the controversy. Hereafter I will show that these acts were actual, legal, technical adjudications in favor of Mr. Watson's right to vote.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. GEORGE. I will, with the understanding, as I have a little more to say on this very interesting case, that I shall be entitled to take the floor to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine morning business and finish, as I think I can then do in a very short time.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] kindly yields to me a moment, in order that I may again renew the notice I have given for the last two days, that when the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] concludes his remarks to-morrow, if he does so conclude, I shall then ask the Senate to take up the resolution providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, of course, with the understanding that no appropriation bill will then be ready for the action of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6425) for the relief of Clifton R. Anderson was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 159) to authorize the Secretary of War to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Portland, Me., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMPILATION OF MESSAGES, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair) laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the concurrent resolution passed by Congress on the 27th day of July, 1894, authorizing and providing for the Compilation of all the Annual, Special, and Veto Messages, Proclamations, and Inaugural Addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894, inclusive, be, and the same is hereby, amended, so as to strike out of the resolution the words, "to 1894, inclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "to March 4, 1897," so as to require said compilation to be brought down to the ending of the present Administration: and the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to apply so much of the money appropriated for public printing and binding for the current year, in addition to the $600 heretofore appropriated or set apart for that purpose, as may be found necessary to complete the copying of the said messages and other documents for printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing, in the absence of objection.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be now considered. I am authorized by the Committee on Printing to make the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on concurring in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill without displacing the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before submitting the request of the Senator from Iowa, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 102) directing the Secretary of the Interior to open for public entry all of that certain part of the public domain in the State of Utah known as the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Post-Office appropriation bill be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6614) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 7, after line 8, to insert:

For additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamers sailing from San Francisco to New Zealand and New South Wales by way of Honolulu, all mails made up in the United States destined for the Hawaiian Islands, the Australian colonies, New Caledonia, and the islands in the Pacific Ocean, $80,000: Provided, That said additional sum with the sum now paid shall not exceed $2 per mile, as authorized by act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce."

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, yesterday I made the statement that I did not believe there has been an increase in the facilities of transportation, increase of expedition, or any advantage whatever to the mail service by the giving of the subsidies which have followed the legislation enacted by the Fifty-first Congress. I should like the opportunity of pointing out a little more in detail what has been the effect of the course of subsidizing steamships entered upon by that Congress. I begin by renewing the statement after such examination as I have been able to make during the evening and this morning. This appropriation was reported yesterday or the day before. The bill at least was laid upon our desks yesterday, and no opportunity had previously been afforded for its examination, and my attention had not in any wise been called to this proposal for a new subsidy.

The fact is, that the United States has paid and is now called upon—beginning last year with the operation of a contract then taking effect—to pay a sum which will probably be not less than $600,000 or $700,000 more for the transportation of the mails than would otherwise have been necessary to pay, and I think I state it moderately when I say that there has not been gained to the transportation routes upon the sea a single line which adds anything of increased facility. There has not been gained an hour's increase of expedition or any improvement or increase in any wise whatever to the mail service, and none is likely to ensue from any of the contracts which have been made. We have simply paid more to the ships which were employed because they happened to be owned by Americans. Previously to that time American ships had a special preference by which they enjoyed better payment than any other vessels, and better payment than was necessary in order to the carriage of the mails. It was by a practice which took full effect while I was in the Department, and partly due to my order.

Now, I wish to point out a little something upon this subject from the reports. In the year 1887 the total cost of the foreign mail service, not only including all the payments made to vessels for transportation of the mails, but all payments on account of balances to foreign countries and for our share of the expense of the International Bureau, was $480,105.39. The amount proposed by the pending bill to be paid for the transportation of the foreign mails is $1,750,000, besides an appropriation of $120,000 for balances due foreign countries and the $80,000 proposed to be added to the Oceanic Steamship Company, thus making $1,950,000 as the cost of our foreign mail service instead of $480,000.

Some increase, and a large increase, in the cost of the service has arisen by reason of the increased weights of mails which have been transported. In some instances, upon some lines, the increased weight of mails has been considerable.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What year did the Senator from Wisconsin say it was $480,000?

Mr. VILAS. In 1887.

Mr. ALLISON. Does that include the items which are included in this appropriation?

Mr. VILAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I will be glad if the Senator will read them.

Mr. VILAS. I took that year because I was driven, for want of time, to take statements with which I was familiar. I read from the Postmaster-General's report of 1887, pages 59 and 60, in which the items are stated as follows:

For transatlantic service	$314,380.32
For transpacific service (including inward service on certain mails from nonconventional countries)	38,465.49
For West Indian, Mexican, Canadian, Newfoundland, and Central and South American service	51,416.44
For the postal agencies at Shanghai and Panama	2,392.20
For Panama Railway service	6,018.74
For foreign closed mails	24,773.86
	437,447.05

From this sum is deducted the amount settled for in payment of balances to foreign countries, $11,628.52, and there is to be added, for I included it all, the expense charged to the appropriation for payment of balances to foreign countries and for our share of the expenses of the International Bureau, $54,286.86, making the total cost of the service as given—that is for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887.

The Senator from Iowa will perceive that it covers the entire service.

Mr. ALLISON. It does, and I simply call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the amount paid to foreign countries for the intermediary transit of closed mails of United States origin last year was $236,000 instead of the small sum named, and that in return the amount received was $196,000, showing an enormous increase in the foreign mail service itself.

Mr. VILAS. I had already stated a very large increase in the mail service, but I was next about to call attention to something of what the increase of expense is.

The increase in the transatlantic service was so great that the entire payment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, was $607,-698.47. That large increase in the cost of the transatlantic service was due in some part to the fact that the American line—the steamers belonging to the International Steamship Company—received under the order of which I have spoken, an order which discriminates in favor of the American steamship companies, the sum of $220,257.58 for their carriage.

The rule was this—it is the rule of the statute: There can be paid to foreign vessels what is known as, or what was called in the statute, sea postage only. There is no longer any sea postage, and hence for many years the payment to foreign vessels of the amount provided by the term sea postage has been regulated by the allowance made by the International Postal Union of 5 francs per kilogram, which is approximately 50 cents per pound.

Let me just show how much the International Steamship Company gained by the allowance to them of the discriminating rate of sea and inland postage. That company carried in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, a total of 281,195,180 grams, of which only about 50,000,000 was the weight of letters, and 230,000,000 the weight of printed matter. The total, in the report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails, in grams, amounts, when expressed in pounds, to 611,200 or thereabouts, in round numbers, or about 305½ tons. Thus for the transportation of 305½ tons of mail the International Navigation Company received $220,257.68.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is for the last year?

Mr. VILAS. For the year ended June 30, 1895.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator what page he is reading from?

Mr. VILAS. I read from page 440 of the consolidated report of the Postmaster-General.

Now, take the Cunard Company. I will omit the grams and the computations. The Cunard Company, on the other hand, carried for us 658½ tons, in round numbers, more than twice as much as the International Company carried, and received in payment $144,752.11. In other words, stated briefly, for carrying more than twice the matter they received about two-thirds as much as the International or American Company, such being the effect of the discrimination made by the Post-Office Department between American and foreign vessels, permissible under the statute, between the sea, and sea and inland rate.

On the 12th of October last the contract made in pursuance of the legislation of the Fifty-first Congress took effect, and the International Navigation Company henceforth, for ten years from that date, will enjoy a payment of $4 per mile for their carriage of the mails. The total sum allowed to them and included in the estimates for which this appropriation is to be made is $757,328. Thus it is now contracted for by the United States that they shall pay to the two ships of that company, for I believe there are but two——

Mr. GORMAN. Four.

Mr. VILAS. To the four ships of that company, or whatever the number is, over $150,000 more for such of the mails as they shall carry to Europe than was paid last year for the services of all the ships of all the lines available from this country to Europe.

Mr. President, in the year 1887 there was addressed to the head of the Post-Office Department a letter which was signed—I have a printed copy of it here—by the great importers, merchants, and bankers of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco, New Orleans, Cincinnati, St. Paul, Buffalo, Louisville, and Charleston, in which they expressed their obligations to the Department for the measure of efficiency which had been secured in the transportation of the foreign mails to Europe, and urged upon the Postmaster-General that he should use his good offices to secure from the Governments of the Old World the adoption of the same system which was prevailing at that time in this country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. VILAS. In one moment, if the Senator please. Let me add that by a curious change in the relation of affairs, the name of the same distinguished gentleman who subsequently, under the legislation of Congress, made these contracts for subsidies was signed to that communication addressed to the Department, the Hon. John Wanamaker.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wished to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin when I rose a moment ago to the fact that the mail service is not all. Four at least of the vessels of the International Navigation Company are fitted to carry guns and are convertible into cruisers on demand of the Government.

Mr. VILAS. I suppose there is not a ship that sails across the seas which might not carry guns.

Mr. HAWLEY. Ah! But if the Senator will excuse me——

Mr. VILAS. But with what success they would carry them would depend upon the fleetness with which they could escape.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Wisconsin will allow me to answer that the Paris and New York, which were built by the British Government, are heavily built, to carry strong guns, as are the two new ships built under contract with our Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Connecticut does not mean to say that the Paris and New York were built by the British Government?

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not mean to say that they were built by the British Government.

Mr. FRYE. Under inspection of the British Government.

Mr. HAWLEY. Under inspection of and contract with the British Government. The two other vessels of the International Navigation Company were built under the same policy and of the same style. There is no question about their carrying guns.

Mr. VILAS. Those vessels may be able to carry guns.

Mr. HAWLEY. They are able.

Mr. VILAS. Undoubtedly they are; but neither one of them would be of any service in war beyond such service as it could render in transportation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me——

Mr. VILAS. And will it be suggested by my distinguished friend the Senator from Connecticut that the fact that those vessels were built so that guns might be put upon them is a sufficient consideration to the United States for paying them $500,000 a year extra for carrying the mails?

Mr. HAWLEY. Perhaps the Senator will accept as authority upon questions of that sort the British Government if he will not accept our Government. Great Britain does not make any mistake in what she does about fighting on the water. She has not done so for several hundred years, and she thinks it very profitable indeed to make contracts for these most powerful steamers fitted for carrying guns. She knows she can convert them into other useful service besides transporting cattle and horses and soldiers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Wisconsin did not mean $500,000?

Mr. VILAS. One moment. I wish to make one remark. The example of Great Britain is proffered to us.

Mr. HAWLEY. I commend it to the Senator because he is supposed to be a free trader and Great Britain is his idol sometimes. I commend it to him thinking the example of that great free-trade country would have some influence with him.

Mr. VILAS. I am very willing, I hope, to take instruction by the experience of any country and by the wisdom of any man, but upon this subject I should certainly be very far from expressing my own opinion if I did not say I believe all that has been done by Great Britain has been done from a very different motive than the building up of her navy.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Did the Senator mean to say that $500,000 a year is paid to this line?

Mr. VILAS. The amount which is contracted to be paid will be found stated on page 11 of the report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails. It is $757,328 a year, more than $500,000 in excess of what was paid to the same line under the discriminating rule which awarded to them a vastly greater share of payment than is awarded to other vessels which carry twice the amount of mail.

Let me say another thing. What is to be the result of making this contract for mail service with the American line of steamships to Great Britain? If the Post-Office Department limited the mail carriage to those vessels there would be a roar from the business men in this country that would be heard here, and consequently the Post-Office Department does not make that contract an exclusive one. They do not propose to withdraw the employment of other vessels. On the contrary, a telegram from the Department to-day informs me, in answer to that inquiry, that—

Mails for Great Britain are sent, in addition to International Line steamers, by vessels of the Cunard, White Star, North German Lloyd, and Hamburg-American lines. The Cunarders take "prints" as well as letters, but the White Star, North German Lloyd, and Hamburg-American take only prints which are "specially addressed." Heretofore all prints as well as letters were sent by the fastest steamer.

The rule has been for a long time established in the Post-Office Department that it should avail itself of that vessel which among those about to sail was sure to reach the destination quickest, and every vessel that thus could carry mail of any one or all of those great lines of steamers was in employment. They were all eager to take it. They all desire that carriage, for there is no freight, if you term mails freight in any sense, there is no carriage which probably pays them so well for the amount of space and trouble and care as the carriage of the mails at sea postage only. Therefore it will become necessary for us, in order to enjoy the advantage of the other vessels, to pay in addition to what is paid the American Steamship Line the sum, so near as I can make the calculation in a moment, of about $350,000 or $400,000 if they carry the same, thus making the cost for the transportation of the mails to Europe over eleven hundred thousand dollars or thereabouts—perhaps twelve hundred thousand dollars. Now, let me call attention to another illustration.

Mr. GRAY. What was the amount paid last year?

Mr. VILAS. The total cost of the carriage to Europe was $607,000. I can not readily separate those to England alone, which is by far the greater part.

Mr. GRAY. I meant to Europe.

Mr. VILAS. Six hundred and seven thousand six hundred and ninety-eight dollars and forty-six cents, to be exact.

Now, let me draw attention to another case to illustrate the subsidies. There is a route from New York to Mexico, and upon that route during the last fiscal year there were carried 649 pounds of letters and 8,343 pounds of prints, making a carriage during the entire year of 3 tons of mail matter. Let me first state the payment for that mail transportation. There was paid the sum of $130,104—about $43,000 a ton.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator state the amount again? What was the total amount paid?

Mr. VILAS. One hundred and thirty thousand one hundred and four dollars.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me to ask if the Department was obliged to pay that sum?

Mr. VILAS. These are contracts made in pursuance of the legislation of the Fifty-first Congress, by which a dollar a mile was agreed to be paid to the vessels for sailing on these routes whether they had a newspaper, a letter, or not, so that they were ready to carry what trivial mail was desired to be carried.

Why is the mail small? Because the mail for Mexico is mainly transported over our railroads. The steamship that carries the mails to Vera Cruz touches at two other ports on the Mexican coast, the farthest being Tuxpau, I think. They have to lay down at those ports such mails as are addressed thither, mainly such as relates to their cargoes, but little besides.

Mr. HILL. How long do those contracts continue?

Mr. VILAS. The contract with that company lasts for five years from the 1st day of October, 1892; the others for ten years.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator state the number of tons once more?

Mr. VILAS. The number of tons carried by the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company during the last fiscal year was about 3 tons.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is mistaken, I think. Will he state the number of pounds?

Mr. VILAS. There were 649 pounds of letter mail and 8,343 pounds of prints. Yes, I made a slight mistake. It would be over 4 tons; nearly 4½.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the Senator state that that is equivalent to 256,000 ordinary 2-cent letters. I should like to have him state it both ways.

Mr. VILAS. I have not made the computation. At the half-ounce rate for foreign letters it would be about 32 to the pound of letter mail.

Mr. HOAR. Then it would be twice as many.

Mr. VILAS. It would be 32 letters to the pound of letter mail.

Mr. HOAR. Then it would be over 600,000 ordinary 2-cent letters, unless I have made a mistake.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator will make a very much larger computation if he will compute the number of letters to Great Britain. The total number of letters may of course correspond with the weight. If the Senator wishes to make statement of a large number of letters carried, let him make the computation of the mails to Great Britain, where there are carried, perhaps, 50 tons by one line and perhaps 100 tons by another. There is a vast amount of letters carried in our mails; they run into the trillions when you estimate the whole. It takes a great many letters at 2 cents apiece to make $70,000,000, which is in round numbers approximately our postal receipts, the greater share of which comes from letters.

Take another case. The same company by contract carries mail from New York to Habana. The quantity they transport is about the same, about 4½ tons; and they receive under that contract from New York to Habana $73,476.

The Superintendent of Foreign Mails in his report has made a comparison of the cost of the service on those lines under the present method and under the former. Let me give it in a word. By those two routes there were paid under these contracts last year $203,580. The cost for the service rendered, if computed at full sea and inland postage, would have been but $3,832.96; so that the excess of cost on those two routes paid to the Cuban Mail Steamship Company is $199,747.04. I should like to say to the Senator from Connecticut that those vessels do not carry guns and were not made to carry guns. They are the same ships that were in our service when this system was adopted.

Let me add another statement. Except for the International Company, there is not a new ship on the sea in pursuance of these subsidies. They are the same old ships, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] aptly says. There were two new ships built by the Oceanic Company which, as it would appear from the remarks yesterday, would not be able to survive if they did not have an increased subsidy. But the keels for those ships were laid before the act of Congress was passed, and when the Department proposed to put an inspector on them with reference to contracting, under the act of the Fifty-first Congress, they declined. They said, "No; these ships are being built on our own account and are not subject to the inspection of the Government." And no contract was made with that company. So those two ships, though new ships in the service, were not built in pursuance of the subsidies, nor does that line receive subsidy, though especially large rate of pay. They were built by enterprising, active business men who wanted to make money by carrying goods upon the seas, and they like to carry the mails, as I said before, because it is the most profitable carriage they enjoy, except possibly (and I am not sure that exception would hold out upon critical examination) jewels and money.

There was another contract which was made, the contract given to the Red D Line, which sails from this country to Venezuela. That line would have received last year $14,783.74 under the allowance of sea and inland postage. It received under its contract $79,030, being an excess over the service rendered at that special rate of $64,246.26.

There are three routes—to Venezuela, to Habana, and to Mexico. The first is necessary to us—that is, transportation by sea is the only way in which we can send our mails to Venezuela. To Mexico and to Habana the sea service is practically of no value. The two companies operating those three routes "struck" in 1885 when the Post-Office Department decided that, under the peculiar terms of the appropriation just then made, it was impossible to award a subsidy, and they refused their services to the Government. In consequence, a service was established to Cuba which shortened the transportation by a day and a half, and gave the same number of trips all the year and half the year an additional trip per week. Yet those lines (identically the same, I think, without a new ship), which then refused their service to the Government in order to compel its submission (it was a mistaken effort), are favored now by these contracts to the extent of being awarded $265,000 for transportation of the mails over and above the amount due under the liberal rule of sea and inland postage always paid to American vessels since 1885.

Mr. President, that illustrates the beauty of the contract subsidy service for carrying the mails. What do we derive from these increased subsidies? No expedition. Let me pause there for a moment. I believe some figures were made since the change of this service for the purpose of showing a gain of time. I inquired into those figures carefully. How was it done? Under the old system they counted from post-office to post-office. Under the contract, which requires them to sail from port to port, they counted from the extreme edge of the port to the extreme edge, from light-house to light-house, and thus made an appearance of expedition in time without an alteration of a minute in actual fact.

Then, inquiring what have we gained, I say no expedition, no increased lines, no additional vessels, no benefit, save only that which the Senator from Connecticut called my attention to, anticipating what I intended to have done myself, the fact that on two of the ships which sail to Europe there was a stipulation in respect to strength of construction, probably quite in accord with the interest of the vessel owners, for such strength as would enable the United States, in case it should at any time seize those ships for its own uses, to put guns upon them. Of course the guns would be of no service if they encountered a vessel of war. They would only be of service in case they encountered a vessel unprepared to contest the supremacy of the sea with them.

Mr. President, having pointed out the character and efficiency of the contract service which we now have, I think it would be wise for Congress, instead of promoting subsidies, to interpose at once in this bill a direction to the Post-Office Department to make no further contracts of a subsidy nature.

But, sir, this bill proposes, and it was to that point I began the argument, to add to the Oceanic Steamship Company the sum of $80,000 a year as further compensation besides what they now enjoy. They now receive $30,000 a year, not by contract, but by an order of the Post-Office Department, esteemed within the law, to estimate the sea and inland postage at a fixed sum. Probably it is a sum in excess of what by a strict computation they would receive, but they get by that order on that estimation a fixed yearly sum of $60,000. Last year there was a deduction of $5,000 from the amount, to compensate five other vessels which made five trips in carrying the mails. Their trips are, I believe, 13 in number during the year. I think they sail a little oftener than once a month. They are well paid. The compensation awarded to them is a generous one. For what reason should we increase it? The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was asked by me to state that reason, and he said it was because we were in danger of losing that service unless we made this additional subsidy.

Mr. HILL. Are any increased facilities promised?

Mr. VILAS. None whatever.

Mr. HILL. Any increased service of any kind?

Mr. VILAS. None whatever. It is so stated in the bill:

For additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails, etc.

As I was remarking, the reason, and I believe I state correctly, the only reason, which the Senator from Iowa gave us was that we should lose that service or were in danger of losing that service if we did not make this additional payment.

Mr. ALLISON. And that it is the only line from San Francisco to those points.

Mr. VILAS. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I stated it, but I understand that to be the fact.

Mr. VILAS. Yes; and therefore you meant to imply that we were in danger of losing the service, because it was said a rival line had been subsidized by the English Government from Vancouver to the Australian colonies. So the Senator interrupted my remarks to add "it is to secure service and not to increase it," which stated exactly his reason, as it appears in the RECORD.

Mr. HILL. Is there a contract now?

Mr. VILAS. I hold in my hand the annual report of the post and telegraph department of New Zealand, the report made last July, in which it is stated that the San Francisco service (between the colonies and San Francisco) has been renewed for three years from November, 1894, in terms of the following resolutions approved by the house of representatives last session:

Resolved, 1. That this house empowers the Government to arrange for a renewal of the San Francisco mail service for a period not exceeding three years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What year was this made?

Mr. VILAS. It was last year.

Mr. ALLISON. In 1894.

Mr. VILAS. The contract began in November, 1894. I shall not stop to read all the provisions, except they add:

2. That the basis of the payment for conveyance of mails from New Zealand shall be a rate of 11 shillings per pound on the net weight of the letters conveyed.

3. That all payments or contributions from Great Britain or other countries shall be receivable by the contractors, the colony's direct liability to be for payment of its outward letters only.

Mr. FRYE. Does that report give the net amount paid by New Zealand to this American line for carrying the mail?

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I will state the amount paid, as I understand it, by the British Government. It amounts to $5,769 per voyage, while we pay $4,617.

Mr. VILAS. I can not give the exact cost. I could compute it only on the weight of our mails, which I have, but not upon the mails from New Zealand.

Mr. FRYE. I have had an impression that it is about $100,000 a year that New Zealand paid.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, no; I do not think it amounts to so much as that, but if the Senator from California is correct——

Mr. WHITE. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I say I understood that New Zealand paid to this line about $100,000 a year.

Mr. PERKINS. New Zealand is paying the Oceanic Steamship Company five thousand and some odd dollars (my colleague has the exact figures, which I gave to him) for 13 trips per year made by the Oceanic Steamship Company.

Mr. VILAS. That would be about $65,000.

Mr. PERKINS. We are now receiving $60,000 a year from the American Government, while the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company is receiving eighteen thousand and some odd hundred dollars per trip subsidy from the English Government and the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and the New Zealand colonies.

Mr. FRYE. About $65,000, then, New Zealand pays.

Mr. VILAS. Do I understand the Senator from California to have personal knowledge of the matter? He spoke of "we." Is the Senator interested in the company?

Mr. PERKINS. I am interested as an American citizen in fostering American shipping as against English shipping. England, France, and Russia last year gave $18,000,000 in postal subsidies. My friend from Wisconsin would not give one dollar to American shipping, excepting the postage, if he had his way.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, it was by my order that we made the full measure of statutory discrimination possible to be made in favor of American vessels at the time when I was in the Department, and awarded sea and inland postage to American vessels as supposed to be within the then expectation of Congress.

Mr. FRYE. What was the pay before the Senator issued that order?

Mr. VILAS. To some sea and inland postage, to others sea postage only.

Mr. FRYE. And the Senator did not issue the order, did he, until Congress had repealed the two statutes which authorized the Post-Office Department to seize any American vessel, detain her at her port, and compel her to take the mails for sea postage?

Mr. VILAS. Yes, sir; without the slightest reference——

Mr. FRYE. It was after that time that the Senator, as Postmaster-General, issued the order.

Mr. VILAS. Before that, because the order was made before Congress assembled—after I went into the Department.

Mr. FRYE. That would be before the Senator became Postmaster-General, would it not?

Mr. VILAS. I think not.

Mr. FRYE. My recollection is that we repealed those statutes before the Senator became Postmaster-General.

Mr. VILAS. The action had not the slightest reference whatever to that, and there never has been a time when an American vessel, being about to sail on its journey, was not desirous of carrying the mails for the compensation which was given, and I always acknowledge the earnestness of its desire to get as much more as it could.

Mr. President, the New Zealand post-office report adds that the London post-office agreed to continue these payments in aid of the service until 1897, and the subsidy of £4,000 a year now paid by the Government of New South Wales is also to be continued, subject to the amount being annually appropriated by Parliament.

Mr. WOLCOTT. To the same steamship company, the Oceanic?

Mr. VILAS. The same steamship company, the Oceanic Company.

Mr. President, let me say with reference to that, in a word, that this entirely disposes of and answers the apprehension that we should at once lose the services of this company if we were to refrain from giving it an additional $80,000 a year. We are giving it, if the Senator from California is correct, about the same sum that New Zealand is giving.

Mr. WHITE. Thirteen thousand pounds a year.

Mr. VILAS. Sixty thousand dollars a year, as against 13 trips at about $5,000 each a year, according to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. About $65,000.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator any idea of the comparison between the mails of New Zealand and those of the United States of America carried on those ships?

Mr. VILAS. I do not know which way the heavier mail is carried, whether from New Zealand or from this country, but the great service which is conducted by those ocean lines between San Francisco and Auckland is to the Australian colonies, because that is the shortest route by which they can communicate with the mother country, England. The closed mails of England are put on our cars in New York and delivered on board of these ships at San Francisco. On the other hand, the closed mails from the Australian colonies are delivered at San Francisco, transported to New York, and put on vessels for England. I have not the figures of the weights of the mails that are transmitted from Australia—perhaps they are obtainable—but, in comparison to the advantage we derive, theirs is almost like communication with the whole foreign world as against an inconsiderable fraction of it to us. Of course, the colonies of Australia, New Zealand, New South Wales, and the others must maintain a mail service with England; they must have an establishment in some way, and it would not, in their case, be a subsidy whatever its necessary cost. If they can not procure it for less money than they actually pay, it is strictly mail pay, the least pay they could procure the mail carried for, in no sense subsidy; and that is precisely what they are continuing. They are not subsidizing; they are hiring. We are not now subsidizing; we are hiring, but we are paying a generous compensation to the laborer who enjoys the hire.

I do not care, Mr. President, to take the time of the Senate any longer. I desired only to point out a few of the reasons which seem to me to stand against our adoption of this amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] a question in connection with the matters which were brought up by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], having no immediate reference to this amendment.

The Senator from Wisconsin dwelt upon the amount involved in this bill as payments for transatlantic service. I want to ask the Senator from Iowa if the amount appropriated this year for the transatlantic service is in excess of the amount appropriated last year?

Mr. ALLISON. It is in excess of the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator give me about the amount of the excess?

Mr. ALLISON. The amount proposed to be appropriated this year is $1,750,000, and the amount appropriated for the current year was $1,600,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Was the attention of the Senator from Iowa and the attention of the Committee on Appropriations called to the fact that the postal business between this country and Europe is less this year than it was last year? In other words, that our mail communication between this country and Europe, both in the form of letters and in the form of parcels, is falling off, not increasing; that in 1894, referring to the report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails, the aggregate weight was 852,068 pounds, and in 1895, 805,017 pounds; and the amount of other articles carried was within a few pounds of the same in 1894 and in 1895. I ask the Senator if the amounts are increased because the business is less, thus making the receipts from postage less?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Wisconsin partially stated the reason for the increase, namely, that the contracts which the Senator named will be paid next year, which of course will increase the cost of this service.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What contracts?

Mr. ALLISON. The contracts to which the Senator from Wisconsin alluded, with the International Steamship Company.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Were not those contracts in force last year?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe not.

Mr. FRYE. Only partially. There were only two ships last year, and now two more have been added.

Mr. ALLISON. Now we have four ships, instead of two.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We pay these ships for carrying the mails $14,564 every trip they make; that is, one ship each week. That is what we paid in 1895. Are we going to pay more than that per trip this year?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not; but we have to pay for the service of four ships instead of two.

Mr. FRYE. Two more have been added.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I find in the report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails:

Route No. 57, "O. M. S.," New York to Southampton, 52 trips of 3,641 miles=189,332 statute miles, at $4..... $757,328

Mr. ALLISON. That is for the current year?

Mr. WOLCOTT. For last year.

Mr. ALLISON. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. WOLCOTT. From page 445 of the last report of the Postmaster-General. The $757,328 would amount to $14,564 a trip. Now, do I understand the Senator, because the company have two new ships, that their compensation is to be doubled?

Mr. ALLISON. It will not be doubled if the amount the Senator now states is the correct amount.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am reading from page 445 of the report of the Postmaster-General. Will the Senator from Iowa kindly tell me how much the increase will be?

Mr. ALLISON. It will not be doubled.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the amount increased; and if so, to what extent, because there are two more ships?

Mr. FRYE. It will be increased.

Mr. ALLISON. The figures given by the Senator were made for the current year. If the Senator's statement is correct, the report for 1895 shows a total estimate of $607,698.47 for transatlantic service.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator is correct. I see that the amount of $757,328 is the estimate for the coming year.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And that is proposed to be increased because there are two additional ships?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; because there are two additional ships.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If I may be enlightened at the expense of the time of the Senate for a moment further, I ask the Senator in what proportion are the payments to be increased because there are two new ships?

Mr. ALLISON. In proportion to the number of ships used.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We now pay for one trip per week, and the line always ran one ship. Are we now to pay for one additional ship per week?

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senator from Colorado that the contract does not go into effect until October, and that makes a difference.

Mr. VILAS. I will state——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ALLISON. I do so, that this matter may be thoroughly understood.

Mr. VILAS. I will call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to some figures right under his eye which will relieve him. The current year, for which $1,600,000 was appropriated, is this fiscal year, to end with the coming month of June. During that year for the first time the subsidy contract on the Atlantic became operative. Those vessels began on October 12 last. The compensation paid for the preceding fiscal year the Senator will find stated on page 10 of the Superintendent's report, at a total cost of $1,173,000. So that the appropriation for the current fiscal year, made in the last Congress, took into view the beginning of the contract service at one trip a week for transatlantic service, and inasmuch as it was for only about nine months of the year, the amount appropriated was not as much as will be necessary for the ensuing year.

Let me add right there that the steamship companies were not willing to accept, under their contracts, the claim of the Post-Office Department that the compensation per mile was for a nautical mile; and they have succeeded in obtaining a construction that we are to measure on the sea the statute mile, whereby they increase about one-sixth the compensation which it was supposed would be paid them.

Mr. GORMAN. Who made that construction?

Mr. VILAS. I will not undertake to say, but it is in my mind that it was the Attorney-General of the United States, or some attorney-general in the Department perhaps. I shall not undertake to be specific about it.

Mr. ALLISON. It appears, Mr. President, that this additional appropriation made for the Oceanic Steamship Company has led, and perhaps will lead, to a general discussion respecting the propriety of paying subsidies. Anticipating that some Senator will in a few minutes move to adjourn, in order to facilitate the consideration of this bill I ask that the Secretary go on and read the remainder of the bill, which will take but a little time, and that the pending amendment may be passed over for consideration when the Senate is fuller than it is now. I hope there will be no objection to that request.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether it is designed to press the Oceanic Steamship matter to a vote to-night?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not. I have just asked that it might be passed over; and I wish to state now that I desire that the consideration of the bill shall be concluded to-morrow, and hope that the Senate will then stay in session until it is completed, especially if we are to adjourn over Friday, as I understand is suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa, that the pending amendment be passed over and the remainder of the bill proceeded with? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 21, on page 7. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General," at the top of page 8, to insert:

For rent of office for use of the agent of the Post-Office Department to supervise the distribution of stamps of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 8, after line 22, to strike out:

Mail depredations and post-office inspectors: For pay of post-office inspectors and clerks, $176,093.66.

For per diem allowance to inspectors in the field while actually traveling on business of the Department, at the rate of $3 per day (exclusive of Sundays except in cases of emergency), $90,000.

For incidental expenses, including prosecution of official investigations, office rent, telegrams, etc., $13,000.

For the allowance to post-office inspectors (excepting those receiving salaries of $2,500 per annum) of such items of actual and necessary personal expense incurred in the discharge of their official duties as may be in excess of the per diem of $3 allowed by law, upon presentation and approval of vouchers covering the total expenditure for personal expenses for the dates for which such excess may be claimed; or, if the exigencies of the service render the taking of vouchers impracticable or inexpedient, the sworn statement of the inspector reciting the objects, amounts of and necessity for such expenditures, may be accepted in lieu of vouchers, $17,000; in all, $296,093.66.

And insert:

For mail depredations and post-office inspectors, $300,000: Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this amount may be expended for fees to United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of courts, and special counsel necessarily employed in prosecuting civil suits instituted by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, through the Solicitor of the Treasury, against the sureties on the official bonds of late postmasters, as provided for by section 292, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "twenty-five"; so as to make the clause read:

For payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 2, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 1, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL, BIG OYSTER BED SHOAL, NEW JERSEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 55) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near Big Oyster Bed Shoal, New Jersey, with Senate amendments.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF TITLE OF THE UNITED STATES TO CERTAIN TRACTS OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6408) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott, with a Senate amendment.

The bill and amendment of the Senate were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to hear the Senate amendment reported.

The SPEAKER. It has just been reported to the House, but the Clerk——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not the entire amendment. That was not the amendment that the Clerk read, as I understood.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk read the entire bill, and then read the Senate amendment, which will be again reported.

The Senate amendment was again reported.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL ON NORTH MANITOU ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5736) to authorize the Light-House Board to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Light-House Board be authorized to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan, heretofore appropriated for, and that the aforesaid board be authorized to lease the land necessary for the site of said aid to navigation until a perfect title to said site can be secured by condemnation proceedings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to indicate whether there is a report accompanying this bill?

Mr. MAHANY. The report——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The House will be in order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read or a statement made.

Mr. MAHANY. I ask that the Clerk read the report.

The report (by Mr. CORLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5736) entitled "A bill to authorize the Light-House Board to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass.

This is a bill authorizing the Light-House Board, pending the procuration of a perfect title by condemnation proceedings, to lease land necessary for the site for a light-house and fog signal heretofore authorized by Congress.

The interests of navigation demand the immediate construction of the light-house, and the passage of the bill is therefore approved by the Treasury Department, as shown by the accompanying letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your committee, dated February 26, 1896, inclosing House bill No. 5736, to authorize the Light-House Board to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan, and to lease land necessary for its site, pending the procuration of a perfect title by condemnation proceedings, with request for suggestions as to the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

This matter was referred to the Light-House Board, which reports that it approves the proposed bill and recommends its passage.

Respectfully, yours,

S. WIKE, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman whether the lease is to be made of land that it is proposed ultimately to condemn, and not to require a double construction?

Mr. MAHANY. Yes; it is.

Mr. MCMILLIN. So that the authorization given here would not require any double construction.

Mr. MAHANY. It is the same land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAHANY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF VETO MESSAGES, PROCLAMATIONS, AND INAUGURAL ADDRESSES OF PRESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the concurrent resolution passed by Congress on the 27th day of July, 1894, authorizing and providing for the Compilation of all the Annual, Special, and Veto Messages, Proclamations, and Inaugural Addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894, inclusive, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to strike out of the resolution the words "to 1894, inclusive" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to March 4, 1897," so as to require said compilation to be brought down to the ending of the present Administration; and the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to apply so much of the money appropriated for public printing and binding for the current year, in addition to the $600 heretofore appropriated or set apart for that purpose, as may be found necessary to complete the copying of the said messages and other documents for printing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

STAMFORD, CONN., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar the bill (S. 494) constituting Stamford, Conn., a subport of entry. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Stamford, Conn., be, and is hereby, constituted a subport of entry for the customs collection district of Fairfield, Conn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ABRAHAM O. WAUCOP.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5127) for the relief of Abraham O. Waucop.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to correct the military record of Abraham O. Waucop, late captain Company F, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, by removing the charge of absence without leave and dishonorable dismissal from the service, and grant him an honorable discharge as of the date of May 15, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due the said Abraham O. Waucop by virtue of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask if this bill has been considered at the Friday night session?

Mr. LAYTON. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that the charge against this man is that he was dismissed for absence without leave, and hence the Friday night session has no jurisdiction over the case. The report, Mr. Speaker, is very full and fair, and I ask careful attention to its reading.

Mr. CANNON. Is it a long report, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. LAYTON. No, sir; it is not very long.

The report (by Mr. GRIFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5127) for the relief of Abraham O. Waucop, having had the same under consideration, would report thereon as follows:

A similar bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, third session Fifty-third Congress, which committee recommended the passage of such bill.

The soldier's record, as set forth in such report, as found in Senate Report No. 1015, is stated to be as follows:

"It appears from the records of the War Department that the beneficiary, Abraham O. Waucop, was enrolled and mustered in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers (first three months' service), on the 17th day of April, 1861, and was honorably discharged, by reason of the muster out of said company, on the 27th day of August, 1861.

"That on the 10th day of September, 1861, he reenlisted in Company F, Benton Cadets, Missouri Volunteers, and served as such soldier until the 8th day of January, 1862, when he was honorably discharged by reason of the muster out of said company.

"That on the 22d day of August, 1862, he again reenlisted, and was mustered in and appointed first sergeant Company C, One hundred and eighteenth Ohio Volunteers, September 15, 1862. On March 1, 1863, he was promoted to second lieutenant, same company; on May 14, 1864, he was wounded at the battle of Resaca, Ga. On the 4th of March, 1865, he was promoted to captain and assigned to duty with Company F, same regiment.

"It is further noted in the report from the War Department that two days later (March 6) he absented himself from his command without authority, and thereafter his movements or whereabouts do not appear.

"That on the 28th day of March, 1865, his regimental commander reported that he had rendered himself unfit for duty and had been absent without leave since March 6, 1865, and recommended his dismissal from the service.

"That on the 17th day of April, 1865, the case was submitted to General Grant, who recommended that Captain Waucop be dishonorably dismissed from the service for absence without leave, whereupon he was summarily dismissed on the 24th of April, 1865, by Special Order No. 183, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office.

"It appears from the verified statements of two of his comrades, Sergeant Ailes and Captain Rhodes, of the same regiment (two reputable gentlemen), and the petition of the survivors of the regiment that at and during the time he is reported as being absent without leave (and for which he was afterwards dismissed from the service) he was actually unable to march with the regiment, and so informed the surgeon at the time. That he voluntarily rejoined his regiment after his recovery in the latter part of April, 1865, at Raleigh, N. C., where he was arrested and charges of absence without leave preferred against him. That at the time a copy of the charges was served on him he was given the alternative of resigning or standing a court-martial.

"That he refused to resign and demanded a trial and remained with the regiment for that purpose until the 15th day of May, 1865, when he was officially notified of his summary dismissal, by special order, as above stated. That no opportunity was ever given him to be heard in answer to said charges, and that he labored under the impression that he would be accorded a trial before a court-martial until the day he received official notice of his dismissal from the service.

"His honorable discharge, as provided in this bill, is also prayed for by substantially all of the surviving officers and members of the One hundred and eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry who served with him in the Army, about 100 in number."

In view of the facts, and especially in view of the fact that Mr. Waucop served his country faithfully and well for nearly four years, and placing special stress upon the manner in which he was summarily dismissed from the service without a hearing, and also that it appears that he never in fact deserted nor intended to desert, your committee feels that it would be but an act of simple justice to remove the stain of dishonor from his record by granting him an honorable discharge, and therefore adopts and approves the former report herein referred to and recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in addition to that full report, that a similar bill to this was passed during the last Congress, both through the House and the Senate, but failed to reach the President in time to receive his signature, from the fact that it was only passed on the 2d day of March.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LAYTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 319) for the relief of telegraph operators during the war of the rebellion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 517) for the relief of Thomas Williams, an employee of the Senate folding room, for injuries received while in the discharge of his duties in the year 1892—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1565) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howland—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 502) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 101) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the mutual account between the United States and the State of Florida, heretofore examined and stated by said Secretary under the authority of the Congress, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1075) for the relief of the heirs of D. Fulford—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 492) for the erection of a public building at Meriden, Conn.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1491) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 264) providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 154) to provide for the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1935) providing for a commission to negotiate with the Crow and Flathead Indians for the cession of portions of their respective reservations in the State of Montana—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MARCUS D. BOX.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2410) to amend an act increasing the pension of Marcus D. Box.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 8, 1895, be amended so as to read as follows: "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the invalid pension roll the name of Marcus D. Box, late a private of Company D, First Missouri Volunteer Infantry, afterwards First Missouri Artillery, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa whether this bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole at a pension session?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is simply to correct a bill which was passed by the last Congress. Owing to a mistake of my own there was a proviso inserted in that bill requiring proof of total blindness, my understanding at the time being that the man was totally blind; but instead of that the fact is that while one eyeball has run out, there is a faint glimmer of sight in the other. The effect of that state of facts has been to defeat that act which was passed in the last Congress for the relief of this claimant, and the purpose of this bill is to make that act operative. The man was drawing a pension for a wound in the head, but he has lost his sight.

Mr. TALBERT. The bill then would not necessarily come before a Friday night session for consideration?

Mr. LACEY. Not necessarily. The object of it is merely to amend an act passed in February, 1895.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A. P. BROWN.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $888.98 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa, for loss sustained by reason of burglary of postage stamps and money from said postoffice on January 9, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. I think we should have the report read, Mr. Speaker, or else there should be an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I can make a brief explanation, which I think will satisfy the gentleman and the House. The case is simply this: The postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa, in January, 1894, had his office burglarized and robbed of about $500 in money and about $900 in stamps. Subsequently $500 worth of stamps were recovered, and the guilty party was prosecuted, but the Department required the postmaster to settle for the remainder on the ground that he had not confided the combination of his safe to a second person, as he was required to do. The son of the postmaster was his deputy, but the postmaster himself was taken suddenly ill while his son was away, and when night came the clerk in charge, not understanding the combination, locked the safe with a day lock only, and that night burglars came and burglarized the office; their tools were found the next morning.

Mr. LOUD. Is there a report of a post-office inspector in this case?

Mr. PERKINS. The ground upon which the Department required the postmaster to pay for the stamps was negligence. It was charged that he had not confided the combination of the safe to another person; but the evidence in the case shows that that was a mistake, and that, in fact, he had complied with the rule in that respect.

Mr. LOUD. I ask the gentleman if there is any report of a post-office inspector in the case?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know that there is. I had a conversation with the Postmaster-General in regard to the matter myself, and he stated to me that no doubt it was a case of great personal hardship to this postmaster——

Mr. LOUD. I think it would be better to have a report from an inspector.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, you had better not object to this, Mr. LOUD—— [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman appealing to me personally in this way in this case. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Well, this is a very meritorious case.

Mr. LOUD. It may be, but this House has a right to have a report from the Post-Office officials upon all cases of this character. Perhaps the bill is right. I do not say that it is not; but the case has undoubtedly been investigated by a post-office inspector, and we ought to have his report.

Mr. PERKINS. When this one-legged soldier came to retire from the office the Department said that he must settle his accounts, and he paid over the money. There was nothing else for him to do under the circumstances. In fact, however, there was no ground for the charge of negligence against him, and there is really no suspicion of neglect of duty on his part. But, coming under the regulation of the Department requiring that the combination of the safe should be confided to a second person, it was held that he had been guilty of negligence because he had not done that, when in fact, as the evidence shows, he had done it.

Mr. LOUD. That is just the point I would like to know about, and I should like to hear the report of the post-office inspector who investigated the case.

Mr. PERKINS. The Committee on Claims has thoroughly investigated this matter and you have their report here.

Mr. LOUD. I would rather have the report of the post-office inspector who investigated it. It is very hard, Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman appeals to me personally, as he has done, to object to a bill of this character——

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman may make a demand upon me that it is perfectly impossible to comply with, but he can not clear himself by doing that.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say that this case has been investigated by a disinterested person, a post-office inspector, and we ought to have his report.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I must call for the regular order. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. ALLEN] is entitled to the floor on his pending amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman from Utah proceeds, I ask unanimous consent that we return for a moment to page 29, line 16, for the purpose of striking out the word "west," which has been inadvertently inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, that verbal amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I call for the reading of my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 52, strike out, after the word "Wyoming," the word "and" and insert after the word "Washington" the words "Colorado and Utah"; so as to make the clause read:

"Provided, That in the States of California, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Arizona, Wyoming, Washington, Colorado, and Utah there may be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $25 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $23 for township and $20 for section lines."

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is simply to place the State of Colorado and Utah upon the same footing as the States of California, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Wyoming, and Washington and the Territory of Arizona with respect to extra compensation for certain surveys in mountainous and heavily wooded sections of the country.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman why these two States were not inserted by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I can not answer that question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then I ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] why that was not done?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Utah will allow me to answer in his time——

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I will state that some years ago it was found that in the thickly timbered parts of Washington, Oregon, and California contracts for the surveys could not be made at the price fixed in the statute; and therefore the Commissioner of the General Land Office was authorized in his discretion to pay in those States the prices named in the bill. From time to time that provision has been extended to other States. The amendment proposes to extend it to Utah and Colorado. This proposition is now presented for the first time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether the amendment meets his approval?

Mr. CANNON. Well, yes and no, both; that is to say, I have no doubt there are some lands, not great in extent, in Idaho and Colorado where the Department can not get the surveys made for the statutory price. The case is the same with a great portion of the lands in Washington; there is quite a small quantity, I apprehend, of such lands in Utah and Colorado.

But I am not antagonizing the amendment; it can do no harm if there is honest administration. In other words, if the Commissioner of the General Land Office will not contract for the payment of this increased price except where it is necessary the provision is proper; if, on the other hand, there should be bad administration and the Commissioner of the General Land Office should make contracts at this advanced price where it is not necessary to do so, then this legislation would be unfortunate.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think the administration will be all right.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. The criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would apply to the whole appropriation, would it not?

Mr. CANNON. Well, to a greater or less extent. I do not care to antagonize the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I move to amend by striking out, in line 45, page 51, the words "two hundred and fifty thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and seventeen thousand four hundred and eighty."

I offer this amendment primarily for the purpose of obtaining information from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The estimate for 1897, under which this bill was doubtless drafted, called for an appropriation of $442,480 for this purpose. I find that the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, on account of these surveys, were $375,461.21. The appropriations for this purpose under this bill are $275,000. I should like to ascertain what is the cause of this great decrease in these appropriations for a matter which I apprehend is as essential as any other embraced in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. There is no decrease in fact. The appropriation for surveys of the public lands for the current year was $250,000; and in this bill it is the same, although there is an appropriation of $25,000 for the survey of private land claims, making all together $275,000.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. That I understand.

Mr. CANNON. That amount also was appropriated for the current year. Now, there was an appropriation of $100,000 for the current year for the survey of railroad land grants—an appropriation which has not been expended—and the Department does not ask for any further appropriation of that kind. This is a continuing appropriation. So that for the surveys of the lands proper the appropriation recommended by this bill is precisely the same amount as for the current year.

Mr. SAYERS. I should be glad to have the gentleman from Illinois state that though the appropriation of $100,000 was made for the survey of railroad lands, yet the railroad companies reimburse to the Treasury their proportion of that expenditure.

Mr. CANNON. I so understand.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. This is a very important matter, and it has not yet been satisfactorily explained. This House ought to know all about it. As I understand, the appropriation of $100,000 is a continuing appropriation under the law.

Mr. CANNON. I so understand.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Then it would be carried over to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

Mr. CANNON. It is only $100,000, but it does not lapse. It is a continuing appropriation until expended.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. How is it expended?

Mr. CANNON. I am quite sure I do not know; but no estimate is submitted in connection with it.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Very well, then, notwithstanding that explanation, you have still a discrepancy of $42,480 according to your report.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I did not catch on to the gentleman's point exactly. Now, touching this $100,000 the provision is:

And any money which shall be expended of such appropriation and reimbursed and paid into the Treasury is hereby reappropriated, and the said sum shall remain a continuing appropriation.

So that it can not be used for surveys of the railroad lands without reimbursement by the railroads as soon as expended and the law at once reappropriates it. So it is practically, until repealed, a continuing appropriation of $100,000, and whatever may have been expended out of it, there is just as much as when we commenced by way of reimbursement.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Then there still remains the $42,480 less than the amount recommended by the Department.

Mr. CANNON. Less than the amount recommended?
Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Yes.
Mr. CANNON. Oh, it is $150,000 less than the estimate?
Mr. WILSON of Idaho. No; as I understand your report, the estimate is $42,480 more than the total appropriation.
Mr. CANNON. No; the estimate was but $400,000 for surveying the public lands.
Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Well, I am reading from your report, on page 6, which shows that it is $442,480.
Mr. CANNON. There are some other items, the gentleman will find. I have a statement of the amounts here. The estimate for the surveys of the public lands was $400,000, and we recommend of the estimate the sum of $250,000.
Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Then do I understand that the appropriation is the same as last year?
Mr. CANNON. Precisely.
Mr. WILSON of Idaho. I withdraw the amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.
The Clerk read as follows:

For survey of private land claims in the States of Colorado, Nevada, and Wyoming, and in the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah, confirmed under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and for the resurvey of such private land claims heretofore confirmed as may be deemed necessary, $20,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ALLEN], who stepped out of the Hall temporarily, I ask to offer the amendment I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

On page 52, line 24, strike out the word "and," after the word "Nevada," and insert after the word "Wyoming" the words "and Utah." Also, in the twenty-fifth line, strike out the words "and Utah" and insert "and" after "Arizona."

Mr. SHAFROTH. The object of the amendment is simply to have Utah classed as a State instead of a Territory; the object being to place that State among the list of States instead of among the list of Territories.
Mr. CANNON. That is right.
The amendment was adopted.
The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $150,000, to be immediately available; $35,000 of which shall be expended west of the ninety-seventh meridian in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Texas, and the Territory of Oklahoma, and at least one-third of the remainder shall be expended west of the one hundred and third meridian: Provided, That hereafter in such surveys west of the ninety-fifth meridian elevations above a base level located in each area under survey shall be determined and marked on the ground by iron or stone posts or permanent bench marks, at least two such posts or bench marks to be established in each township or equivalent area, except in the forest-clad and mountain areas, where at least one shall be established, and these shall be placed, whenever practicable, near the township corners of the public-land surveys.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "surveys," in line 3, page 55, "and in the areas east of the ninety-fifth meridian at least one such post or bench mark shall be similarly established in each area, equivalent to the area of a township of the public-land surveys."

Mr. WHEELER. This will cost but very little money, the purpose being that when elevations shall be determined by a survey they shall be permanently marked. It is strictly in the line of economy——
Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion in the shape of a compromise?
Mr. WHEELER. What is it? If fair, I am willing to accept it.
Mr. CANNON. That by unanimous consent we agree to the amendment.
Mr. WHEELER. That is capital. I accept it. [Laughter.]
The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

For the preparation of the report of the mineral resources of the United States, $18,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman——
Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, page 55, amend by substituting the word "twenty" for the word "eighteen" after the words "mineral resources of the United States"; so as to read:
"For the preparation of the report of the mineral resources of the United States, $20,000."

Mr. CANNON. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the quickest way to dispose of this, being within the estimate, and as on investigation it seems to be proper, is to ask unanimous consent that it be adopted without discussion.
The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections and the preparation of report upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources of said sections, $35,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to make a verbal correction in line 2, on page 56. The word "report" should be "reports." I ask that the correction be made.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the modification will be made.
There was no objection.
Mr. SAYERS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he ask permission at the same time to authorize the Clerk to amend the totals of the various paragraphs.
Mr. CANNON. I think I have already secured permission to that extent. But in the event that I have not done so, I now ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be permitted to amend the totals of the paragraphs which are modified by the committee, either by increasing or decreasing the amounts.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For repairs to the buildings of the institution and for the furnishing of the new buildings provided for by act approved March 2, 1895, $3,000.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment at this point.
The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 3, on page 59, the following:

"HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

"For maintenance of the Howard University, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, the balance of which will be paid from donations and other sources, $27,500; for tools, materials, wages of instructors, and other necessary expenses of the industrial department, $3,000; for books for library, law library, bookcases, shelving, and fixtures, $900; for material and apparatus for chemical, physical, and natural history, and laboratory, $200; for improvement of grounds and repairs of buildings, $1,000; in all, $32,600: Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any teacher or professor of theology or religion, or to any chaplain in said university."

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, for many years an appropriation substantially similar to this has been made for the benefit of Howard University. It seems to me that this Congress ought not to withdraw that appropriation. While I do not desire to debate this proposition, I do desire to submit it to the House, feeling perfectly assured that it will not take this appropriation from that university.
The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

REINDEER FOR ALASKA.

For support of the reindeer station at Port Clarence, Alaska, and for the purchase and introduction of reindeer from Siberia for domestic purposes, $5,000.

Mr. PITNEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.
The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 11, page 59, after the word "dollars," the following new paragraph:

"UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

"For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission and the expenses of a commissioner, to be appointed by the President, to be immediately available, $2,000."

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state that this appropriation is urgently recommended by the Secretary of State, but the letter of transmittal, bearing the documents pertaining to the matter and containing the recommendation, was so late in arriving before Congress that it did not reach the Committee on Appropriations in time to be considered when this bill was being made up. I have in my hand a copy of this letter of transmittal, and if there is any question raised about it I will read the letter. Otherwise I will ask to have it embodied in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.
Mr. CANNON. The statement of the gentleman is correct.
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the letter referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey will be incorporated in the RECORD.
There was no objection.
The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 21, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before you, with a view to its consideration by the Congress, the report of the delegates of the United States to the Fifth International Prison Congress, which was held at Paris, France, in July, 1895.
It presents a comprehensive statement of all that transpired on that occasion, and contains much valuable information that might profitably be considered with a view to the alleviation of certain phases of human misery without sacrificing any of the absolute prerequisites to or guarantees of social order.

In connection with this report Gen. R. Brinkerhoff, president of the American delegation, has submitted to the Department, under date of the 19th instant, a request from the International Prison Commission, which is the executive and permanent arm of the congress, that the Government of the United States be represented by a delegate in its organization. Although this Government suggested and founded the International Prison Congress, it does not contribute anything toward its expense and has never had a representative on the permanent Commission. Even the delegates from this country, who have been commissioned by this Department and who have attended the quinquennial meetings of the congress, have uniformly borne their own expenses, with the single exception of the late Dr. E. C. Wines, for the payment of whose expenses Congress made provision.

The subscription to the International Prison Commission is based upon the population of the countries represented, being $5 per 1,000,000 inhabitants. Assuming the population of the United States to be 65,000,000, the annual subscription would be but $325, or $1,625 for the five years. The money thus received by the International Commission is expended in the publication of monographs, bulletins, reports, and the proceedings of the International Prison Congress, which are sent to the Governments in proportion to their subscriptions.

The Commission holds a meeting every alternate summer in Switzerland, and the appropriation of the United States should properly include the expenses of the delegate from this country. Thus, an annual appropriation of $2,000 would not only defray the subscription of this Government toward the support of the Commission, but also the expenses at home and abroad of the United States commissioner.

It may be observed that the rules of the Commission do not require that any delegate shall commit his Government to any action taken by the Commission; it simply secures the support and cooperation of the different nations represented in the study of the great problems relating to the suppression of crime, the protection of society, the proper treatment of the criminal, the moral rescue of children, the organization of every means for preventing the discharged prisoner from relapsing into the life of crime.

The American delegation feel very strongly the importance of acceding to the request of the International Prison Commission, not merely because the Government of the United States appears to be morally bound to support an international enterprise which it practically inaugurated, but because the American people may reap the greatest benefit from so doing. The International Prison Congress is a great humanitary movement. It is not confined, as its name might suggest, merely to the question of administering prisons, but to the whole subject of the prevention and treatment of crime in all its aspects. In this broad aspect of the case it strongly appeals for sympathy and aid, to the end that the work may be prosecuted under the most favorable and most advantageous conditions.

In view of the considerations herein advanced, of others equally cogent that may be found from a careful reading of the correspondence, of the recommendation of the American delegation, and of the formal request of the International Commission, I strongly urge that the sum of $2,000 annually be appropriated for the subscription to the Commission and for the expenses of the American member thereof.

If possible the appropriation desired should be included in the sundry civil bill or in some other available form.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

RICHARD OLNEY.

Hon. ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the substance of that amendment was communicated by the Department of State to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with a favorable letter. This is a matter that was initiated by our Government many years ago. The provision is simply to provide for our representation in the International Prison Commission of the International Congress, that congress having been begun and organized by the United States. Dr. Wines, an eminent American citizen, whom I met when he was abroad, engaged in and enthusiastically devoted to that great work, was the earliest inspiring advocate of the cause. For us to abandon it now would seem to be inconsistent. The amendment provides only for the expense incurred by our representation on the Commission and does not give any person any money in the way of salary.

Mr. PITNEY. That is correct, Mr. Chairman; it carries no salary.

The amendment of Mr. PITNEY was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 59, after line 11, insert:

"UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

"For copying and preparing for publication the Revolutionary archives, including the papers and records of the Continental Congress, under the direction and control of the Secretary of State, $10,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, to that amendment I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law, and therefore it is in conflict with the rules.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to reserve his point of order until I can present the matter.

Mr. CANNON. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. And I ask the chairman of the committee to allow me ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have fifteen minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, for once I believe I shall advocate a proposition which will receive the approval of nearly every member of this committee, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, because I come to you on the ground of patriotism and in behalf of the preservation of those historical manuscripts which form our common heritage, coming down to us from the formative period of this Republic. It is now, Mr. Chairman, nearly eight years—that is, on the 12th day of April next it will be eight years—since the President of the United States transmitted to the Congress of the United States a letter recommending that measures be taken for the preservation and publication of the Revolutionary archives. The message sent by the President of the United States transmitted also a letter from the then Secretary of State, Mr. Bayard, and many letters received from various parts of the country, from scholars all over the country, advocating the plan which had been suggested by Mr. Bayard. It was only last year, in 1895, when a second letter was transmitted to Congress by Mr. Gresham, then Secretary of State, advocating the adoption of some consistent plan for the preservation and publication of these manuscripts.

Now, what are they? You will remember that the preliminary period before the entering of the United States Government on its new form under the Constitution of 1787 extended from the 5th day of September, 1774, the day when the delegates of the various provinces or colonies assembled in Carpenter Hall, at Philadelphia, until the 4th day of March, 1789, when the new Government went into being. This formative period may be divided into two subdivisions: The first from September 5, 1774, until the adoption of the Articles of Confederation on the 8th day of July, 1778; and the second term embracing all the years of the Confederation; that is, the whole period in which we were governed by the Articles of Confederation, and ending with the practical coming into operation of the Constitution of 1787.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Is there a bill pending before the House embodying your idea?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. There is an amendment proposed to the sundry civil bill, which has been read by the Clerk, which provides for an initial appropriation of $10,000 for copying and preparing for publication these Revolutionary archives.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Well, I am very much in favor of the amendment, but what I ask is, Is there an independent bill before the House?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. No, sir; this work is to be provided for now.

The Revolutionary archives consist of two classes of papers. The first are the journals of what is termed the Continental Congress—the journals of the Congress of the Colonies or of the United States from 1774 to 1789—and all the records of the various departments of Government, which were then kept under the control of Congress. For you must remember, gentlemen, that the only central authority in our early Government was the Congress of the United States. All central executive power was vested in the Congress and in the various departments of the Government under Congress.

The other papers are the papers of Washington, of Franklin, of Hamilton, of Jefferson, of Madison, and of Monroe, and these papers in all amount to some 50 volumes—that is, the scheme of publication embraces 50 volumes of 800 pages each. The total cost of the work of publication is estimated at $100,000, but all that can be utilized within the present fiscal year will be the sum of $10,000. The first thing to be done is to have the historical manuscripts copied, and the second thing is to have them prepared and edited for publication.

Now, only two objections have been made to this proposition. The first objection is that there is no urgency. That is a mistake. I have the statement of Mr. Gresham that it is most urgent that these papers be preserved at once, and that the only way to preserve them and properly guard them is to copy them. The other objection is that there is a great mass of manuscripts, and certain papers should be selected for publication. It is the opinion, not only of the Secretary of State, but of all historical scholars, that it will not answer to have a fragmentary publication; but that all the documents must be published. In support of that view I call the attention of the committee to the value of the publications of papers which are now being made in Great Britain.

I ask for order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of the gentleman is well taken. The committee will be in order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman enters upon this branch of the discussion, I want to ask him what is the size of the edition that is contemplated by an expenditure of $100,000; how large?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not go into the question of publication to-day, but I offer my amendment only because it is important that these papers should be copied. These papers are falling to pieces, and they must be copied, because they were bought for the people of the United States. Every scholar and every student who goes to the State Department has the right of access to and examination of these papers; and in point of fact they are falling to pieces and in danger of absolute obliteration. What I ask for to-day is that we may have enough money appropriated to copy them and let the question of their printing and publication come up in the future; but I will state clearly that my object is ultimately to secure their publication. This is from the letter of Mr. Gresham in 1895. He says:

There is, it seems to me, an urgent need for adequate provision for this work, for the reason that under present conditions the papers are liable to serious injury and defacement.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the gentleman to say that the estimated cost of this work that he proposes to enter upon was $100,000, and that the edition would consist of six volumes. Now, how many copies of each volume does he expect to produce for $100,000?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. If the distinguished gentleman from Iowa will allow me, I will read the estimate in detail:

Of these the first 1,000 copies, bound in cloth, would cost $100,750. Each additional 1,000 copies would cost $22,750. The rate per volume would be $2,015 for the first 1,000 copies, and $445 per each additional 1,000 copies. The cost of a single copy of a volume of the first edition of 1,000 would therefore be about $2, and for a single copy of the subsequent editions of 1,000 copies each 44½ cents.

Upon this question of expense I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have spent enormous sums for the publication of the records of the Union and the Confederate armies—I believe the appropriation for that purpose in this very bill is $145,000. We are appropriating large sums for the publication of the naval records; we are appropriating enormous sums every year for the preservation of rock and hill and vale, that can not be obliterated, upon all our battlefields. And yet, Mr. Chairman, a point of order is raised here against an appropriation for the preservation of the muniments of our early history, these invaluable historical manuscripts. But before arguing the point of order I want to say one or two more words upon the merits of this proposition. The British Government for many years has been engaged in the publication of several series of original historical manuscripts. They publish a series called the Domestic Series, of which I have a volume on my desk. These volumes include state papers extending as far back as the reign of Edward VI, and the publication has already come down as far as the time of Charles II. There is another series called the Foreign Series; there is another called the Colonial Series; there are one or two volumes of a Scottish series, and there is also a calendar of Irish state papers. Thus far there have been published over 100 volumes of these records. A similar course has been followed by France, and I believe it will be ultimately adopted by every civilized Government. Now, certainly, if anything can be of interest, of importance, and of value to the people of this whole country, it is the preservation of our Revolutionary archives.

A word now as to the point of order. I say that a point of order can not be maintained against this appropriation, for two reasons. In the first place, what does this amendment propose to do? It proposes to appropriate $10,000. For what? For copying and preparing for publication the archives of the Revolution, including the records and papers of the Continental Congress. I submit to the chairman of this Committee of the Whole that under existing provisions of law the Secretary of State, or the Department of State, has full power and authority to copy any records in the custody of that Department, and that such power has existed or subsisted in that Department ever since July 27, 1789. The Chair will recollect that on that day an act was passed by the Congress of the United States transferring all the papers and records then in the custody of the department for foreign affairs to the new Department of State, and in that act it is provided that the custody of all those records shall be in the Department of State, and that for copying the records there shall be allowed a certain fee, to wit, 10 cents per folio.

Now, there can not be a fee for copying fixed by statute unless there be the power to copy the papers for the copying of which the fee is to be exacted. More than that, I say there is an inherent power in every Department of this Government to copy any of the records in its custody, and I insist that the only limitation on that power is the amount of money which can be made available. But more than that, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the Revised Statutes of the United States, Title V, Department of State. Section 203 provides that the Secretary of State shall have the custody of all these records, and section 213 provides that for making out and authenticating copies of the records in the Department of State a fee of 10 cents for each sheet containing 100 words shall be paid by the person requesting such copy.

But aside from these provisions of the Revised Statutes, and of the act of 1789 incorporated into the Revised Statutes, I say that there are special appropriation bills or items in appropriation bills which demonstrate beyond doubt that this is a public object already in progress and that this appropriation would be merely a continuance of a public work already in progress. What is my authority for that? It is this: In 1789 certain acts were passed giving custody of all the public records to the new Department of State. The next legislation that we find bearing upon the subject is the act of 1834, which appropriated $25,000 for the purchase of the papers of George Washington. That was followed in 1848 by a further appropriation of $20,000. We find various other acts of like tenor and effect. For instance, under the act of May 31, 1848, the papers of James Madison were purchased and the sum of $25,000 was appropriated therefor. Under the act of August 12, 1848, the papers of Thomas Jefferson were purchased for $20,000, and an appropriation of a like sum was made for the purchase of the papers of Alexander Hamilton. Again, as late as August 17, 1882, the papers of Benjamin Franklin were purchased, or an appropriation was made for their purchase, at a cost of $35,000. Other appropriation bills appropriated $14,000 for restoration, mounting, and binding. Thus we find that by previous acts of Congress $157,000 in all has been appropriated for the purchase of these historical manuscripts, and $14,000 for their restoration, mounting, and binding.

In the sundry civil appropriation act of 1894 there was inserted a provision directing the Secretary of State to do what?

To cause the Revolutionary archives, except the military records now deposited, to be carefully examined and to ascertain what portion are of sufficient importance and historical value to publish.

Now, I say that under these various appropriation acts and the other acts referred to we find a system looking to certain ends. What ends? In the first place to secure to the people of the United States the Revolutionary archives. For what purpose? To lock them up in the vaults of the Department of State and to deny to the scholar, the student, or to any citizen the right of access to those documents? Why, sir, the very appropriation of these large sums of money implies the purpose and intent of Congress that these papers should be preserved for the great body of the citizens of the United States. It would be futile to appropriate $157,000 for the purchase of historical manuscripts if the people are to be denied access to those manuscripts.

I call the attention of the Chair and of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of this committee (who I sincerely trust will not press his point of order), to the fact that in one of these appropriation acts to which I have referred there is a specific appropriation made for printing and publishing. The act which makes double provision for the purchase of the papers of Thomas Jefferson and the papers of Hamilton—the act of August 12, 1848—provides "for paying to Thomas Jefferson Randolph, executor of Thomas Jefferson, deceased, the sum of $20,000 for all the papers and manuscripts of said Thomas Jefferson;" then for printing and publishing the said papers and manuscripts the sum of $6,000 is appropriated. Then, again, a like sum is appropriated for purchasing and printing under the same conditions the papers and manuscripts of Alexander Hamilton. So that if the amendment which I now offer should fail, I could introduce an amendment providing for copying, printing, and publishing all the papers of Jefferson and Hamilton; and if my amendment were limited to those, no point of order could be made against it. I ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the leader of my committee and in many respects my leader on all these questions of appropriations, whether, in view of the fact that no point of order would lie against the more restricted amendment—that is, an amendment providing an appropriation for copying, printing, and publishing the works of Jefferson and Hamilton—he will insist on his point of order, and cut off the papers of Washington, Franklin, Monroe, Madison, and the Journals of the Continental Congress itself? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire only to say that in my judgment the point of order is well taken. I have listened with great interest to the remarks of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], in his history of the appropriations made by Congress for these various purposes since 1789; but, sir, the rule which we have adopted touching legislation on general appropriation bills is not quite so ancient. It dates back to some time in January or December last—I am not sure which—and it prohibits any legislation on a general appropriation bill, and any appropriation on such a bill, unless it be authorized by law. Now, it is not necessary to multiply words. The language of the amendment itself appropriates this sum for what? For preparing for publication certain documents. I do not think I could make the matter any plainer if I should talk an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in entire sympathy with the amendment of the gentleman from New York; but if the point of order is pressed the Chair feels constrained to sustain it, and must rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then I offer the following amendment:

For copying, printing, and publishing the papers and manuscripts of Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton, $15,000.

Mr. CANNON. Upon that amendment I make the point of order that such an appropriation is not authorized by law and therefore comes within the inhibition of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] desire to be heard further?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to be heard for a moment. The act of August 12, 1848, makes a distinct appropriation for printing and publishing the papers of Jefferson and Hamilton. That act at that time became existing law. This amendment is a continuation of an appropriation made in 1848.

Mr. CANNON. Is the work still "in progress"?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes, sir. I can say that this work is still in progress. I am assured by the State Department that there is now being printed and published a part of these records in the form of bulletins; and I am therefore surprised that my distinguished friend urges the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Where does the Department get the money with which to do that?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. It uses what little money it has at its disposal. But there is no doubt in the State Department of its power to publish these records.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why, then, does it not go on and do so?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The power of the Department is limited only by the money at its disposal for this purpose. I am asking only for an appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to say that the State Department, I think, is something like Tennyson's brook: "Men may come and men may go," but it can go on with its work perhaps forever. But I am not yet prepared, even with the statement of the gentleman from New York, to believe that an appropriation made in 1848 (that, if we had the rules we now have in operation, would have been subject to the point of order on an appropriation bill) to publish the works of Thomas Jefferson is a public work still "in progress," in the language of the rule, and as such not subject to the point of order.

That is all I desire to say. I ask the ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings and grounds in and around Washington——

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I desire to offer at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, after line 15, insert:

"For the purchase of the house on Tenth street northwest, between E and F streets, in the city of Washington, where Abraham Lincoln died, $30,000, or so much thereof that may be necessary; for repairs of said building after purchase, $1,000; in all, $31,000."

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the adoption of this amendment because——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me a moment?

I had supposed that any amendment that might be offered to this bill which was subject to a point of order would meet my opposition, and that I would feel compelled, in pursuance of my duty to the committee and to the House, to raise the point of order upon it. But for several years I have myself investigated this matter, and I may say that it has been investigated by the committee at this session of Congress, and after I have called attention to the fact that it is undoubtedly subject to the point of order, still, considering the nature of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, I feel that if I have apparently misstated my action touching points of order in connection with the bill, the committee will deal leniently with me, and therefore, so far as I am concerned, I will not make the point of order against this proposed appropriation.

Mr. SAYERS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to reserve the point of order, unless I waive it by permitting debate to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the point of order as reserved if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, to the committee that this building in which President Lincoln died is now under the care of an association organized for that purpose in the District of Columbia. That association has been paying rent to the owner of the building for a number of years past.

The gentlemen who now have charge of this building were before the Committee on Appropriations recently, and stated that they had about exhausted their means. They have, however, as I understand, an option on the purchase of the building at what is regarded a fair price; and we were told that the amount stated in the bill was regarded as a fair marketable price for the property. In this building are stored very many articles which were the property of Mr. Lincoln, and it is now being used as a museum, to which the public generally have access.

I hardly think it necessary for me to say anything as to the propriety of making the proposed appropriation. It commends itself to the patriotism of the country. It is not an extravagant appropriation. I have only to say further that no more meritorious appropriation of a similar character has, in my judgment, passed the House since I have been a member of it.

I trust the gentleman from New York will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether we have any rules of consistency in the practice before this House or not. When we find the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stating that this appropriation is clearly subject to the point of order, but not insisting upon it, and having, but a few moments ago, pressed his point of order against an amendment relating to our common heritage which has come down to us from the Revolutionary epoch, we may well ask ourselves the question whether there is any consistency or not. The gentleman gives way for the purchase proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas—of what? A little brick house on one of the side streets of this city up here.

Now, sir, I yield to no man in my admiration for Abraham Lincoln. I think he was one of the greatest men that ever lived in the United States of America, and second to none, not even to George Washington himself.

A MEMBER. What is before the House?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I am speaking to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been made on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted by the gentleman I was addressing myself to the consideration of the question of order. I understand that it is the rule of the House that no appropriation shall be germane to any appropriation bill or be considered as an amendment to an appropriation bill for a public work or object not already in progress. It may very well be that a bill providing for the purchase of this house in which President Lincoln died would at once pass the House. I have no doubt of that. I for one would support it and vote gladly for such a proposition. But I believe in a uniform system of legislation here. I do not believe in tacking this amendment on an appropriation bill, ruling it to be in order, or at least not making the point of order against it, while amendments of a precisely similar character are objected to on that score by the gentleman in charge of the bill.

I think, therefore, that I should press the point of order, under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me ask the gentleman from New York not to press the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Very well, Mr. Chairman; I will withdraw the point of order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SAYERS, it was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For electric lights for three hundred and sixty-five nights for 24 posts in Lafayette, Franklin, and Judiciary parks, at 28 cents per light per night, $2,452.80: Provided, That all wires shall be placed under ground, and that the conduits, wires, lamp-posts complete, shall be furnished by the electric light company without expense to the United States, and that 28 cents per lamp per night shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in the parks mentioned.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if this electric-lighting system for the parks named in this paragraph is as cheap as the old system of gas lighting?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that we inquired touching the lighting of the grounds about the Capitol, from here to the Congressional Library and from here to the Avenue, and we found that for the lights provided for in this bill, which will furnish a far better illumination than is now being furnished, the cost, as we are informed, is about $8,000 for the gas, and it will be between $5,000 and $6,000 for the electric lights.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 65 strike out lines 8, 9, 10, and 11 and the word "cents" in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For electric lights for three hundred and sixty-five nights, for not exceeding 32 posts, in Lafayette, Franklin, Judiciary, and Lincoln parks, at 28 cents per light per night, $3,270.40."

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that that is a continuation of the provision which the committee recommends as to Lafayette, Franklin, and Judiciary parks, and extends it to Lincoln Park. It also says "not exceeding 32 posts."

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It may be that that many posts will not be necessary. I think the amendment is wise, and I see no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

MILITARY POSTS.

For the construction of buildings at, and the enlargement of, such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $300,000.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 19, page 67, the following:

"Provided, That of the sum above appropriated, $75,000 shall be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War for beginning the construction of permanent buildings providing for sewerage, water supply, roads and other means of communication, and other necessary improvements at the United States Army post at Spokane, in the State of Washington."

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up much of the time of the committees in the consideration of the various bills which have passed the House, and I now ask unanimous consent that I may have fifteen minutes in which to present this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Washington be allowed fifteen minutes in which to discuss the pending amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to say that this is an amendment which does not increase the appropriation. It is an amendment which, so far as I have learned parliamentary law since coming here, I believe to be in entire accord with the system of doing business in the House, and not subject to any point of order. I wish to say to the gentlemen of the committee also that it has never been rejected by the Committee on Appropriations. It was thought best to present the matter here at this time, and I ask of the committee a patient consideration of what little I will say upon the subject.

It appears, Mr. Chairman, that away back in 1882 General Wheaton, as well as Captain Symons before that time, were much impressed with the value of Spokane as a place for a permanent and large military post. They have urged it from time to time in their reports made to the War Department, and finally, in 1894, Congress passed an act authorizing the establishing of a military post at Spokane, if the people of that city would donate to the United States, free of cost, 1,000 acres of ground. The statute reads as follows:

That upon the transfer and conveyance to the United States of a good and sufficient title to not less than 1,000 acres of land without cost to the United States, situated at or near the city of Spokane, in the county of Spokane, in the State of Washington, and on or near a railroad, and constituting an eligible and suitable site for an army post, if approved and accepted by the Secretary of War for that purpose, then and thereupon the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to establish and locate on said land a United States Army post of such character and capacity as the Secretary of War shall direct and approve.

In pursuance of that act the people of Spokane have gone to work and in these hard times have expended more than $20,000 in clean cash to procure a site for that military post. The site is beautifully located. A part of it had been platted into an addition to the city of Spokane, and the raising of this $20,000 was but a small part of the hard work that they performed.

If gentlemen will bear with me for a moment, I will show you the location of the post by reference to this chart, a bird's-eye view of Spokane and surroundings. You will see that the site is a beautiful one, overlooking the city. The Secretary of War, on the last Fourth of July, was there with his aids, and rode over the tract of land which has been donated by the people of Spokane to the United States. He said it was the most beautiful site for a military post there was in the United States, with the possible exception of West Point. He said that after being there and seeing it himself.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. HYDE. Certainly, I always yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Had the Secretary of War visited Salt Lake when he said that?

Mr. HYDE. Well, he went there afterwards. He had not been there then. [Laughter.] I said, Mr. Chairman, that part of that tract had been platted. It was owned by hundreds of different owners, and yet the title to all that property was secured in exchange for other property and turned over to the Government; and that property has cost the people of Spokane $50,000. There are 1,022 acres of it. It has over 4 miles of river front, and is one of the most beautiful sites in the world. In the very near future that 1,000 acres will be worth $100 an acre, which is $100,000. The city has made a grant to the United States of water for ninety-nine years at $1 per year, which is practically free, and enables it to connect with the city waterworks.

Now, I want to show you something more in regard to where this army post is situated, and to talk to you about another Schomburgk line, one that is far more important, and it is definitely fixed. Here is the city of Spokane, 20 miles from Idaho [illustrating]. Here is a railway [illustrating] that runs up to the British line, which is only about 75 miles to the north. To-day you may go from here [indicating] east or west on the Great Northern Railway, and this post, you will understand, gentlemen, is located at such a point that troops can be sent out on the most northerly line of railroad in the United States. And remember this, gentlemen, that probably not for fifty years will there be another line of railway between the British line and the Great Northern Railway.

This is a great railroad center. Spokane has more lines of railway running into it than any other city west of Denver, Minneapolis, and St. Paul. They reach out in every direction. There are four transcontinental lines centering in Spokane; the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, and the Canadian Pacific are connected here. It is about 75 miles from the British line; near enough, they tell me at the War Department—as near as they would like to have a post. That is the line that I wish to speak of. That line, in my opinion, is a greater menace to the future of this country than all the foreign questions we have discussed in this House during this session. Canada is all very nice with 5,000,000 of people; but, Mr. Chairman, what shall we say when she has 50,000,000 of people, which is coming on to be a great fact in the future? Canada as an independent country would live side by side with the United States to the benefit and glory of both, but as a possession of Great Britain I say it is a menace to the future of this country. It can not stand. We shall have one vast ocean-bound republic or two independent nations.

This post has been established at a place which is both desirable and necessary. Now, I wish to say a few words more. The Secretary of War, in his report, has said of this post that the ground has been accepted. I have the letters here. The title has been approved; the deed has been accepted by the United States and placed on record. It is deposited in the office of the Secretary of War. Everything has been done, Mr. Chairman, except to spend some money in the erection of this post. I have all the correspondence here. I will not take time to read it.

But it may be said, Mr. Chairman, on the other hand, here is a general appropriation of $300,000. Very well. I want to say that General Schofield, in reports which I have here and which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, has recommended the appropriation. General Otis has recommended it, and his report has been approved by General Schofield. In other words, Mr. Chairman, there is not a dissenting voice anywhere. "Well," they would say, "what is the matter, then?" Well, the War Department asks for an appropriation of $1,000,000, but the committee, in its wisdom, only appropriates $300,000.

Now, then, I say that, the people of Spokane having performed their part of the contract, there is an obligation on the part of the United States to proceed with the work. This committee is the lawmaking power of this House; and it ought not to be left to the ministerial officers of the Government to perhaps divert this money and begin the construction of posts that have been authorized by statutes passed later than the one which authorized this post—passed later and located later, if you please, Mr. Chairman, than the location of this one.

Now, it seems to me there can be no objection; and for that reason I ask that this sum, or, if in the opinion of the chairman of the committee he can not allow the sum of $75,000, why not allow $50,000, showing the good faith of this House? I want to say further that I hold in my hand a letter from the honorable Secretary of War, stating that if the appropriation is made they will expend the sum of $75,000 upon this post this year; and that is why I have fixed the sum at $75,000, the same sum that the Secretary of War has said they could profitably expend during this year.

The following is what is stated in the Annual Report of the Secretary of War for 1895:

The policy of concentrating the Army and abandoning unnecessary posts has not only won the approval of all those acquainted with the lines of progress which conditions have marked out for our Army, but is approved by all thoughful citizens. It has been shown that sufficient bodies of troops can be transported for service to any necessary point in shorter time and at less cost than under the old system, that the area under effective military protection is consequently much larger, and that all elements of expense have been perceptibly reduced.

This policy has also rendered it possible for this Department since March 4, 1893, to turn over to the Department of the Interior 741,000 acres of public land, conveniently situated, for the use of actual settlers. At the present time there are 18 posts whose garrisons exceed a full regiment, while 30 stations are garrisoned by less than a battalion. This policy, with everything to commend it, should be steadily pursued.

Agreeably to the act of Congress the Department has accepted from the citizens of Spokane, State of Washington, a tract of land embracing 1,022 acres for military purposes. Eventually this should be availed of by the erection of barracks and quarters to take the place of some of the posts in that vicinity which, under the conditions following the development of the country, are not well located for present needs.

The following correspondence covers the reports of the officers of the Army in relation to the post:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE COLUMBIA,
Vancouver Barracks, Wash., July 24, 1894.

SIR: On the 13th instant I forwarded to your office a report of my recent inspection of the post of Fort Sherman, Idaho, which was in answer to a communication suggesting a removal of department headquarters to the city of Portland, for the purpose of giving additional shelter to troops at Vancouver Barracks, as then appeared to be necessary on account of the supposed destruction of Fort Sherman by the spring floods.

In that report I suggested that, in case Fort Sherman should be discontinued, the city of Spokane offered the greatest advantages of any point within the department for a permanent military station, and remarked that the city "is the strategic point throughout that section and recent experience has clearly demonstrated its importance. While there during the latter part of last month, the citizens expressed a great desire that a post should be located in or contiguous to the city and a willingness to contribute suitable grounds." I stated that I overlooked some of the locations which they informed me might be offered to the Government for such a purpose, and in that connection further remarked as follows: "One such was viewed which was about 3 miles below the center of the city, located on the opposite side of the Spokane River and on the line of the Great Northern Railway. The property is held at a high figure, but the citizens thought that they might obtain and connect it with the city water supply. It might be advantageous to hold this proposition in reserve for future consideration, as I believe when money is available for the construction of a new post within the present department lines Spokane or its near vicinity will be determined on as the place to build it."

In connection with the above subject I have the honor to transmit herewith the proposition of representative citizens of Spokane, accompanied by a railroad map of the section of country tributary to that city, also a blue print showing the manner in which the city has been laid out or plotted. The proposition contains a presentation of the military advantages which would result from the establishment of a permanent post within or in near contact to the place, and so ably discusses the subject that further comment is unnecessary.

The 640 acres mentioned therein embrace the site to which I particularly invited attention in my report of the 13th of the month, from which I have above made quotation, and its location is northwest of the city, or in its northwestern extremity, beyond the Spokane River, and is well represented upon the accompanying blue print. By reference thereto it will be seen that it is situated in the bend of the river and is connected with the city by a single bridge. The river, which here has a deep channel, constitutes one-half of its boundary. I did not make a close inspection of the ground by passing over it, but viewed it from the bridge, which is probably 100 feet above the bed of the stream; and this after I had casually observed other proffered sites, one of which is a stony, barren plain, up the river, about 4 miles from the business center of the city, and between the river and the Northern Pacific Railroad.

This location would be dependent upon the city for water and is deficient in sewerage necessities. Another proffered site is about 6 miles to the northeast of the town and near the outer terminus of the street railway shown on the map. It is on the line of the Great Northern Railroad, has good soil, and some good natural advantages, but is dependent upon springs for its water supply. Another is to the south of and near to the city, three or four hundred feet above it; is reached by a road of very steep ascent, and is also watered by springs. The point would be a desirable one were it not for its elevation, its distance from railway facilities, and the precarious nature of continued sufficient water privileges.

The site which the city now offers has complete water, sewerage, and drainage conditions. The flow of water in the river is abundant and eternal. The pipe line of the city water system can easily be thrown across the bridge to the highest point of the land marked for the Government reserve. The first bench of land skirted by the river is about 50 feet above it and is admirably adapted for quartermaster buildings, corals, and storehouses of the various staff departments. The second bench, some 50 feet above the first, is of sufficient dimensions to contain all the buildings needed for quartering a large garrison. The wooded grounds beyond are easy of ascent and not much elevated, as may be readily supposed from the fact that they are traversed by the Seattle, Lake Shore and Eastern Railway.

All this land has good natural drainage and can be sewered at light expense—the sewage thrown into the river, which is not objectionable, as the point is below the city. The railroad facilities which are presented can not be excelled. The Great Northern road crosses the river at good distance below and out of sight of the bridge connecting the site with the city, and skirts the low land along the river and within the proposed reservation lines. A station within the reserve could be reached by a good wagon road of very easy grade, and as located the railroad would not endanger the buildings of the post by reason of fire. I do not know what facilities the grounds offer for target requirements, but am of opinion that they are adequate and excellent.

A supposed objection to the location might be urged because of its nearness to the business center of Spokane. I look upon that as one of its main advantages, isolated therefrom as it is by its natural features. The city does not extend its growth to that neighborhood, but off to the north and east. To the northeast its development has been rapid and continuous, and it will continue to build in that direction. This isolated 640 acres is, in fact, well removed from city disturbances and more than half of its exterior line is protected from encroachment by its natural barriers. Situated as it is, it would present for officers and enlisted men school, business, and social benefits, and would not inflict any more demoralization upon troops than if located 10 miles beyond the city confines.

This proposition of the citizens of Spokane is extremely liberal. The ground offered has great natural beauty, has been used as a suburban park, and its pecuniary value is estimated at a high figure. In presenting it I am influenced by the recently ascertained knowledge that Fort Sherman must sooner or later be abandoned, because the possible overflow of the Cœur d'Alene Lake at any time renders its tenure very precarious, and further by the great importance of permanently maintaining troops in that section of country. By the establishment of a large military post in the city of Spokane, Forts Sherman, Spokane, and Wallawalla could be abandoned, although the latter, by the recent transactions between the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and the Great Northern Railroad, has been placed upon one of the main railroad routes of the Northwest. By the establishment of such a post all points in northern Idaho and the State of Washington to the Cascade range of mountains could be quickly furnished with military protection when necessary.

An attempted removal of troops from northern Idaho might be met with opposition from the citizens of that State as endangering the safety of the inhabitants of its mining regions and their railroad connections. In fact, however, a military force at Spokane would hold the key to all their endangered points much better than if stationed at Fort Sherman or at any other place. As regards southern Idaho, the emergencies of the past three months indicate the importance of Boise Barracks, and the impression which has generally prevailed in military circles as to the uselessness of that post must be modified. It is a convenient point for a garrison of four companies, and it could be made to accommodate a force of that strength at a very moderate expenditure. Its water problem appears to be solved through the efforts of the Boise City authorities, who have placed an extended pipe line from certain distant springs to the city, which passes through the military reservation and discharges into the Government reservoir, as reported, 86,000 gallons of water daily.

This project when proposed was remarked on at the headquarters as one which required Congressional action, since it created an easement in the reservation land. I was not aware then that this difficulty had been met by the act of Congress of 1891, and its subsequent amendments, under which common-law riparian privileges had been greatly augmented. While at Boise Barracks the party who had proposed to place this pipe line met me with a communication from the Quartermaster-General showing that his proposition had been accepted. He stated that he had laid his pipe to the reservation line, but that the post commander could not permit him to enter it until he had received the requisite authority; that his force was on the ground, and that it would enhance the cost of the labor which he had undertaken should he be obliged to temporarily stop the work.

This was my first intelligence of the interest manifested and of the action taken by the Quartermaster-General in regard to the Boise Reservation, and I was glad to obtain it even through the source which I did. Under the circumstances the party was permitted to enter the reservation at once, with the condition that he would remove from the same with all his property should information not soon be obtained of the due acceptance of his proposition. Proper authority has since been obtained, the pipe line has been finished, and the present flow of water is abundant. I see, therefore, no apparent difficulty in retaining Boise Barracks as a permanent station for troops.

Should the accompanying proposition of the citizens of Spokane be favorably considered by the War Department, and should the Department conclude to request the necessary Congressional action for the establishment of a post at or near that city, I would respectfully suggest that measures be taken in due season to select an appropriate site and to ascertain how great may be the liberal feeling of its citizens with regard to it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. S. OTIS,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, September 6, 1894.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War, with the recommendation that the offer of the city of Spokane be accepted of a suitable tract of land, containing not less than 640 acres, as a site for a military post, and that an appropriation of the necessary funds be made for the construction thereon of accommodations for eight companies of infantry and four troops of cavalry, with the corresponding number of field and staff officers, depot buildings, etc. That upon the approval of this proposition and an appropriation of the necessary funds by Congress so rapidly as the new post shall be completed the troops now occupying Fort Sherman, Fort Spokane, and Fort Wallawalla be transferred to that point. The posts above named to be abandoned as no longer needed.

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General, Commanding.

WAR DEPARTMENT, October 3, 1894.

Seen by the Secretary of War; file for the present.

By order of the Secretary of War.

FORT SHERMAN, IDAHO, December 1, 1894.

SIR: In compliance with Special Orders No. 179, Headquarters Department of the Columbia, current series, I have the honor to report that on November 7, accompanied by First Lieutenant Leyden, Fourth Infantry, I proceeded to Spokane, Wash., to examine a tract of land tendered to the Government by the citizens of that city for the establishment thereon of a military post. (See inclosure marked A.)

On the morning of the 8th Mr. Lewis F. Clark, representing the citizens by whom the tender was made, accompanied us to indicate the boundaries of the tract in question.

From the accompanying map (No. 1) it will be seen that the plat is located on the banks of the Spokane River, west of and about 2¼ miles in a direct line from the center of the city, and that it extends along the river about 4 miles.

The present approach to the tract is by the county road, about 4½ miles from the city; a shorter route, less than 3 miles in length, exists, but will require the reconstruction of a bridge across the river, the old bridge having been destroyed last year.

In total acreage the plots examined aggregate about 1,000 acres. Concerning the suitableness of the tract for military purposes, it was, in some degree, essential to assume a maximum strength of the proposed garrison. Upon the basis that the post should accommodate a regiment of infantry, a squadron of four troops of cavalry, and a battery of light artillery, with a possible strength of twelve to fifteen hundred men, I made a careful examination of the ground, extending over two days of rather unfavorable weather. As a result of that examination my judgment is that the tract is suitable, and in many particulars highly desirable, for the ordinary purposes of a garrison of the strength indicated.

The main and most desirable portion of the tract is a plotted addition called Twickenham. The greater part of this addition, about 253 acres, is a high and approximately level plateau that appears admirably adapted for the site of the post proper and for parade and drill grounds. This main plateau, as shown in the map (No. 2), is about 170 feet above the river; but on the slopes to the river banks there are several benches or terraces of considerable extent, especially toward the bend of the river, that seem adapted for stables, corrals, storehouses, etc. The lowest one of these terraces is from 30 to 50 feet above extreme high water.

Of the remaining portion of the tract the ground is more or less broken, but there exists large plats that seem adapted to the location of smaller or sub posts for cavalry or artillery, should such be considered desirable.

There is no difficulty in locating known-distance target ranges up to 1,000 yards in length, but for skirmish practice some expenditure of money and labor will be required to construct a range to fulfill desirable conditions. Reference is here made to a portion of the map No. 2, marked in blue pencil.

Concerning a water supply, I invite attention to the inclosed proposal of the city authorities (marked B). It is presumed that a hundred gallons a day is a liberal allowance per capita for ordinary drinking and domestic purposes. The water offered is from the city mains, and but small expenditure will be required to connect, near the boundary of the tract, the necessary mains for the post. The location of the tract, being downstream from the city, is such that water from the river could not be used for domestic purposes. For fire, irrigation, flushing tanks, etc., an auxiliary supply could be pumped from the stream.

The drainage of the tract is natural, and the establishment of a sewerage system a very simple matter.

The county road is located on the southern portion of the tract and it would seem to interfere but little with any military use of the ground in question. The Seattle, Lake Shore and Eastern Railroad, now operated by the Great Northern Company, has a right of way through the tract as indicated on map No. 2. The location of the railroad, like the county road, is such as to interfere very little, if any, with military requirements.

Accompanying this report are eight photographic views, lettered to correspond with the points on map No. 2, from which they were taken.

Lieutenant Leyden has given me very valuable assistance in the performance of the duties devolved upon me in this matter.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT H. HALL,
Colonel Fourth Infantry.

Headquarters Department of the Columbia,

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE COLUMBIA,
Vancouver Barracks, Wash., December 8, 1894.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

I consider it of great importance that this tract of land be accepted at once and that an appropriation be sought for the construction of a military post which would accommodate at least a regiment of infantry. My reasons have been fully given in previous reports.

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1894.

SIR: Referring to the amendment to the Army appropriation bill proposed by Senator SQUIRE, to appropriate $50,000 to commence the construction of barracks and quarters, etc., at the post to be located at Spokane, Wash., I have the honor to submit the following considerations:

It is desirable, in the interest of the public service, that the construction of the new post be commenced as soon as Congress may feel justified in making the necessary appropriation. The garrison of the old post of Fort Spokane should be removed to the new post as soon as practicable, for the reason that the troops are of no use where they are now stationed, and are kept there solely on account of the lack of suitable accommodations elsewhere, and for the reason that the post is so far from the railroad that the troops can not be made quickly available for service in other places. Hence the necessary accommodations should be provided at the new post as soon as practicable.

This is not one of those pressing necessities which demand appropriations without regard to the financial condition of the country. Yet it is one for which an appropriation may well be made as soon as, in the wisdom of Congress, it shall seem justifiable.

Very respectfully,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General, Commanding.

To the Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR:

* * * * * * *

VALUE OF PRESENT STATIONS OF TROOPS.

The withdrawal last fall of two of the three companies which composed the Fort Spokane garrison looked to the complete abandonment of that post in the near future, since it was considered to be inconveniently situated, difficult to reach in certain seasons of the year, expensive to maintain, and that it served no practical purpose in the region of country in which it was located. Fort Sherman, the headquarters of the regiment to which the Fort Spokane troops belonged, was deemed to be the proper point to which they should be drawn, and there it was believed that they could be comfortably quartered if comparatively inexpensive barracks could be constructed soon.

Still, this disposition was viewed as of a temporary nature, since neither Fort Sherman nor Fort Spokane was properly located to meet all the conditions which a regimental post should possess, as both were removed from important lines of travel and centers of population. Estimates for the necessary barracks were submitted, but failed to receive the requisite approval. The increase in the Fort Sherman garrison overcrowded the buildings of the post—especially those occupied by the enlisted men—causing much discomfort and annoyance, and in order to give required relief a request was made early in the spring to withdraw part of the troops and regarrison Fort Spokane as formerly, which was favorably considered.

A careful computation of the cost of supplying the last-named post shows that it is not as great as that of supplying most of the others of the department, though greater than that attending Fort Sherman. The frequent calls of the last few months for the employment of troops to assist in maintaining law along the principal railway lines of the Northwest indicate that, with proper telegraphic communication maintained, the troops at Spokane are almost as quickly available for service as those stationed at Sherman. The city of Spokane, though much nearer the latter, must be drawn on for railway transportation whenever required by the garrison of either post, and the time consumed in an overland march of 25 miles might be regarded as the difference of the periods of availability of one over the other.

Fort Sherman, however, is nearer the turbulent mining section of Idaho, where the use of troops has been frequently demanded, and to which they are often sent, and on this account it has the most desirable location. But neither satisfies conditions which should determine permanence; and since the experience of last spring at the last-named post, with the overflowing waters of the Cœur d'Alene Lake, by which it was submerged and its destruction threatened, the claim that it could or should be permanently maintained can not be reasonably supported. The experience of the last few months also demonstrates the wisdom of uniting the garrisons of these two posts at some more convenient point than either of those which they now occupy, in order to obtain quicker response to the demand for active service and to be able to place in the field the largest numerical force possible. The strength of this military department is small, and it has been lately taxed to its full capacity to respond fully to all the calls which have been made upon it. Had the garrisons of these two posts been united at a single station the force available for detached duty would have been greater by at least one-eighth.

Viewing that entire scope of country to ascertain what locality best meets all the important requirements for which a post of our small army under present Government conditions should possess, it is found that none offers the advantages of the city of Spokane. The main railway center of the extreme Northwest, it throws out its lines of speedy transportation in every direction. They reach the international boundary line to the north, extend to the east and west under antagonistic managements which offer competing accommodations for travel, pierce southern Washington, and northern Oregon, connecting with other railway systems, and penetrate the mining sections of Idaho by two routes.

In matter of time required to reach the different places of population in that region of country the city of Spokane is nearer than any other point available for the permanent station of troops. It possesses also the advantages of excellent climate, healthy location, with abundant good water, and the construction there of a large military post and its subsequent maintenance would be attended with a less expenditure of money than one at any other point in the Northwest. Troops quartered there would have under observation the great stretch of northern country from the Cascade range of mountains to the State of Montana and south to the Oregon line, and could be expeditiously placed wherever therein their lawful employment might be demanded. They would also be most conveniently quartered should it become necessary to temporarily detach from them any portion for service in a distant locality.

Since 1866 Government has done very little looking to the protection of the Puget Sound and adjacent United States territory contained within the State of Washington against possible foreign attack; and there, within the last few years, population has greatly increased, and important coast cities, now conducting a considerable international commerce, have been constructed. No one doubts that the time is rapidly approaching when an extensive ocean trade will be carried on between these cities and the Asiatic and some of the European seaports, and a wise precaution must suggest that measures should be taken as soon as practicable to supply these growing communities with the material for land defense. Thus far the full limit of Government assistance extended in that direction has consisted in the selection by expert army officers of various points as sites for defensive fortifications, which in most instances the President has declared shall be reserved for such purposes, and of maintaining one or more companies of troops, primarily sent there to prevent Indian depredations.

During the ten years ending with 1866 33 of these sites, lying along the straits of Juan de Fuca, the waters of Puget Sound, and Bellingham Bay, have been declared military reservations, and 10 since that time. Some of the Executive orders of declaration have been revoked, a few of the reservations have been given up, and many of those still in part existing have been affected by individual claims at date of declaration which have since been perfected, have been much reduced in so far as extent of Government title therein is concerned. Recent improvements in ordnance, with its greatly extended range of fire, have rendered many of these sites of no further practical importance for military uses, and should be abandoned. The United States Fortification Board so found, after an inspection of the boundaries of Puget Sound, made a few weeks ago to determine the best points at which to construct defensive works, and it reported but very few of the many sites still formally retained by Government as suitable. It recommended 11 prominent points as naturally adapted to such purposes, some of which have never been covered by declarations and are owned by individuals, corporations, or Indians, or belong to the State of Washington.

Should its recommendations be approved, it is urged that all locations in the Puget Sound country now held as military reservations, and which the Fortification Board has virtually found not required for defensive works, be turned over to the Interior Department for disposition, and that such as it has reported to be needed therefor be placed under military control, and by proper acquisition if necessary. By these means the way will be opened for the construction of the Government defenses which are generally conceded to be demanded and which undoubtedly will be undertaken as soon as general financial improvement admits of the requisite appropriations.

As regards protection given to the inhabitants of that section through garrison posts, it has been in the nature of police and of benefit only in seasons of Indian hostilities. Fort Townsend, established originally in 1859, still remains and is garrisoned by a single company of infantry. The only advantage to be derived from its retention consists in the fact that it furnishes shelter for troops; for as far as the possibility of employing its small garrison is concerned, in the performance of duty for which the Army is maintained, it might almost as well not exist. True, that a detachment was drawn from it for service at Tacoma in the recent railway disturbances, but that was because of the necessity to concentrate as large a military force as possible to successfully execute the instructions of the War Department. It is only under such pressing exigencies that the Townsend garrison would be summoned from its secure retreat.

In some locality of the northern section of this State, beyond the Cascade Mountains, where now dwell 100,000 people, part of whom are restless, demonstrative, and oftentimes turbulent upon fancied provocation, and a population, too, which is destined to be greatly augmented within a brief period of time, one moderately large garrison should be established and permanently maintained. The vicinity of Seattle offers the most favorable conditions for location, as that is the center of a small territory in which the future use of troops will be demanded, and the place at which exhibitions of lawlessness beyond the power of the State to control have so frequently manifested themselves.

A short distance beyond the city, extending into the waters of the sound, Magnolia Bluff, one of the most important points selected by the Fortifications Board for defensive works, would appear to be the proper site for the post of an infantry garrison, to be succeeded, as it doubtless would be in a few years, by an artillery command.

There the Fort Townsend garrison should be stationed and be materially increased. A force there of only a single infantry battalion, if no more troops were available, would be of great service. With efficient garrisons at the cities of Spokane and Seattle and with the present Vancouver Barracks' strength kept intact, all localities within this military department, with the exception of southern Oregon and Idaho, could be quickly reached by effective bodies of troops, and as permanently placed would be in position to observe the northern international boundary line. Southern Idaho and a good portion of southern Oregon would be in easy communication with Boise Barracks, in respect to which the long-mooted objection to its indefinite continuance as a military station has been met by a recent abundant supply of water. Should not some such use of the Fort Townsend garrison be made, I would then respectfully recommend its removal to this point and the abandonment of the post.

Fort Canby, at the mouth of the Columbia River, is increasing in importance. The long jetty projecting from Fort Stevens, against which sand, drift, and sediment gradually accumulate, will extend the south bank of the river by constant accretion toward the ocean, and leave the last-named fort considerable distance inland. The river channel has been straightened and its outlet carried farther out to sea, which will bring entering vessels more completely under Fort Canby's guns. These, with the assistance of those which it is contemplated to place, in the distant future possibly, at Stevens and on the military reservation of Scarboro Head, will effectually command the river entrance and connecting harbor, and no other land defenses on the river banks are needed. The Three Tree Point Military Reservation, containing 640 acres of unencumbered land, could with propriety be turned over to the Interior Department for disposition.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

To the ADJUTANT-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

The following correspondence has passed between the War Department and members of Congress on the subject:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., October 21, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the deed of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company to the United States, dated September 16, 1895, which was transmitted, together with abstracts of title and other papers, for the acceptance of the Secretary of War under the act of Congress of February 12, 1895. (Ch. 83, 28 Stat., 657.)

In his report dated October 18, 1895, on the validity of the title to the lands described in said deed, the Attorney-General says:

"On examination of said abstracts, together with the papers accompanying them, I find that said company can convey to the United States a good and sufficient title to the premises referred to for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned, and am of opinion that such title will pass by said deed.

"I observe, however, that said deed purports to be made solely for the consideration of $10.000, whilst the act above cited provides that the conveyance to the Government of the land for the proposed army post shall be 'without cost to the United States.' If, as I understand the case to be, it was the intention of the grantor in said deed to convey the land described therein without cost to the Government for the purpose of an army post, in accordance with the requirements of said act, the consideration expressed in the deed is not the true one and should be omitted. I suggest that it would be better to have a new deed from the company, leaving out that consideration, and after setting forth by way of recital the provision made by Congress for the establishment of an army post near Spokane, the approval by the Secretary of War of the land selected for the site of such post, etc., declaring that in consideration of the premises and of a nominal sum (say $1) the company does thereby grant, etc. This would disclose the real consideration for the transfer, be in harmony with the statute, and at the same time be efficient as a conveyance."

A new deed prepared in the form indicated by the Attorney-General is inclosed herewith, and it is requested that you will have the same properly executed and filed to be recorded in the land records of the county.

The lands described in said new deed are approved and accepted by the Secretary of War as a site for an army post to be situated near the city of Spokane, in the county of Spokane, in the State of Washington, as provided in said act, on condition that said new deed shall be properly executed and filed for record in the land records of the county before November 1, 1895.

Very respectfully,

DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

HENRY L. WILSON, Esq.,
Chairman Military Post Committee, Spokane, Wash.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., November 29, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of October 31 and November 15, 1895, respectively, as well as the receipt of the deed, executed and recorded, to the military post site, Spokane, Wash.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH B. DOE,
Acting Secretary of War.

Hon. HENRY L. WILSON, Spokane, Wash.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1896.

DEAR SIR: The Secretary of War has requested me to forward to you the inclosed copy of a letter addressed by the War Department to Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Very sincerely, yours,

JNO. SEAGER, Private Secretary.

Hon. S. C. HYDE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 25, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the amendment proposed to be offered to the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, which has for its object the appropriation of $200,000, to be immediately available, for the construction of a military post at Spokane, Wash.

In response to your request for information, etc., I would state that, under a recent authority of Congress, the Government has acquired, by donation of the citizens, a site for a military post near Spokane, having an area of some 1,000 acres. Estimates have been submitted to Congress for the sum of $1,000,000 "for repair and improvements of military posts." Should this sum be granted, it is proposed to apply a portion of it to the commencement of improvements on the site at Spokane, but the Department can not recommend any special appropriation for this particular post.

The first work required on this site would be sewer construction, provision of water supply, roads, and other means of communication, and the beginning of construction of permanent buildings.

If means are placed at the disposal of the Department, the expenditure of about $75,000 would be made during the next fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say a few words by way of supplementing what has been so well said by my colleague from the State of Washington [Mr. HYDE]. Everything that he has said relative to the beauties of this location selected by the Secretary of War at Spokane and also as to the title being clear and complete in the Government is absolutely true. That there is great need for the establishment of this post there can be no question. As my colleague has stated, it is one of the most advantageous positions for a military post in the whole Northwest, and the establishment of a post there would result in lessening the expenses of the Military Establishment by the assembling of troops at a point from which they can be distributed most readily whenever the necessity for using them shall arise. The people of Spokane, after the selection of the ground, in spite of their burdens, in spite of the depression and the hard times under which they have labored, went forward and raised with the utmost difficulty the money required to obtain the title to this ground, believing, of course, that after the location was selected and the title turned over to the Government Congress would at once see to it that the money required for the erection of the buildings and the completion of the post would be appropriated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I claim that the Department and the people of Spokane having taken this action, it is only fair to the people of that city that this Congress should at once appropriate a sufficient amount of money to carry on the work as it should be carried on, and it seems to me that no point of order ought to be raised against this proposition, nor do I know that the chairman of the committee intends to raise a point of order. At least the sum named in this amendment should be appropriated here and now by this House. The representatives of the American people here assembled should, it seems to me, recognize the fairness of this proposition and should respond by standing with us. The amount of $75,000 is necessary for this purpose as stated by the War Department, and it ought to be appropriated without delay. We know not, any of us, when it may be necessary to make use of this post in a greater way than anybody now anticipates. No one knows what troubles may arise, or what circumstances may make an imperative necessity the occupancy of this post, and buildings should be erected there that the purposes for which the post was selected may be carried out in a liberal and proper way. I trust that this amendment may be adopted, and that if necessary it be left to the Senate to increase the amount of the appropriation in the bill out of which this $75,000 is to be taken. I do not care to say anything further at this time, save to again express to the House my earnest hope that this amendment may be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill recommends as follows:

For the construction of buildings and the enlargement of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $300,000.

It will be observed that this is a general appropriation of a lump sum for all the army posts, those that have been commenced and that are contemplated but have not been commenced, to be expended by the Secretary of War; and when the appropriation is made, in theory if not in practice—and I think substantially in practice—the Secretary of War, having full knowledge in the premises (if he has not, he ought to have), makes inquiry touching this branch of the public service and apportions the money according to his judgment for work on the various posts throughout the United States. For instance, there is a post at Fort Harrison, at Helena, perhaps four-fifths completed and occupied. How much it would take to finish it I do not now recollect.

Mr. HARTMAN. About $30,000.

Mr. CANNON. Sixty thousand dollars, the gentleman from Montana says. Then at Fort Riley there is another important post not completed. There is Sheridan at Chicago, on which much work has been done, a large post, not yet completed. There is a post at Plattsburg, N. Y., and there is a post at Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, and at Fort Thomas, Omaha, and there is one authorized on the sound.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is simply an artillery post.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but it is a military post. Then there is this one at Spokane, and there is one at Bismarck. In the last Congress or the Congress before, probably in the last, these three posts, the one on the sound, the one at Spokane, and the one at Bismarck, were authorized. At Spokane the title to the site has been acquired. I think I saw that ground several years ago, a magnificent site, containing some 800 or 900 acres, I believe.

Mr. HYDE. One thousand and twenty-two.

Mr. CANNON. One thousand and twenty-two, the gentleman says. That was bought, I believe, by the citizens of Spokane and donated to the Government. Now, the $300,000 appropriated in this bill will not, of course, complete all of these posts. For several years the appropriation for this purpose has been cut pretty close; but your committee, after inquiry, notwithstanding the present condition of the Treasury, recommend an increase of $75,000. The appropriation for the current year is $225,000, and in the preceding bill I think the amount was the same. We recommend an increase of $75,000, making the total appropriation for this purpose $300,000.

Mr. HARTMAN. How much does the gentleman estimate it would require to complete all of these posts?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that. The estimate, I will say to the gentleman, is for a million dollars, and even that would not complete them all. The estimate for last year was for a million dollars. I think that is about the current average estimate for this purpose; but, as I have said, for some time past the appropriation has been only $225,000, and we recommend an increase of $75,000.

Mr. HARTMAN. Under the allowance provided for by this bill what will be the amount that each post will receive?

Mr. CANNON. I can not tell that.

Mr. HARTMAN. Is there any way that that can be ascertained?

Mr. CANNON. Only by application to the Secretary of War after the appropriation is made. Under this form of appropriation the apportionment of the money is a matter of administration.

Mr. HARTMAN. Then it is entirely in the Secretary's discretion?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. Depending upon the exigencies of the service.

Mr. HARTMAN. But the Secretary may devote the whole of this money to one post if he chooses.

Mr. CANNON. It is to be presumed that the Secretary of War will do his duty in the apportionment of this money, taking into account the exigencies of the service. I will say further that it was impossible for your committee, and I think it is impossible for the Committee of the Whole, to administer an appropriation like this by legislation.

Mr. HARTMAN. What was the motive of the committee in reducing the amount from $1,000,000, the sum named in the estimate, to $300,000, which the bill proposes to appropriate?

Mr. CANNON. Considering the condition of the Treasury in connection with the necessities of the public service, the judgment of the committee was that we would not be warranted in recommending an appropriation of a million dollars. But after full inquiry we were of opinion that there ought to be an increase of $75,000; so that the amount, instead of being $225,000, is now $300,000 in all.

Mr. HARTMAN. When the spring issue of Government bonds shall come, as it undoubtedly will, I presume we shall then have sufficient money to build these posts.

Mr. CANNON. That brings us right up to the question of how liberally we should make our appropriations. My position touching this and all other appropriations has been, as I have stated before in this House, that no appropriation looking toward new work should be made unless the importance of the work is so overmastering that a sound public sentiment would say we ought to borrow the money to carry it on.

Mr. HYDE. There was one fact which I forgot to state, that the precedents of the Fifty-second and the Fifty-third Congresses are all in favor of this specific appropriation. The Helena post was built in this same way; there was a specific appropriation. I forgot also to state that this proposition contemplates a reduction, not an increase, of military posts. The post at Fort Spokane (Miles) and that at Cœur d'Alene, Idaho, will be removed to this point. The reports and recommendations from the Army, which I did not trouble the committee to read, all point in that direction.

Mr. CANNON. The policy of Congress and of the Department for many years has looked to the abandonment of posts upon the frontier and in the Indian country. As the building of railroads has proceeded, the older posts have from time to time been abandoned, and new posts established at such points as to enable the Government to utilize its forces for the best interests of the service, taking into consideration transportation and everything of that kind. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HYDE] is correct in stating that from time to time specific appropriations have been made to construct some of these posts. The gentleman has cited, I believe, precedents in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses. He might, no doubt, have gone further back and found similar precedents in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses. But the gentleman will recollect that when those posts were established we had a very different condition from that now existing. We had a Treasury full and running over, so that we were paying from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 a year—sometimes $200,000,000—on the public debt, after providing liberal support for the Government.

The committee having made this recommendation in, I think, fairly liberal form, amounting to $300,000—an excess over the corresponding appropriation for the current year—I trust it will be the sense of the Committee of the Whole and the House not to undertake in this case a matter of administration. When the gentleman presents himself to the Secretary of War, I trust that that officer, in the exercise of wise discretion, may make a commencement on this post at Spokane. But I do not believe that we can safely undertake to go into these matters of detail here, because if we commence by saying that a particular portion of this sum shall be used at one designated place, it will necessarily follow that we must adopt similar provisions with reference to other places; and in such a course we should be undertaking to do, without sufficient knowledge, what the Secretary of War ought to do, and I believe will do much better. I am ready for the vote.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend by striking out the last word. It is greatly to be regretted that it becomes the duty of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of this House to state constantly to the representatives of the people that there is existing in this country a condition which requires something more and worse than economy in the public expenditures. Economy is one thing—just economy—economical administration of the country. Parsimony is another thing. But worse than either of those is the existence of a public necessity for the expenditure of public money, with an impossibility on the part of the House of Representatives to furnish that money. That is not economy; that is not parsimony; that is an admission of a condition which at the present time is unsurmountable and which we are all compelled to recognize and which we are all bound by.

I stood here in the Fifty-first Congress, when we were making appropriations liberally and generously—not extravagantly. No Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives ever did its duty more faithfully than did the Appropriations Committee of that Congress. In the two sessions of the Fifty-first Congress we appropriated something like a billion dollars; and our enemies called us, in language intended to be a reproach, "the billion-dollar Congress." That was their watchword and battle cry in the unfortunate campaign in 1892. In passing I desire simply to say that in no single instance were they able to point out where there was a dollar of money appropriated that was not needed for the public service, which was not wisely appropriated. Yet the cry was that we had been extravagant because of the enormous aggregate of appropriations.

Now we find ourselves limited. The question with us now is not, What is the public demand? The public buildings of the country, partly constructed, are wasting and suffering by the lapse of time, and we are unable to make the appropriations for their preservation or maintenance. The public works on the rivers and harbors of the country are wasting by erosion to the extent of more than a million dollars annually, and we are unable to appropriate the necessary money either to push forward the work or to providently protect the work already done. The demands of commerce for greater depth of water in our harbors and rivers have to be met by the declaration of our inability to do anything in that direction.

Now, I want to point out (and I have not quite as much time as I should like) a comparison between two enactments—one a Republican enactment and one a Democratic enactment—through which and by which practically the whole of the revenue of this Government is derived. And I want to show you in figures, figures that nobody will criticise or dispute, just where the fault lies, so that the Committee on Appropriations of this House is to-day compelled, in the execution of a plain duty, to stand here protesting against appropriations that are absolutely needed and ought to be made, in which the representatives of the people are interested, and appropriations which they are in duty bound to insist upon.

During the Fifty-first Congress we had enacted a revenue law, supplementary to a Republican revenue law, based upon the general principle not of revenue but of protection, and yet we had money enough under that law, and I propose to put in contrast now—and I can do it without any great exhaustion of the time of the committee—a few tables compiled for me from the official records of the Treasury Department by Mr. O. P. Austin, an efficient man who has given the subject careful attention and consideration, and who is especially efficient in these matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEELE. If I can be recognized, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If it is competent, I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, these tables, one by one, are as follows: The first I offer is a table of the receipts and expenditures for the first nineteen months of the operation of the Wilson law. I want the country and I want my friends on the other side of the House to realize what it is that they are responsible for, and to ask them to atone for what they have done in the past by a recantation in the present. I give by months the receipts and expenditures of the first nineteen months of the general operation of that law. It will be seen from this table that the total receipts amount during that period to $481,423,509. During the same period the expenditures of the United States for the necessities of the Government amounted to a total of $557,581,385, showing a deficiency between the receipts and expenditures during that period of $76,157,876.

This table, which I append, is in detail as follows:

I give also in this connection the customs receipts for the same period, by months, under the McKinley law as compared with the Wilson tariff law. For the first nineteen months of the McKinley law the total receipts were $302,884,886, while for the same period under the Wilson law the total was $257,069,273.

The table by months is as follows:

Now comes a table of the total receipts of the Treasury Department for the first nineteen months under the Wilson law as compared with the first nineteen months, and also the last nineteen months, under the McKinley law. I ask your special attention to this. It shows for the first nineteen months of the McKinley law a total of receipts of $566,919,004, and the total receipts under the same law for the last nineteen months, after the law had been assailed and discredited by the presence of a Democratic majority in the country, of $521,819,675, while under the operations of the Wilson bill for the first nineteen months the total was but $481,423,509. The table showing the total receipts to which I have referred by months, and also a summary giving a comparison of the two laws and the net results of the same, I append here.

These tables, Mr. Chairman, show simply this, that while we are here clamoring for higher appropriations, and nobody is more in favor of them than I am, we are met by a condition of the country that compels this economy of administration, or whatever term you may choose to apply to it, and it all comes from the domination in this country of a party—the Democratic party—a party which undertook legislation for revenue only and condemned the principles of the Republican party, repudiating in toto the proposition that we had a right to legislate in favor of the protection of American industries. It has come about in some way, in more ways than one, in fact, but the great way which rises above all the other ways is the fact that it inflicts upon the country a paralysis of business from which we have not yet recovered and from which we never can recover while the existing law presses down upon us as it now does.

People are coming here to-day asking the Republican majority of the Committee on Ways and Means to lift from a great industry of this country—the sugar industry—the incubus put upon us by Democratic legislation, and when we point to them that in the other end of the Capitol there are two representatives of their own State absolutely blocking the way of the very legislation they ask for, they turn in astonishment and say: "Why, we never understood it to be so." A very small matter is asked for in the matter of a change in the tariff law, but we are compelled to say to the representatives from Louisiana: "Go to the other end of the Capitol and tell your two Senators to step out of the way and permit the Dingley law to pass, and we will attach to it the amendment that will give you the relief you seek against the legislation of the German Empire;" and they stand aghast when they learn that the men claiming to represent the interests of the State of Louisiana to-day stand and obstruct the passage of tariff legislation of any kind at the other end of the Capitol. Silence alone on their part and the Dingley bill can come up and we can add this relief to the bill in conference. Will these Democrats do that much for their own local interests?

Mr. TALBERT. If the gentleman will permit me, I would ask if he has made a calculation as to how much the income tax would have brought to the Treasury if that law had been sustained by the Supreme Court, and whether, in his judgment, it would not have met the deficiency of which he speaks?

Mr. GROSVENOR. My dear sir, we might have gone out on the high seas as pirates and seized the ships of foreign nations and robbed them and put the proceeds into our Treasury. [Applause and laughter.] One would have been piracy——

Mr. TALBERT. Was the income tax of 1867 a robbery?

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). One would have been piracy, and the other was a violation of the Constitution.

Mr. TALBERT. Was the other income tax that was passed before a violation of the Constitution?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I turn you over to the Supreme Court of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I think I should be in very bad hands. I should rather stay in your hands, bad as you are, than to go to the Supreme Court.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is that the idea? The Democratic party have depleted the Treasury. They have left it bankrupt, and now their idea is, "What is the Constitution among friends"? when it comes to a matter of that sort. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HYDE].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON), there were—ayes 64, noes 37.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. CANNON and Mr. HYDE.

Mr. BRODERICK. Can we have the amendment again read?

The amendment was again read.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 53.

Accordingly, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice now, so that gentlemen can govern themselves accordingly, that if I can get one-fifth of those present to second my demand I will call the yeas and nays upon this amendment in the House. I want to do it out of fairness to the membership.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For compensation and expenses of two civilian commissioners and the assistant in historical work; maps, surveys, clerical and other assistance, messenger, office expenses, and all other necessary expenses. For foundations for State monuments, wire fencing, cutting out underbrush and mowing; historical tablets and iron gun carriages, for roads and their maintenance, and for the purchase of land already authorized by law; in all, $75,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and do so only for the purpose of asking permission to have inserted in the RECORD a memorandum handed me by General Boynton, which will give the House thorough and accurate information as to the status of this park. It may be relied upon. I make it a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Leave will be granted to print this memorandum in the RECORD, unless there is objection.

There was no objection.

The memorandum is as follows:

MEMORANDUM—CHICKAMAUGA PARK.

The portion of the Chickamauga battlefield already purchased covers 5,006 acres. This has been obtained at an average price of $29 per acre. With the exception of a few small strips containing in the aggregate not over 12 acres, all being inexpensive lands, this comprises all that there is present purpose of obtaining to complete that portion of the park.

At the Chattanooga end of the park there remains to be consummated a purchase of land already authorized by Congress upon the northern slope of Lookout Mountain, and it is the purpose to apply whatever can be made available of the present appropriation in that direction. It is the opinion of the Commission that $25,000 could be applied toward that portion of the battlefields of Generals Hooker and Walthall, which, by authority of Congress, have been heretofore made a part of the park plan.

The Chattanooga portion of the park consists chiefly of roads ceded by the State of Tennessee along the crest of Missionary Ridge, following the lines of battle of General Bragg's army. Orchard Knob is also owned by the Government, and at the north end of Missionary Ridge 50 acres belong to the park, covering the ground of General Hardee's defense and of General Sherman's assault. It is 20 miles from these northern portions of the park at Chattanooga to the southern portions of the Chickamauga Park, and the roads already completed between these points and throughout the several battlefields are some 50 miles in length. There remain about 10 miles of road to construct to complete this work of the park according to the plans which have been adopted.

There is no official or employee not fully engaged in the work of establishing it. Whenever any department of the work decreases in extent the force has always been decreased in corresponding ratio, and at present is at a minimum. Aside from the Commission the park force consists of one engineer and his assistant, one assistant superintendent, one bookkeeper, one clerk, and one messenger, four guardians for the 10 square miles embraced in the Chickamauga portion of the park, and two guardians for the whole extent of the Chattanooga portion, one driver, and one stableman. The engineer has charge of the park office in the custom-house building at Chattanooga, and has neither messenger, clerk, nor shorthand writer. The park headquarters upon the Chickamauga field is in charge of the assistant superintendent, who has neither clerk, messenger, nor shorthand writer; and the main office in the War Department, in which work continues the year round, has but one clerk and a messenger, and no other assistants of any kind. The historical work of the park is conducted by two assistants, one specially charged with preparing the Confederate history of the six days' battle operations in and about the park.

No item estimated for has been padded, and the entire sum contained in the bill can be well used in prosecuting and will well-nigh complete all of the heavier work of finishing the park according to the present plan.

None of the money appropriated by Congress passes through the hands of either the Commission or any of its employees. All money is expended upon recommendations submitted to the Secretary of War and first approved by him, and subsequently each item is paid upon vouchers which receive his approval, and are audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department and paid directly to those interested by the disbursing clerk of the War Department.

It is proposed to use the present sum as follows:

For Lookout Mountain land		$25,000
Salaries of Commission, employees, and office expenses		25,000
Foundations for State monuments	$1,500
100 historical tablets	2,080
Finishing the clearing out of the field	2,500
Gun carriages	2,100
Maps contracted for	4,500
Two iron bridges	4,000
Road construction, care of roads, labor of quarrying for foundations for monuments	8,000

An officer of the War Department sent by the Secretary of War to examine the plan upon which the park work was proceeding, to inquire into the efficiency of the force and the character of the work thus far accomplished, expressed the opinion upon his return that the park force was a minimum; that everyone in it seemed to understand his full duties and to perform them efficiently, and that the Government was receiving full return under economical expenditures for all money used.

Twenty-six State commissions are now engaged with the National Commission in locating lines of battle and other historical points connected with the operations of the troops of their several States within the limits of the park and along its approaches. It will be readily seen that this portion of the work alone is of a very extended character.

H. V. BOYNTON.

MARCH 27, 1896.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Shiloh National Military Park: And the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized to deliver to the Commissioners of the Shiloh National Military Park at the park, upon the requisition of said Commissioners, such condemned cannon, cannon balls, and shells as may be needed for the purposes of the park.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

At the last session of the Fifty-third Congress there was an act passed creating the Shiloh National Military Park. The sum of $75,000 was appropriated for the purpose of acquiring the land and opening up such roads as may be necessary, and so forth. In the estimates submitted by the War Department I am informed there was an item of $75,000 for this park. I see it has been left out of the bill, and my purpose in rising is to ask the chairman of the committee to state why the appropriation as submitted by the Department is not carried in the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I will state to the gentleman that we made very full inquiry touching the improvement of the Shiloh battle ground. There is yet a considerable sum unexpended. Of the $75,000 appropriated the sum of $50,000 remains unexpended. There is authority to purchase and condemn land. The original act bounded the territory that must be purchased. We had before us the chairman of the Commission and inquired very fully about the matter. We find that they have not yet purchased the ground, except that they have succeeded in condemning about 200 acres. Until the ground is purchased they can not enter upon the improvement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The work of acquiring the land and the laying out of these parks necessarily goes on very slowly, and in the early years of these improvements not very much money can be profitably expended, because the improvement of the park can only keep pace with the acquirement of title to the land.

Mr. CANNON. I will state further that the chairman of the Commission expressed entire satisfaction touching this matter when we called his attention to the fact that he had $50,000 yet unexpended.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. If I understand, then, the chairman of the Shiloh National Military Park Commission is satisfied that with the remaining $50,000 unexpended in his hands he will have sufficient funds to carry on the work during the coming year?

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improving harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal.: Continuing improvement, $159,000.

Mr. BARHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee, as we have reached Humboldt Harbor. The sum of money recommended by the engineer in charge of this improvement was $475,000. I understand why there have been great decreases in this appropriation. I understand, also, that at the rate named by the War Department the sum named by the committee will not be sufficient to continue the improvement until the 1st of March next at the rate of $30,000 per month.

Mr. CANNON. I will state to the gentleman that we found on inquiry that is quite sufficient. I will read from the hearing of the Chief of Engineers or his representatives:

The CHAIRMAN. Improving harbor at Humboldt, Cal. What did you have on hand on the 1st of July last?

Captain MACKENZIE. The balance unexpended June 30 was $442,000.

The CHAIRMAN. What has been expended since?

General CRAIGHILL. The balance February 1 was $231,000.

The CHAIRMAN. It will run about that way, as near as you can estimate?

General CRAIGHILL. Yes, sir.

The act of July 13, 1892, authorized contracts to be entered into for the whole work, to be paid for as appropriations may be made from time to time by Congress.

Amount of contract authorized	$1,715,115
Beginning with the act of July 13, 1892, there has been appropriated to date (in three acts)	897,000
Average annual appropriation	224,250
Amount necessary to complete the project (according to the original estimate)	818,115
Amount estimated for next fiscal year	375,000

A contract was entered into December 16, 1892, covering the completion of the whole work. Under the terms of the contract, work, including the delivery of material in place, must be vigorously pushed at such rate that the contractor shall earn not less than $300,000 per year, if appropriations to that extent or at that rate are made by Congress. Should a less appropriation be made at any one time the contractor must perform work under it and to the extent it admits within a proportionately less time.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, there was expended	300,244
Balance unexpended June 30, 1895, was	442,772
Balance unexpended February 1, 1896	231,912
Amount expended since June 30, 1895	210,860
Average monthly expenditure since June 30, 1895	30,122
Balance available February 1, 1896	0

Now, I will say to the gentleman, taking the amount unexpended and adding to it the amount we recommend, there is ample to run that work up to the 3d of March, 1897.

Mr. BARHAM. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that there is now, on the 1st of April—that is, to-day—$150,000 only, and that it will lack $30,000 to carry on the improvement until the 3d day of March. If the gentleman is satisfied that that statement is not true, and we have sufficient to continue this improvement at the rate of $30,000 per month, I have no objection to the appropriation as it stands; but I would not like to have this work stopped for a month after expending a million of dollars. We have got to a point in the construction of the jetties where it is of great importance to continue this work. This is simply for an appropriation of $30,000, and I hope, if the gentleman is not entirely satisfied, that $180,000 will be appropriated instead of $150,000.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman there is no difficulty about it. The whole work is under contract. It is exceptionally situated for completion. The contract has been made, and we not only asked the Chief of Engineers about it, but we had him take time; and after days had passed by and investigation was had he brings us the data which I have read to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is no motion before the committee.

Mr. BARHAM. No, sir; it is only a matter of inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. There is no trouble about it.

Mr. BARHAM. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

For national cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for superintendents of national cemeteries, pay of laborers and other employees, purchase of tools and materials, $100,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the committee in reference to these contracts for river and harbor improvements. We have just passed over them. I had not noticed until now. Is the authorization such, and are the contracts such, that the Government is obliged to have this work go on and to make payments from the Treasury as rapidly as the contractor may hurry up his work? In other words, does the contractor control the rapidity by which the appropriation is to be made or does Congress?

Mr. CANNON. Well, my understanding is that there is a minimum amount of work that the contractor must do.

Mr. DINGLEY. In the contract?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there anything in the law of that kind?

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that the law is a general authorization to the Secretary of War to make contracts.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the phrase is used, Mr. Chairman, in the original authorization of this contract work, that it is to be paid as the appropriations may be made by Congress. Now, it is exceedingly important—of course this section is passed, but contracts are quite likely to be authorized in the future—it is exceedingly important that the Government, particularly the Treasury, should have some control of the amount that is to be paid on these river and harbor contracts, because if we are going to authorize, as we possibly may in this Congress, a large amount of contracts on river and harbor improvement work, the contractor practically has control as to how fast he will carry on that work. In other words, if he compels the Government to appropriate and pay out in a given fiscal year any amount he may perform of this work, then we are at the mercy of the contractors.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think I have heard the argument made here that we must appropriate because the work will be so much.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will allow me, I have here a copy. These improvements run in this way: Under the terms of the contract the work must be prosecuted as rapidly as the Engineer officer may indicate, "provided funds are available in payment thereof." That is a qualification put upon the Engineer officer. Now, I will go a step further. The contractor will not be required to dredge more than so many cubic yards in any one month. There are two limitations. One upon the engineer, that is the qualification as to the funds being available, and then as to the maximum amount of work which he may require the contractor to do. Therefore the matter is always within your control.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that so?

Mr. BINGHAM. That runs in all the contracts.

Mr. DINGLEY. But is it true, for example, in the contracts for the next fiscal year?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know about the new contracts. What I have said applies to the old contracts.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, is it true under the old form of contract, if we should follow that form? Suppose this deficiency in the Treasury should go on; we are borrowing money for whatever expenditures we are making for this extraordinary work. Now, are we tied up under this contract system so that we must go on borrowing money for the purpose of doing the work, or can we suspend the work for the time being?

Mr. BINGHAM. Your engineer officer always has the matter under his control, being governed by the available funds that Congress appropriates; and the contractor is protected by the fact that he can not be called upon to do more than so much work each month; so that the Government is protected and the contractor is protected.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then it is in the power of the Government to suspend this work?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly. The matter is regulated by the funds that are appropriated.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have frequently heard the argument made in respect to these works that the contractor will do a certain amount of work, and that therefore the appropriation must be made. I had supposed that we had fixed these contracts so that we could appropriate just as fast or just as slowly as we chose, and not be controlled by the contractors. If that is not so, I think the matter ought to be regulated so as to have it understood that the Government has control of the rate of speed at which the work shall be prosecuted, and not the contractor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that the real object of letting these works under contract is to get the benefit of the cheapening of the operations by reason of contracting for a certain amount; and therefore, if the Government stops the work of construction, it will be at the expense of the Government, and the cost of completing the work will be practically what it would be under the old system. For that reason it is necessary to go forward continuously in order to get the benefit of the contract system.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have always deprecated the injection of matters political when an appropriation bill is under consideration, and I would not now notice the remarks made a few moments ago by my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] if it were not for the fact that he appears here as the advance agent of the McKinley boom. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, from my standpoint I desire for a few moments to state some facts. When Grover Cleveland retired from the Presidency on the 4th day of March, 1889, the credit of this Government was unquestioned by the commercial world. On the 14th of July, 1890, during a Republican Administration, when the Republican party had control of this Government, what was known as the Sherman law was passed. At that time 90 per cent of the money that came into the Treasury of the United States from the custom-houses was being paid in gold. From that hour the commercial world took alarm, and during the remainder of that Republican Administration there was increasing and augmenting evidences of financial distress. On the 1st day of January, 1891, the gold receipts had fallen from 90 to 75 per cent. By the 1st day of January, 1892, they had fallen to 40 per cent. By the 1st day of January, 1893, they had fallen to 8 per cent. The day that Grover Cleveland was inaugurated President of the United States a second time they had fallen to 4 per cent. By the 1st day of April, 1893, they had fallen to 2 per cent, and when he called Congress in extra session in August, 1893, not one grain of gold was finding its way into the Treasury of the United States through the channel of the custom-houses. At that time this great Republic was reeling and rocking in the throes of a great financial panic. From that day until this, this Government of ours has been in financial distress. The whole commercial world recognizes it. The whole business world knows it.

What effect has that had upon our revenue receipts? What effect has it had upon the receipts of our custom-houses? What effect has it had upon the receipts in our Internal-Revenue Bureau? And yet the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] takes that period of distress as his standard of comparison to show that there has been a falling off in the revenues, and holds up the McKinley law as a guide out of the difficulty.

Mr. Chairman, this logic will not do. The responsibility for that condition of affairs is on the Republican party, and it is on the gentleman's champion, William McKinley. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman's proposition is that the way out of this difficulty is to filch money from the pockets of the people by means of class legislation. I for one stand here to say that the Wilson bill, but for the conditions imposed upon the country by the Sherman law and by the financial distress which followed it, would have yielded money enough to support the Government, and that the deficiency which the gentleman has pointed out——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

By unanimous consent, the time of Mr. PATTERSON was extended for five minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that, aside from the income-tax feature of the Wilson bill, if this country had not been burdened with the conditions to which I have referred the Wilson law would have yielded enough revenue to support this Government—aye, it would have yielded more than the McKinley law!

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman whom my friend from Ohio champions as a candidate for the Presidency represents the idea of practically relegating the financial question to the rear. In Ohio they have straddled the question. They have declared for a gold and a silver standard. They dodged the question there, and after having dodged it they come before the country and hold up as the sole remedy, the sole relief from existing conditions, the further taxation of the people.

Make the country prosperous by taxing the people! Make the country prosperous by taking the money out of the pocket of A and transferring it to the pocket of B! That is the doctrine. I wish to say to my friend from Ohio that he can not escape the main issue. The whole commercial world, the entire business community of the United States, knows where the disease lies—knows where the trouble is; and there is no escaping the issue. I predict to-day that if the Republican party follows the Ohio platform and nominates William McKinley upon the idea that there is no salvation for this country except in a high protective tariff, it is doomed to defeat, as it was in 1892. Oh, if I could have my fellow-Democrats to see this thing as I see it. [Laughter.] If we could bring the great Democratic party up to the standard which I am advocating. [Laughter.] Gentlemen may laugh; but if the Democratic party stood for the liberty of the citizen; if it stood for the liberty of the State; if it stood for the liberty of commerce; if it stood for tariff reform and sound money, there is no escape from it. It would regain the confidence of the people; it would retain the control of the administration of this Government.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. As the gentleman appealed to his Democratic colleagues, I should like to ask him this question: Did he not say in 1893 that if we would repeal the silver-purchasing clause of the Sherman law all these good things would follow?

Mr. PATTERSON. I did not. I was dealing with my Republican friend from Ohio——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You turned to us.

Mr. PATTERSON. But as long as the gentleman has asked me the question, I will briefly answer it. Yes, I believed that the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law would have a great tendency, as it did have, to restore public confidence, to restore public credit, and bring about a better condition of affairs. The fact is that within less than a month after the repealing act was passed the receipts of gold in the custom-houses went up to nearly 50 per cent. But Congress convened again, the Democratic party having control of all the departments of the Government. We clamored for the free coinage of silver, and we never tired in keeping the country in a state of distress and doubt and anxiety in respect to the stability of our currency. I freely admit that the conduct of the Fifty-third Congress perpetuated that condition of affairs which the called session of that Congress found existing in August, 1893—in a modified form, however. But I will not discusses that question further.

Mr. SHAW. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, one of the first demands made upon an ambassador coming from a foreign country and purporting to represent a sovereignty is that he shall present his credentials and make known whom he represents. Mr. Chairman, I did not speak——

Mr. PATTERSON. If the gentleman wants to know whom I represent in what I say, my reply is, I represent, so far as I can, and in a very modest way, a Democratic Administration. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the few remarks which I made a short time ago, and which were mainly made up of figures——

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman from Ohio accept the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee as a presentation of his credentials?

Mr. GROUT. I supposed that the gentleman represented a Congressional district in Tennessee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think I can make the matter plain if I can have the opportunity for a few moments.

In what I said, Mr. Chairman, I undertook to represent the general trend of the political party to which I belong. I did not speak on behalf of any particular individual; I did not say anything about any one person. But the gentleman has the misfortune just at this time to represent nobody on God's earth unless it be himself; and I think he has had a struggle with himself. [Laughter and applause.] I read the other day that the leaders of his State—the Senators, and most of the Representatives on this floor—held a convention or a gathering down in Tennessee; and it was announced in the public press that the State of Tennessee in the Chicago convention would be overwhelmingly in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I read that the gentleman had wrapped "the drapery of his couch about him" and did not lie "down to pleasant dreams," but fled away to the wilds of Missouri, and entered upon a pilgrimage of education of the benighted denizens of that magnificent State. And I learned with a good deal of interest, through the public press of both parties, that on his return to St. Louis, on his way here, it was announced officially by the Democratic party there that in the Chicago convention that State would be overwhelmingly in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that my friend, able as he is, distinguished as he is, comes here without credentials. He is a political guerrilla. [Laughter.] He does not belong to any political party.

Mr. BINGHAM. In nautical language he is a "tramp."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; he is what they call in the merchant marine a "tramp." He goes from port to port. [Laughter.] He talks about somebody on this side representing some candidate. I do not know anything about that. But whom does he represent?

Several MEMBERS. Cleveland.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Cleveland! Why, Mr. Chairman, from the day the Fifty-third Congress was organized down to to-day Mr. Cleveland has not been able to rally a majority of the Democrats in either body of this legislative organization. He has been an Ishmaelite in politics, with his hand against every Democratic organization and every Democratic organization against him.

I do not care to discuss who was right and who was wrong. The presumption is that anybody who is against the great body of the Democratic party is always right. [Laughter and applause.] I was talking about the effect on the country of the change of Administration, and the gentleman answered by getting into a controversy with his own party. [Laughter.] I was talking of the effect of the diminution of our revenues and the paralysis of our business, and am answered by the gentleman saying that the Democrats of the Fifty-third Congress did not behave themselves. Certainly not; they never do. [Laughter.] But what right has the gentleman who differs with me to read a lecture to the Democrats?

I submit my figures must stand, and the condition of the public Treasury must stand, the paralysis of public business everywhere throughout the country must stand, until that party, not under the leadership of any one man, but under the inspiration of the great principles which it indorses, comes back into power and sets right that which went wrong in 1892. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For superintendents of national cemeteries: For pay of 75 superintendents of national cemeteries, $61,880.

[The reading of the above was greeted with laughter and applause.]

Mr. MEREDITH. I wish to say to our friends on this side of the House that we can not be buried in the national cemeteries, so we have no interest in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Road to national cemetery, Presidio of San Francisco, Cal.: For continuing the work of improving the reservation at the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., by developing and perfecting the water supply, the reclaiming of sand dunes, the planting of trees and shrubs, and construction of new roads, the erection of a permanent fence or wall on the south and east lines of the reservation, the erection of permanent gateways, the reclamation of the marsh, and other general and much-needed improvements, $10,000.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, after the word "dollars," in line 22, insert the following, namely: "For the construction of a graveled road starting at a point on the north side of Cache River, in Pulaski County, Ill., where the present county graveled road from Cairo, in Alexander County, Ill., and the bridge across said Cache River terminates, and running thence to a point connecting with the present national graveled road from Mound City, in said Pulaski County, with the Illinois Central Railroad in said county, at a point on said national graveled road at or near the national cemetery in Pulaski County, the sum of $15,000.

"Said road to be constructed above high-water mark; to be 18 feet in width on top surface, graveled similar to present national road to said cemetery, same to be in continuation of graveled road to said national cemetery."

Mr. CANNON. Notwithstanding, Mr. Chairman, that this is to be expended in my State, I am compelled to make the point of order upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will kindly give me his attention for a moment—and I believe I have not occupied the time of the House very long—I would like to be permitted to explain this amendment and submit the facts in connection with it to the House, after which the question will be for the gentleman himself to determine whether he will care to make the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I reserve the point of order. I have no desire to cut my colleague out of an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, with reference to the amendment, that it is asked and offered in perfect good faith, and to meet a public necessity at this time. It is not for the purpose of subserving personal ends in the county in which the road is asked to be built. But in the county of Pulaski, in the State of Illinois, there is located what I believe is the third largest national cemetery in the United States. There—on the border of what was the North and the South, the armies contending within a few miles of that place during the war—were brought to this point where this cemetery is located thousands and thousands of those who had fallen in defense of their country, as well as many of those who had fallen in defense of the Lost Cause. They were buried in what was then a swamp, but since that time—since the close of the war—the Government has built along that national cemetery a levee which is from 14 to 15 feet in width to protect the graves of those who fell in that struggle, both North and South, and were buried there, from being covered with the waters of that swampy country.

In the Fifty-first Congress I asked an appropriation of $25,000 to build a graveled road to this national cemetery, starting at the point, mentioned in the amendment, leading to the cemetery, and from there to the Illinois Central Railroad. I asked it for the purpose of furnishing to those who desired to place flowers on the graves of fallen comrades and friends on each 30th of May an opportunity of being able to travel to the cemetery without having to go in dugouts at that time. Congress failed to give the $25,000, but did give an appropriation of $10,000. That was not sufficient to construct the road in the manner that it was necessary to construct it to the cemetery from the point mentioned in the amendment; but I was grateful for this small amount, and believed that I would be doing the people and the country a service to accept it, and then go to the people of that section, poor though they are, and ask them to contribute of their means to assist a great Government like this in building a highway to one of its own national cemeteries. I received the $10,000, and my people raised $8,000 themselves to assist the Government in building that piece of road. They built it as well as they could, and they have built a good one, as far as the means allowed; but there is yet 1¼ miles that is necessary to complete the entire work, and for that purpose I desire to have this money appropriated to construct and complete the road and all the roads that the Government needs to the national cemetery there. It is but a small amount.

I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it may be that under the rules of the House the point of order might be raised against this appropriation; but less than two hours ago this House voted an appropriation, which was subject to the point of order, to purchase a two-story brick building in this city, where Lincoln died. I think the House performed a patriotic duty, and that the chairman of the committee and members of the House did themselves credit and justice by not raising the point of order and by making the appropriation. Without a dissenting voice on either side, we voted to buy that house, and now I am asking a less sum to build a road to a silent city where thousands of the nation's dead lie sleeping. Will the chairman, patriotic as he is, will any one refuse this small amount, which I assure the House is all we will ever ask? And we shall have to raise money out of our own pockets to complete this road, even with this amount which I do ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I should like about a minute longer.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the gentleman have his minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Then, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I simply desire to say that I trust the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not press his point of order to this small amount asked for national purposes and for the benefit of the people of this country.

A MEMBER. What is the amount?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Fifteen thousand dollars. Within that cemetery there are 26 States of this Union represented. In that silent city sleep citizens from 26 States of this Union, and their friends desire to have proper facilities for visiting their resting place on the 30th of May. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. How much road is it desired to complete?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. About one mile and a quarter.

Mr. CANNON. Is it inside the cemetery or outside of the cemetery?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. The road is outside of the cemetery of course.

Mr. CANNON. And about how far from the cemetery?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. This road that I ask to have built is about a mile and a quarter from the cemetery. I have here a map, which I will show to the gentleman, and which will explain the location. Here is the cemetery; here is the present national road out to the Illinois Central Railroad; here is the river which has been referred to; here is the gravel road, which has been built by private means, from Cairo, Ill., out to this river. They have built a bridge across. The distance from the national cemetery to this point would be a mile and a quarter. There are some points where the distance would be less than a mile and a quarter, and we care not whether the road is built to one point or the other, but on a straight line it would cost less.

Mr. CANNON. How far is it from Cairo out to this cemetery?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Seven miles.

Mr. CANNON. I want to get at the facts, because I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Certainly; I will give the gentleman any information I can.

Mr. CANNON. From Cairo to the cemetery it is 7 miles?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, there is a gap of a mile and a quarter?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, there is a mile and a quarter built from the cemetery toward Cairo, and probably about 4 miles, or in that neighborhood, from Cairo toward the cemetery?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. No; my friend is in error there. A gravel road has been built from Cairo here clear out 6 miles to this river, and the gap is from the river out to the cemetery.

Mr. CANNON. Is that a county road or a State road now?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. It is a public road, that was built by the county and by private subscription.

Mr. CANNON. It is outside of the cemetery. The Government does not own it?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Why, of course not; but we will give the Government the land over which to build it, as we did over there.

Mr. CANNON. Is it a county or State road that is proposed to be improved?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Oh, not at all. There is no road there. I am asking to have the road built. It is now under water, and you will have to go in a dugout to cross there.

Mr. CANNON. Does the land belong to private parties or to the United States where the gentleman proposes to construct the road?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. To private individuals, of course.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctantly compelled to make the point of order, in view not only of this amendment, but in view of the fact that many members have come to me asking that I would not make a point of order against amendments to build roads to cemeteries. It is ungracious, I know, to make the point of order, and I would not do it if it were not for the fact——

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. If it were not a necessity I would not urge it upon the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. The bare statement of the proposition and the bare statement that I am pressed on all sides to withhold points of order for similar amendments——

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Will you permit me a word here?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be interrupted.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Well, if he does not yield——

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; I always yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I should have added a point. I have petitions of many thousand people from that and other States to allow this little thing to be done.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, this appropriation is not authorized by law. I am inclined to think, from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, if the Military Committee will report a bill here that I would vote for it; but on this appropriation bill it is clearly within the purview of the rule, and I am compelled to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order unless the gentleman desires to be heard further on the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I was going to add just a word on the point of order. It is stated in one clause of the amendment that it is a continuation of work already begun. It is part of the work contemplated originally, and which has not yet been provided for. It is a part of the original work I asked an appropriation for, and I have stated in my amendment that it is a continuation of a work already begun. That is all I care to add.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Then I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for the consideration of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked for the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. That is equivalent to not making the point of order. It is ungracious, I know, to stand up here and resist an amendment of a colleague; but if I did not do it here I can not do it as to any other amendment, and there are a good many of them of a similar nature.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I believe my colleague has always objected to everything I have asked.

Mr. CANNON. That is unkind and farfetched.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. It is true, nevertheless.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word. My colleague has served long enough in this House not to plead that he does not know the rules of the House, and I do not now recollect what other matter he ever did ask for that I objected to. I hope I have his attention, and I will wait until I get it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. How is that?

Mr. CANNON. I hope I have my colleague's attention.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. He has served long enough here to know what the rules of the House are, and to understand that, standing as I do, charged with the care of this bill, that I may have at times to make points of order that run across the desires of individual members and of colleagues. The House has made the rule, and, occupying this situation, I make the point of order; and when my colleague travels out of his way, as it seems to me he has, in a manner not usual with him, petulantly to say that I lay awake at nights to object to something he wants, I think it is not just to himself; I know it is not just to me.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will answer to myself, and care nothing for the balance.

Mr. CANNON. Ah——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Publication of Official Records of the War of the Rebellion: For continuing the publication of the official records of the Union and Confederate armies, including the atlas of maps and plans, in accordance with the plan approved by the Secretary of War August 3, 1880, and for the compensation of the civilian members or the board of publication, appointed in accordance with the act of March 2, 1889, and for the compensation of such temporary expert services in connection with the preparation, publication, and distribution of said records as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of War, and for the purchase of stationery and for additional rent, not exceeding $1,800, and for traveling expenses of the agent for collection of records, to be disbursed under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, not exceeding $500, $145,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the compensation of any person not actually and necessarily employed in the said work of preparation, publication, and distribution.

Mr. SAYERS. I call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to a motion which I propose to make, to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 16 of page 75, down to and including the word "distribution," in line 20. I will state that the proviso was put on by the committee, and I think it is hardly advisable that it should remain.

Mr. CANNON. What is it the gentleman proposes to strike out?

Mr. SAYERS. The proviso; that is, all after the word "dollars," in line 16.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. What is the page?

Mr. SAYERS. Page 75.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman, if no other member of the committee objects, I shall not object to striking out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas make a motion to that effect?

Mr. SAYERS. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be agreed to unless there is objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Artillery school at Fort Monroe, Va.: To provide for means of instruction, such as text-books, instruments, drawing materials, and stationery required in the courses of artillery, engineering, law, and the art and science of war, and for other necessary expenses of the school, $5,000.

Mr. BOWERS. I move to strike out the last three words of the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, there is a seeming difference in the platforms in Ohio, in Massachusetts, and in New Hampshire, but I am satisfied that the difference is only apparent, and that at St. Louis everything will be settled, and we shall have only one good Republican platform.

Mr. RAY. That will be the Morton platform. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWERS. That will be the Republican platform. But I want to call attention to a matter on which I think we ought to take some action. Our attention was called yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] to some dangerous practices that were being indulged in by members of this House. You can find in the RECORD a report of the matter, from which it will be seen that these "silver cranks" here attempted to fool and deceive the manufacturers of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to take some position upon this question. It is one that must be settled, and the House ought to express its judgment in regard to it. I have therefore drawn up some brief resolutions, which perhaps the House may not desire to adopt at this time, but which I think reflect the general sentiment. I will read them in my own time. They are as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the so-called silver members of this body are dangerous cranks, threatening the prosperity and perpetuity of the business interests of the nation, and therefore ought to be expelled.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOWERS. We will vote on the resolutions together. The next is:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House no member can be a good Republican or a good Democrat who does not get onto the platform, and stay on the platform, invented, constructed, and patented by Grover Cleveland, and to which it appears the Republican party has secured a reversionary interest.

[Laughter.]

Resolved, That while we consider the silver members, owners, or representatives of silver mines who come among us seeking to benefit their mining industry through legislation as dangerous and a menace to the country, we at the same time welcome the presidents, directors, stockholders, and representatives of national banks who come here as members to protect and benefit their business; and we pledge them our earnest support in their efforts to establish an elastic currency which may be increased or diminished in amount as the interests of the bankers may seem to require; and also in their efforts to be authorized to issue more currency on less security, to the end that a system of "sound currency" may be established, every dollar of which shall be redeemed in gold purchased by the sale of United States bonds in accordance with the new system of "sound finance."

Mr. BARHAM. Mr. Chairman, I join my colleague in asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of those resolutions.

Mr. BOWERS. The resolutions are before the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from California better look out, or he may be taken in earnest. He may have some constituents who will not understand the sarcasm of those resolutions of his. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will take the chances with my constituents. I always did. My constituents understand that the miner and the silver member have as good a right to come here and work for the interest of the men who dig the gold and the silver out of the hills as the banker has to come here and work to protect his banking interests. There are two sides to this question, and I have got a little tired of this talk about "silver cranks" as men who "threaten the business interests of the country." You have not got any business interests. They went to the devil long ago under your "sound-money" system. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. Then, if I understand the gentleman, he recommends legislation here solely in the interest of silver-mine owners.

Mr. BOWERS. The Chairman has been making so much noise with his mallet that I have been unable to hear the gentleman's question. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for a moment, after the storm and the lightning and the wind [laughter], I shall be glad, if it is the will of the committee, to complete the pending bill this evening, and we can very well do it if we get down to business for the next hour. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of inspectors and deputy inspectors, office force, and expenses of office, $10,260;
For pay of crews and maintenance of 4 steam tugs and 3 launches, $48,740.
In all, $59,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "ten," in line 11, and insert "thirteen"; strike out "fifty-nine," in line 16, and insert "sixty-two."

Mr. CANNON. I believe we have passed that paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the two paragraphs following the one to which this amendment is offered have been read.

Mr. WALSH. I understood that the Clerk had just read the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that we have recommended the full amount of the estimate.

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; the appropriation is $3,000 short. The estimate is $62,000, and the appropriation recommended in the bill is $59,000.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Allow me to state, in answer to my colleague [Mr. WALSH], that Lieutenant-Commander Delehanty, who has charge of this work, assented to this reduction from $62,000 to $59,000.

Mr. WALSH. I think that this is a matter that goes beyond the individual opinion of any single officer. I think, Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter. The question of disposing of the refuse from the large cities adjacent to New York Harbor has been a perplexing one to every administration of affairs in those cities. This is especially true of the city of New York. I need not dwell on two prominent facts; their statement will be sufficient for my purpose: First, the importance of that city as a manufacturing center; second, its importance as the gateway of our commerce. One necessitates the wisest legislation in favor of the health and comfort of the producers, and the other argues for its own protection better than anything I could say. Two things must be preserved at any cost—the sanitary welfare of the manufacturing thousands, the prevention of contagion in anything we send to the States or abroad, and, besides, that condition of the harbor channels which will permit the giant carriers of commerce to enter and go from our ports over an unobstructed waterway.

The evils that are evident can be prevented by reasonable vigilance exercised in the harbor of New York. Yet I submit the present force is not adequate to perform that task. The usual mode of disposing of the city garbage is to gather it on the scows at the New York docks, tow it seaward, and there unload the scows. But, whether the subordinates have willfully disobeyed instructions, or contractors having the disposition of these scow loads of refuse have winked at it, the refuse is very often dumped very near and perhaps in the channel line of the harbor, and is a menace to the health and the commerce of the country—part of it by floating back to the popular resorts surrounding our cities, and most of it by sinking and making more shallow our already shallow channel.

You can see that this is not entirely a local matter; it affects every community having business relations with New York, and unless you desire to divert the lines of trade from New York, unless you think there are better harbors for our commerce than the grand harbor of New York, unless you think there are fairer-dealing merchants and manufacturers elsewhere, and desire to strike a blow at her well-earned commercial and manufacturing supremacy, you should pass this amendment. The members from the city of New York have from their experience about made up their minds not to ask Congress for anything for purely local reasons. But we do think that we are entitled to some sort of relief if we can accompany a local complaint with a demonstration of a plain menace to the health and commerce of the whole Union.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for the reading of the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISOR OF THE HARBOR OF NEW YORK,
New York, March 23, 1896.

SIR: Acting on your suggestion, I would respectfully submit that the estimate of appropriation required for this office for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1896, might be reduced $3,000 by appropriating a lump sum for the pay of crews and maintenance of all the boats, instead of a limited sum for each boat. This would enable me to provide a certain sum for contingencies, such as unexpected repairs, which might be applied to any one of the boats, instead of making an estimate for such repairs for each boat.

The estimate of appropriation required for fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, would therefore be as follows:

For pay of inspectors, deputy inspectors, office force, and expenses of office	$10,260
For pay of crews and maintenance of 4 steam tugs and 3 launches	48,740
Total	59,000

Very respectfully,

DANIEL DELEHANTY,
Lieutenant-Commander, U. S. N., Supervisor.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CANNON. It will be seen that in this bill, following the recommendation of the officer in charge of this work, we have given a consolidated instead of an itemized appropriation, and in doing so we have thoroughly cared for the work.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to my friend from Illinois that some injustice must be done to somebody by this reduction of $3,000. The original estimate, as I understand, was $62,000.

Mr. CANNON. I can explain the matter to my friend in a moment. The current law makes a specific appropriation for each vessel and its crew, there being four steam tugs and three launches engaged in this service. Under specific appropriations, if there should be expended for one of these vessels $100 or $500 less than was appropriated, the difference would go back into the Treasury, although some other vessel might be short $100 or $500. The officer in charge said that by making a lump appropriation the amount could be reduced $3,000 and that the work would be better cared for than heretofore.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest to the chairman of the committee whether it would not be just as well to give the $3,000 and allow this officer to employ three additional inspectors? Those are what we want there—not so much the tugs and their crews as the inspectors.

Mr. CANNON. Lieutenant-Commander Delehanty, in charge of this work, appeared before the committee and made his request. I asked him to put it in writing, and he did so. His letter has been read. It might be very desirable that three additional inspectors should be appointed there, if the gentleman would let me furnish them from my district. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I will see that the gentleman gets his share if I have anything to do with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I am ready for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WALSH, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the Medical Department of the Army is authorized to sell medical and hospital supplies at its contract prices to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting after the word "hereafter" the words "upon proper application therefor."

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment this amendment does not change the proposition as recommended. I have no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following under the heading "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers":

For farm, garden, and dairy: Pay of farmer, chief gardener, harness makers, farm hands, gardeners, horseshoers, stablemen, teamsters, dairymen, herders, and laborers, and for all tools, appliances, and materials required for farm, garden, and dairy work; for grain, hay, straw, dressing seed, carriages, wagons, carts, and other conveyances; for all animals purchased for stock or for work (including animals in the park); for all materials, tools, and labor for flower garden, lawn, and park; and for repairs not done by the Home, $15,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by inserting a comma after the word "dressing," in line 11 of this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For household, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $15,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by making the amount of this appropriation $17,500, instead of $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, under the head of "For farm," in the item for this Home, I ask that the Clerk read that provision again.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farm, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $6,000.

Mr. STEELE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "six thousand," and insert "seven thousand five hundred." There is a cut of $3,000 on the farm. If we can get fifteen hundred dollars more we can get along, although we have roads to build and few trees planted as yet.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I would say to the gentleman that for the current year you have only four thousand five hundred.

Mr. STEELE. But that is not enough.

Mr. CANNON. And we recommend a good deal more in this bill.

Mr. STEELE. The appropriations of last year resulted in forcing the selling off of a great deal of stock that was absolutely necessary. We could not keep it because the appropriation was not sufficient to care for it. We are trying to make the Home what it ought to be.

This appropriation, if increased as proposed by the amendment, would enable us to keep going until we can get on our feet out there. This is a new Home, and we will need all we can get to put the farm in good shape. We need roads and other facilities on the farm that will require this additional appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest that we have appropriated quite a large sum for that Home. We appropriate, for instance, $66,000 for additional barracks, $2,500 for boiler house, $5,000 for gas well, $1,300 for leasing additional ground, and a great many other items are also carried by the bill. We also include $6,000 for the farm, including the same objects specified under the Central Branch Home. The amount appropriated here is an increase of $1,500 over the current year.

Now, the gentleman says that they have no roads——

Mr. STEELE. No, we have not sufficient roads yet. There are quite large expenditures involved in the farming business. Farm hands are needed, gardeners, hostlers, stable men, laborers, dairymen, herders, and a large amount of the appropriation will be absolutely necessary in the construction of roads and the hauling of material.

Mr. CANNON. Now, seriously, let me say to the gentleman from Indiana, as I have said before, that the full estimate is given to keep the Home in this case. Every dollar has been given that was necessary for that purpose. We are trying as a matter of policy to keep the various items of these appropriations within reasonable limits.

I want to say to my friend that I have a suspicion, that almost amounts to actual knowledge, that under the head of "farms," at these various Homes, the appropriation is used largely in the matter of beautifying the grounds rather than for farming purposes.

Mr. STEELE. And largely for building roads, let me say to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Undoubtedly some for building the roads. But the appropriation is largely used to beautify the parks, and is expended for the benefit of people who do not occupy the Homes rather more than for those who do occupy them, I suspect.

Mr. STEELE. I plead guilty of trying to make the Homes attractive.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we have given large appropriations in this case, and I think we had better let the farm item stand as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon his amendment?

Mr. STEELE. I would like to have a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For president of the Board of Managers, $4,000; secretary of the Board of Managers, $2,000; one general treasurer, who shall not be a member of the Board of Managers, $3,000; one inspector-general, $2,500; one assistant inspector-general, $2,000; clerical services for the offices of the president and general treasurer, $5,500; messenger service for president's office, $144; messenger service for secretary's office, $52; clerical services for managers, $1,500; agents, $2,400; for traveling expenses of the Board of Managers, their officers and employees, $11,500; for outdoor relief, $1,750; for rent, medical examinations, stationery, printing of blanks at depot and necessary materials therefor, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $2,500; in all, $38,846.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "three thousand," as compensation for the general treasurer, and insert "three thousand five hundred."

Mr. CANNON. Let us have the amendment reported from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 86, line 9, after the word "thousand," insert "five hundred"; so that it will read "$3,500."

Mr. CANNON. I am compelled to make the point of order on the amendment. It is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STEELE. I do not think it comes within the point of order. The law provides that these men shall have such compensation as is fixed by the Board of Managers. The compensation of this officer has been $3,000 for a number of years past, but under a new system inaugurated at the last Congress it was provided that the treasurer of the National Home should give a satisfactory bond to the War Department. The Secretary has provided that the bond shall be in a trust company; that personal security that has heretofore gone on bonds will not be accepted, and under the ruling—having to give a bond of $100,000—this officer is compelled to pay $500 for the bond; and the salary has been reduced by that amount. It seems unfair to him to specify that he shall pay for that bond, and that the payment shall come out of his own salary, which is small enough anyway.

Mr. BLUE. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him just there?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. BLUE. I would like to know in what company that gentleman gets his bond, and also whether or not any member of the Board of Managers is interested in the company?

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, that is an implication that I would not deign to answer if it did not come from the gentleman from Kansas. I desire to say that there is no member of the Board of General Managers who is interested in anything excepting in the welfare of the Home. They are not interested in any surety company of which he talks, directly or indirectly, so far as my information goes, and so far as I am personally concerned I know I am not, and I do not think that any other member is. The company was selected by the treasurer of the Home.

Mr. BLUE. I should like to ask the gentleman a further question. I have understood that it is now required of the several treasurers of the different Homes that they, too, shall give bonds in this same company?

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman's information is not correct in that respect.

Mr. BLUE. I want to find out whether it is or not, if the gentleman will permit me. I have understood that they have recently been required to give bonds in the same company, at a large expense, while heretofore they have been allowed to give their bonds in the ordinary way, signed by persons who know them, in the communities where they reside. I wish to know authoritatively whether that is so or not?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly not. By a regulation of law provided by the Committee on Appropriations, at the instance of the Inspector-General's Department, I think, returns are now made to the War Department instead of to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department as heretofore. Another condition is that the bond shall be made to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War; but one of the officers—I am not prepared on the instant to say which one, not the Board of Managers—prescribes where this bond shall be given. He is an officer over whom the Board of Managers have no control whatever, who provides the kind of bond that shall be given.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that the Fifty-third Congress passed a law giving permission to any person who had to give a bond under any law of the United States to give as surety a company organized under any State law, but expressly provided that in no instance should any officer of the Government require a bond to be given by such company provided the person of whom the bond was required should furnish individual sureties, as heretofore? If what the gentleman states is true, it is being done directly in the teeth of an act of Congress passed within the last two years.

Mr. STEELE. I have not seen that law, and I do not understand that to be the law. If it is the law, I should like to see it. I am not saying that it is not the law.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think I can very soon find it.

Mr. STEELE. I think the officer who prescribes the character of the bond—I am sorry I can not give his designation or name—is not satisfied with personal bonds, and the law provides that the bond shall be satisfactory to this officer or the Secretary of War. He insists that it shall be one of these trust or fidelity company bonds.

Mr. BLUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that question in good faith, and I say here, so that the gentleman may have an opportunity to look it up, that it comes to me from a source that I believe to be reliable that it is required by somebody in the management of this Home or somebody under the control of the Managers, without authority of law—it is required that these different treasurers shall give their bonds in the same company, and that this general treasurer gives his bond through that company, and, it is claimed, at an expense of $500. I say to you that it comes in such a way that it smacks, to my mind, of speculation somewhere. And if the gentleman does not know positively about this, I hope he will confine himself to what he does know. If he is not informed, I wish he would obtain the necessary information as soon as possible.

Mr. STEELE. I do know that the Board of Managers have nothing to do with any company. I do know that this man is required to give his bond, not by the Board of Managers, but by an officer of the War Department, to whom he reports and makes returns, who prescribes what kind of a bond it shall be, and that the Board of Managers have not sought to have the bond made in any particular company; and I do not believe that any officer or any manager has any interest in any company, or that they have prescribed any particular company. I know that the Board has not done so, and I do not believe any officer has.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make another suggestion to the gentleman, if he will permit me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BLUE. No, Mr. Chairman, there is a point of order pending, and for that reason I want to ask the gentleman the question. I take the remarks of the gentleman kindly, but he has, in an expressive way, given to my question the force of an imputation upon somebody. Now, in order that he may understand that I am making the statement in good faith and that I mean what I say, I will state further to him that I have been informed that, in violation of the practices of this Government, this Board of Managers are in the habit of insuring the post buildings, built out of the post funds, upon the Government grounds, in a company at Hartford, Conn., of which General Franklin is an officer. Is that so?

Mr. STEELE. I do not know. I do not know of any building belonging to the Government that is insured. I do not believe there is a single building belonging to the Government that is insured. I do know that while I was at home a few days ago I inquired about the hall at Marion, known as the Stimson Memorial Hall, which was erected out of money that came out of the post fund and out of a charitable donation; a very large per cent from the latter. I asked the governor of the Home if it was insured, and told him it ought to be if it was not. He said that it was insured. I do not know in what company. That is the only building that I know of at any of the Homes that is insured. The Government buildings or those erected by it are not insured.

Mr. BLUE. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that all the buildings that are built out of the post funds at these various homes—I mean by that the funds that are raised by the inmates themselves—are insured by direction of the managers in this company at Hartford, Conn.

Mr. STEELE. It may be. I am not prepared to say if they are all insured or not. If they are not, they ought to be. But they are not insured by the order of the Board in any particular company, being in a sense buildings owned in common by the Government and members of the various Homes.

Mr. BLUE. No, sir; they are a part of the Government grounds.

Mr. STEELE. But suppose that memorial hall at Marion should be burned up; we can not come to Congress to get an appropriation to build it. By charity we got the money out of which to build that hall largely, and we ought to preserve it; and if we do, we ought not to take chances on having it burned down and lost. That would destroy the charity—wipe it out. Therefore I think it the part of wisdom, especially where they are for amusement—halls and churches erected by charitable appropriations—to preserve them.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question if he will permit me.

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. TRACEY. Will you be kind enough to state how often the Board of Managers meet and what is the extent of their examination of the affairs of the Home when they do meet?

Mr. STEELE. The Board of Managers meet at least four times each year, and oftener when occasion requires. It is the intention that they should make the necessary estimates of what will be required by the various Homes, to go through the routine business, and to hear complaints. Men are turned out for one cause or another; and sometimes incorrigible men are turned out and want to return. We look into all matters pertaining to the discipline and welfare of the Homes. We try to visit each one of the Homes once a year; and when we do visit a Home we make a very careful inspection, not only of the books, but of the Home. The men are all invited to appear if they have any complaints to make. We examine carefully the rations, how they are cooked, as to the cleanliness, as to the sanitary condition of the Home, and, in fact, make a thorough inspection.

Mr. TRACEY. One other question. Are these questions made a part of the examination by the Board—that is, are the bonds given by the different treasurers looked after and examined?

Mr. STEELE. Oh, yes. This has been a departure not of the seeking of the officers of the Homes or the Managers at all. It is a departure made at the last session of Congress, entirely different from what has heretofore been the custom.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will furnish him the law now.

Mr. STEELE. Excuse me for a moment. These bonds have been called for by the War Department and to be made in a security company by the treasurer and general treasurer. The bonds are not made to the Managers, and the Branch treasurers' bonds are made to the general treasurer, who is responsible for them.

Mr. TRACEY. Is the matter of the insurance of the post buildings gone into at these quarterly examinations?

Mr. STEELE. All matters pertaining to the Homes are gone into. I think I have seen something about insurance. Generally I have been one of a subboard who audit the accounts, and I do not remember to have been on an inspection of the buildings not in use by the members or those which are used for amusements. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point I wish to make is that no Government officer has any right to insist on a bond or any surety being a corporation. There it is. There are a number of companies organized under State laws as surety companies. This act of Congress was passed at the last session, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds," etc. It was approved August 13, 1894; and it expressly provided:

But no officer or person having the approval of any bond shall exact that it shall be furnished by a guarantee company or by any particular guarantee company.

So that if the case is as presented by the gentleman from Indiana—if any officer, whether it be in the War Department or Department of Justice, insists on any person furnishing a surety on a bond, the surety to be one of those guaranty companies, he violates the plain provision of that law, because under that law, and only under that law, would he have any right to receive any bond given by a surety company; and that very law provides that he shall not insist on it, but simply permits the person required to give surety to give a surety company if he wants to; and that is all there is of it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STEELE. But the statute also says:

Provided, That such recognizance, stipulation, bond, or undertaking be approved by the head of Department, court, judge, officer, board, or body, executive, legislative, or judicial, required to approve or accept the same.

Now, suppose that officer does not approve the bond.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The idea of an officer refusing to approve a good bond because he insists on the bond of a security company would be absurd.

Mr. STEELE. But that is what has been done.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, it is all wrong.

Mr. STEELE. I think so; but that does not relieve this treasurer from having to pay against his will $500 for his bond.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But he can still have individual sureties on his bond. They can not refuse them.

Mr. STEELE. But they do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has he made any effort to give individual security?

Mr. STEELE. He was notified that he must give the security company bond.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Who notified him of that?

Mr. STEELE. The regular officer. I am sorry that I can not give his name or title.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In what Department is he?

Mr. STEELE. In the Treasury Department, I think. On reflection, however, I do not know whether he is in the Treasury Department or in the War Department.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The Treasury Department has been accepting these security bonds ever since this act was passed, but in no instance has the Department required such a bond. The statute was only an enabling act, authorizing the Department to accept such bonds, but not authorizing it to require them.

Mr. CANNON. As to requiring such a bond this provision of the statute settles it:

But no officer or person having the approval of any bond shall exact that it shall be furnished by a guarantee company or by any particular company.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That is what I read a while ago.

Mr. CANNON. I did not know that the gentleman had read it.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. STEELE, it was rejected.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to submit a few observations on an amendment which is already passed. I shall probably require an extension of time, and I should like to arrange for it now, as I wish to deliver my observations in a somewhat orderly way.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman whether he would rather have the time now or in the morning? But first I will ask him how much time he requires?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I think I shall want about half an hour.

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman rather have the time now, before we complete the bill, or would he prefer to let the bill be read through this evening and then an adjournment be taken, the gentleman having thirty minutes in the morning before I move the previous question on the passage of the bill?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I would prefer to take the time in the morning, if such an arrangement can be made.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that I think I shall have it in my power to give him the time. If I can not get unanimous consent of the House that he shall have thirty minutes, I can refrain from moving the previous question for that length of time.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If I can have the gentleman's assurance of his cooperation in securing me the time, I shall be quite content, but of course I can not depend upon getting unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there will be any provision made for the other side if this should turn out to be, as I anticipate, a religious debate. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. As it is late, I would suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska that the safer way would be to finish the reading of the bill to-night, and when the last paragraph is read I will move that the committee rise. Then an amendment, formal or otherwise, would be in order when the committee reassembles to-morrow.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the gentleman would permit this paragraph to go over without final disposition.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That would leave only one paragraph, which would hardly admit of sufficient amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will now ask unanimous consent that my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], shall have thirty minutes, at the conclusion of the bill, to address the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman, provided some provision is made for those who may desire to reply to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CANNON. How much time will the gentleman from New York want?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I may want fifteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the reading of the bill in Committee of the Whole one hour be allowed for debate, thirty minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska and thirty minutes by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS].

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

For advertising in newspapers, including proposals for supplies and other necessary advertisements, $100.

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the last word. I send to the Clerk to be read the provision of the statute in regard to the bonds to be given by the general treasurer and the local treasurers of these Soldiers' Homes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The general treasurer shall give good and sufficient bond to the United States in a sum not less than $100,000, as the Secretary of War may direct, and to be approved by him, faithfully to account for all public moneys and property which he may receive, and the treasurers of the several Branch Homes shall give good and sufficient bonds to the general treasurer in such sums as he may require, and to be approved by him, faithfully to account for all public moneys and property which they may receive.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Department of Agriculture, including $10,000 for the Weather Bureau, $85,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether this $10,000 for the Weather Bureau is included in the amount set apart in the beginning for the public printing and binding. As I understand, the printing done at the Weather Bureau is not under the direction of the Public Printer, and therefore this $10,000 should not be included in the amount set apart for public printing and binding. It is not used by the Public Printer.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman asks me whether or not it is necessary to say "including $10,000 for the Weather Bureau." Is that the gentleman's query?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not exactly that. My inquiry is whether this $10,000 is intended to be charged as part of the appropriation for public printing and binding. It ought not to be so charged, because the amount is not disbursed at all by the Public Printer.

Mr. CANNON. This is the usual appropriation for the Department of Agriculture in this allotment of the printing for the different Departments.

Mr. RICHADSON. The only point is this: The printing officer in the Weather Bureau is not under the jurisdiction of the Public Printer; and the question in my mind was whether this $10,000 would be charged to public printing and binding, when really it is not chargeable at all to the Public Printer.

Mr. CANNON. I understand this appropriation is in the usual form.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

That paragraph 46, section 73, of an act entitled "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895, be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out the following words: "Of which number 8 copies shall be sent by the superintendent of documents, one each to such public or school libraries other than designated depositories as shall be designated for this purpose by each Representative and Delegate in Congress."

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand it, this provision will change the public printing act of the last Congress in respect to the 8 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which members are allowed to have sent to libraries in their districts. Is that all the change that is intended? Does the provision take away from the member those 8 copies, or does it simply change the law requiring that they be sent to libraries designated by the member? Is there any reduction of the quota of members?

Mr. CANNON. I know what was intended by the provision. It was intended to increase the quota of each member to the extent of 8 copies, by repealing the provision of law requiring 8 copies of each member's quota to be sent to designated libraries.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am in perfect sympathy with the gentleman on that proposition; but I am inclined to think the language used here would cut off the 8 copies.

Mr. CANNON. I think not. We strike out that provision of the existing law which requires those 8 copies to be sent to libraries designated by the Representative or Delegate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have in my hand the printing law, but I have not yet been able to turn to the provision here referred to.

Mr. CANNON. I have the law and will read the language:

To the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, 20 copies; to the Secretary, for office use, 10 copies; to each Representative and Delegate, 30 copies, of which number 8 copies shall be sent, etc.

The provision for 30 copies for each Representative and Delegate is allowed to stand, and we simply strike out the requirement that 8 copies of those 30 shall be sent to designated libraries.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman's explanation is satisfactory.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one section of the bill incomplete, under the head of "Engraving and printing."

The CHAIRMAN. On page 16 of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] desires to occupy some time upon that. I would ask the gentleman if he would prefer to proceed to-night?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; I prefer to go on in the morning. I shall take some time probably, and perhaps I shall bring out, by what I may have to say, some discussion upon the provision.

Mr. SAYERS. I would ask the gentleman if he proposes to move to strike out any portion of it?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will move to amend one of the paragraphs. I have no antagonism to the appropriation for the Bureau in any respect.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The Speaker accordingly resumed the chair; and Mr. HOPKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 711) to increase the pension of Uzziel B. Church;

A bill (H. R. 1244) to confirm certain cash entries of offered lands;

A bill (H. R. 5914) to amend an act to authorize the Interoceanic Railway Company to construct and operate railway, telegraph, and telephone lines through the Indian Territory;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 24) providing for immediate destruction of income-tax returns, etc.;

Joint resolution (S. R. 103) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates of cost of further improvement of Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 99) authorizing the immediate use of a portion of the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for construction of a canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River in construction of protecting walls necessary to the opening of said canal and locks to navigation.

REPRINTING OF CERTAIN REPORTS.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. CHARLES W. STONE, a reprint was ordered of House Report No. 795, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, on metric weights and measures, to accompany H. R. 7251, the supply of the same having been exhausted.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide 1-cent letter postage per half ounce, and also to amend the postal laws relating to second-class and free mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of House bill No. 2626, to protect agricultural staples by an export bounty; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HOAR on the 18th ultimo, concerning the fog bell near Castle Hill, Newport, R. I., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and submitted a report, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2549) for the establishment of a light-house on Swan Island, belonging to the United States, in the Caribbean Sea, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. TURPIE on the 25th ultimo, in relation to traveling expenses of justices or judges attending circuit or district courts, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with amendments, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MANTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 31st ultimo, in relation to the appointment of a commission to negotiate with the Crow and Flathead Indians for the cession of portions of their reservations, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2334) construing the acts of Congress in relation to the award of life-saving medals, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2120) to release and quitclaim to the commissioners of Lincoln Park, in the county of Cook and State of Illinois, certain littoral or riparian rights belonging to the United States, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 100) granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3596) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael McKenna, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 435) for the relief of the trustee of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2451) to correct the records of the War Department in the case of Capt. Henry S. Pratt, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments and to submit a report thereon.

I give notice at this time that I shall call up the bill on Monday for action on the part of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed and placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. On the 20th of March there was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report an amendment to that amendment, so as to include the Santee Sioux Indians of Nebraska. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill in reference to the Santee Sioux Indians of Nebraska, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY OVER INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS AND NEBRASKA.

Mr. ALLEN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2912) granting to the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad Company and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, its lessee in perpetuity, the right of way over a part of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian Reservation in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, to report it favorably without amendment. I desire to state in this connection, that early in the session a bill in almost the same language was passed by the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives, but a copy of the bill having been introduced in the other House at the same time, it met with some slight verbal amendment and was passed. I ask unanimous consent to put the House bill on its passage, concurring with the amendments inserted in the House, and then I shall ask for an order recalling the Senate bill which passed the Senate and was sent to the other House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the bill been referred to a committee?

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I will state that on the 16th day of December I introduced this bill in the Senate as Senate bill 941. A copy of the bill was introduced a few days later in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the bill been referred to a committee in this body?

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. What committee acted upon it?

Mr. ALLEN. The Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this bill is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs it seems to me they have given most drastic and extreme power to these two corporations to gain land and to hold land in that region, not only to buy land for right of way, but to take it in unusual width. It appears to me that it is a bad bill, but as it is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs I do not propose to interpose my objection to its passage.

Mr. ALLEN. I can explain in a very few words the history of the bill. Senate bill 941 was introduced here and passed. A few days later a copy of Senate bill 941 was introduced in the House. Senate bill 941 went to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and was reported back favorably and passed by the Senate. In the meantime the House bill, which is the bill I have now reported, had been sent by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives to the Secretary of the Interior and it came back with certain amendments, which are the provisos to the first and second sections of the bill, and as amended it passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. We passed the Senate bill. Now the House has passed the House bill with some unimportant amendments.

Mr. ALLEN. With two provisos.

Mr. PLATT. What the Senator from Nebraska desires is to have the House bill passed.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to have the House bill passed, and then have an order recalling Senate bill 941.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the measure has been acted upon by the Committee on Indian Affairs I do not object.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; it has the approval of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for an order recalling Senate bill 941 from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, without objection.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. BATE. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4053) repealing chapter 148 of the Supplement of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It is a mere local bill.

Mr. HOAR. Is morning business over?

Mr. BATE. It will take only a moment, and it is necessary for it to be passed soon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, that morning business has not been concluded. At the conclusion of the morning business the Chair will recognize the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. I shall ask for the consideration of the bill at the conclusion of the morning business.

ECONOMIC GEOLOGY OF THE MERCUR MINING DISTRICT.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. BROWN on the 30th ultimo, reported a substitute therefor; and the substitute was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, at the earliest day practicable, 5,000 additional copies, in separate form, with paper cover, of the paper entitled "Economic geology of the Mercur mining district," being a part of the Sixteenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, with accompanying illustrations; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for distribution by the Geological Survey.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE HEARING.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 23d ultimo, reported a substitute therefor; and the substitute was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report of a hearing before the Committee on Woman Suffrage, January 28, 1896; 2,000 copies for the Senate and 3,000 copies for the House of Representatives.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin introduced a bill (S. 2710) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Daniel O'Connell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2711) granting a pension to Ira Harris; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2712) to relieve the heirs of John H. Waring, deceased, and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction, and to remove the bar of statute of limitations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2713) granting a pension to Miss Mary Hayne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2714) to equalize the postage on monthly publications when admitted to be carried as second-class matter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2716) for the relief of Harlow L. Street; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2717) to regulate the use of a uniform flag in the Army and Navy, its proportions, and the location of the stars in the union or blue field; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2718) granting an increase of pension to Clarinda S. Hillman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VILAS introduced a bill (S. 2719) granting an increase of pension to J. N. Brundage; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2720) for the relief of Samuel B. Horne; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2721) for relief of owners or legal representatives of canal boats Swan and Lewis and Butler; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2722) granting a pension to Mrs. May Z. Eckels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2723) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael Neidinger; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PEFFER introduced a bill (S. 2724) providing for the relinquishment of the title of the United States to certain lands in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEFFER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADJUSTMENT OF STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 2624) giving to any State having a claim for expenses incurred in defense of the United States the right to have the same adjudicated by the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 181 of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, being the report of the delegates of the United States to the Fifth International Prison Congress, held at Paris, France, in July, 1895, for distribution under the direction of the Secretary of State.

CLAIMS FOR BARRACKS AND QUARTERS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to cause the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to reexamine Treasury settlement No. 133, being claims for barracks and quarters certified for appropriation in House Executive Document No. 234, Fifty-third Congress, third session, for the payment of which no appropriation has been made; and if found correct to report the same to Congress at as early a day as practicable at the present session.

FREDERICK B. BETTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 4632) for the relief of Frederick B. Betts, surviving partner of the firm of Betts, Nichols & Co., was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER. That is a little bill, appropriating only $250. A similar bill has passed the Senate three times. I have examined it; it is a proper bill, and I ask that it may be put on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frederick B. Betts, surviving partner of the firm of Betts, Nichols & Co., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250, being the amount of Treasury draft No. 5453 on Treasury interior warrant No. 4801, dated March 1, 1861, and drawn upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans in favor of Lampson & Hendricks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2410) to amend an act increasing the pension of Marcus D. Box, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 5127) for the relief of Abraham O. Waucop, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon from the Committee on Privileges and Elections February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

THE OFFICE IN ABEYANCE.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not know precisely what the Senator from Oregon means by asserting as a third alternative that the office of senator is in abeyance. He has not defined what he means by this expression, nor has he pointed us to any legal work which explains it.

As I understand, a right to an estate may be, or is said to be, in abeyance where there is no person in esse, or in actual existence, in whom it can vest, but there is a legal possibility of such person coming into existence. One of the most eminent of our legal writers, Mr. Fearne, in his work on Contingent Remainders, asserted that abeyance was a condition in which no estate could ever be; that there must be always some person in which a title could vest; it could not be in nubibus. Where an office is hereditary and appendant to an estate there is a possibility that the office might, like the estate to which it is appurtenant, be in the condition called abeyance if the estate itself was in that condition. But as there are no hereditary public offices in the United States, and can be none under a republican form of government, I can not see how a public office can ever be in abeyance in the sense in which an estate may be.

I know of no instance in which an office is declared to be in abeyance except that one provided for in the statute of Congress, Revised Statutes, section 1769, which is as follows:

The President is authorized to fill all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by reason of death, resignation, or expiration of term of office, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session thereafter. And if no appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is made to an office so vacant or temporarily filled during such next session of the Senate, the office shall remain in abeyance without any salary, fees, or emoluments attached thereto until it is filled by appointment thereto, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and during such time the powers and duties belonging to such office shall be exercised by such other officer as may, by law, exercise such powers and duties in case of a vacancy in such office.

According to this definition of abeyance, the following is the situation:

First. The office is vacant.

Second. It can not be filled without the advice and consent of the Senate.

Third. Until so filled it remains in abeyance.

Which is described to be without salary, fees, or emoluments; but its duties and powers are to be exercised by that person authorized by law to exercise such powers in case the office is vacant.

This means, when expressed in plain English, that there is an office vacant which the appointing power is prohibited from filling except by consent of another power, and until that is gotten the office remains vacant without salary or emolument, but the duties thereof shall be discharged by another officer as in case of a vacancy.

If that be abeyance, and I know of nothing else that can be called abeyance, then the office is vacant of a legal incumbent until filled in the mode prescribed and another officer discharges the duties thereof.

That can never be applied to the office of senator in the State of Delaware, for whenever that office is vacant, there is a peremptory constitutional command that it be filled at once by a new election, and no substitute, no other officer is ever allowed to fill it. It can only be filled by a regularly elected senator.

This is sufficient on the "abeyance," it being shown that the office of senator in Delaware was not in that condition and in fact could never be.

THE JOINT ASSEMBLY.

Mr. President, I have shown by reasoning which I believe to be clear and conclusive that Mr. Watson's office as senator was not, during his exercise of executive authority, vacant or in abeyance, nor was he suspended from its exercise. I have shown also that his right to vote as a senator during that term was recognized by the State authorities and people of Delaware in a construction put by them on their constitution for a century. I have further shown that the senate of Delaware and the joint assembly of the general assembly of that State fully recognized Mr. Watson's right as I have stated it, and thus concurred in and repeated the construction of the constitution of Delaware which recognized Mr. Watson's right.

I proceed now to show that the senate of Delaware, acting in and as a part of this joint assembly, and this joint assembly itself, in the most solemn and unequivocal manner, actually adjudged that Mr. Watson, on May 9, 1895, was a senator legally and constitutionally in his office and that he had a right to vote for United States Senator on that day.

The constitution of Delaware makes each house of its legislature the judge of the election and qualifications and returns of its members. In Mr. Watson's case there is no dispute as to the election or returns. He has been sworn in and acted without dispute or controversy as a senator. This is the judgment of the senate of Delaware as to both, and also as to his qualifications, up to the point where this controversy begins.

No one pretends we can go behind the action of the State senate in accepting Mr. Watson at first as a legally qualified and elected senator. The controversy is that, conceding these in the first instance as finally settled and determined, has he become disqualified since, so that he could not, under the constitution and laws of Delaware, on the 9th of May, 1895, cast his vote for United States Senator, and can we so adjudge—have we that power?

It is alleged that there has been no judging by the senate of Delaware on this point. The senate, it is claimed, has not acted on it. If it be the meaning of this contention on the other side that, in order to prevent this Senate from reversing the action of the senate of Delaware on its judgment as to the qualifications of its members, there must have been an actual contest made and that case tried and determined, then any rule prohibiting us from reversing the action of a State body on this subject is utterly worthless. For in nearly every instance there has not been, and never will be, such a case made and tried, as there are rarely contests of this sort. And, under that view, we are at liberty to try in every case the qualifications of a member of the State legislature, when such trial may be asked for, in a contest for a seat in this body.

I take it that no such rule will be seriously contended for.

Then, when is there such a judgment as will conclude us, if in truth any judgment is necessary?

My answer is that the mere fact that a State legislative body accepts a man as qualified and elected and permits him to exercise his duties as such, whether there has been a dispute or contest about it or not, constitutes an adjudication of his right. That there has been no dispute or controversy makes the case stronger, for in that case it is certain that every member assents to his qualifications and election.

But it is alleged that Mr. Watson took his seat so near the time of the departure of the senate for the joint assembly that there was no time for such trial. But there was time for objection. Mr. Watson performed several duties as presiding officer of the senate, and one an essential duty, in announcing that the senate proceed to the house of representatives. No one objected to the announcement, but every member assented to his authority to make it by obeying it. Did not failure to object, as there was time for that, imply an assent on the part of every member that Mr. Watson was rightfully exercising his office as senator? That was an adjudication expressly affirming that right.

THE JOINT ASSEMBLY WAS THE LEGISLATURE.

But, moreover, the joint assembly was the legislature of Delaware, or else it had no power to choose a Senator. The Constitution of the United States provides for two Senators from each State, "chosen by the legislature thereof." No other body, official or otherwise, has power to choose a Senator (for a full term). Such action must be by the legislature, and by the legislature alone. Whether as an original question the legislature can, by act of Congress, be authorized and compelled to act except as provided for by the State law, each house acting separately, I will not inquire at this day, as it is settled that such legislature may—even must—act (after a failure of the two houses to agree) in joint assembly in pursuance of the act of Congress. But whether the choosing comes from the concurrent action of the two houses or from the single action of the joint assembly of the two houses, such choosing is by the legislature, or else it is not a constitutional choosing, and Mr. Du Pont's case fails on that ground. The constitution of Delaware declares "that the legislative power shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives"—two bodies. The act of Congress requires these two bodies to act together in a joint assembly in choosing a Senator. Still it is the legislature which acts, and nothing but the legislature, and that consists of the two houses. The two houses are in a constitutional and legal sense present and acting in the joint assembly, or else that assembly is not a legislature and therefore not competent to elect a Senator.

In this case they were not only constitutionally present but actually present, every senator and every representative being in attendance and participating in the proceedings.

What could this legislature, thus assembled under the statute of Congress and under the Constitution do, and what was it bound to do in order, in the language of the statute, "to choose by the viva voce vote of each member present a person for Senator"? That was its constitutional and legal duty—keep that in mind—and being its duty it had full power to do all things necessary to the effectual and legal performance of that duty. Among those essential powers were these:

First. To choose a presiding officer to conduct the proceedings, and a clerk or secretary to record them, unless such officials had already been provided by law and were present and acting. And if they were so provided by law the joint assembly had power to determine whether the persons presenting themselves as such were the identical persons so authorized by law to act.

Second. To determine who had a right to participate in the proceedings—that is, who were members of the two houses—and to so order that each member present should have the right to cast his vote, and also to take care that none but members should vote, which is again but a determination of the question of who were members and entitled to vote.

Third. To ascertain the result by ascertaining whether or not any person had received a majority of the votes of the members, and on that determination to declare a completed election, or that the election was not complete, and then to take further action from day to day to secure a proper result—that is, an election.

These are duties, some expressly enjoined and all clearly and necessarily implied, imposed by law on this joint assembly. Among them, it will be noticed, are the necessary powers and the plain duty to determine whether Mr. Watson was a member—full member—of the legislature and entitled to vote.

It is an unthinkable proposition that a law directing the assembling in one body of certain persons occupying certain official and legal relations as members of two other named bodies for the performance of a legal duty did not empower the assemblage to decide who were entitled to sit in it—who occupied the legal relation of membership in each of the bodies—and to exclude all who were intruders, or vest this essential power in some other judicatory then and there present and acting. Without such power present and acting the assembly could never meet. That in reaching this determination the joint assembly is bound by law to admit all who had been expressly or by implication adjudged by each of the two houses to be its own members and to exclude all who had been thus determined not to be members, makes no difference. For in that case the assembly still had authority to adjudicate and to determine as to the only material fact relating to the membership, namely, what action had been taken by either house as to persons claiming to be members.

It is true that the fact that a person had been recognized, and was then recognized, as a member by the body of which he claimed to be a member was conclusive on the joint assembly. This is only on the ground that such recognition is in fact and in law an adjudication which is binding on all the world. Nevertheless, the permitting by the joint assembly of a person so recognized by one of the houses as one of its members to sit in it and participate in its proceedings is a conclusive adjudication of his right to so participate in the proceedings of the joint assembly, and the exclusion by the joint assembly of one who had been thus excluded by one of the houses is a conclusive adjudication as to his rightful exclusion.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point, though I do not like to interrupt him?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator argues that the joint assembly has not only the right, but the power to adjudicate as to the right of a senator to sit in that assembly and vote for Senator. In order to test the validity of that argument, I ask the Senator this question: The legislature of Delaware is composed of 9 senators and 21 members of the house. Suppose the senate should have declared that a certain person, Mr. Watson, for instance, was not entitled to a seat in the senate, but yet that person, knowing that he would have a majority vote in the joint assembly because the house could outvote the senate two or three times, takes his case into the joint assembly, and by a majority vote of a few senators and all the members of the house it is adjudicated by a two-thirds vote of that joint assembly that he has a right to sit there and vote, would that be an adjudication that would be good and that would bind the Senate of the United States? In other words, would it be an adjudication at all as to the right of that person to hold a seat in the senate?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the answer to that question is contained in what I have already stated to the Senate; and if the Senator had paid close attention to my remarks, he would have found the answer.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I heard everything the Senator said on that subject.

Mr. GEORGE. I will state it again, and see if the Senator does not understand it better this time.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like a direct answer to the question.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course it would not.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is all I want.

Mr. GEORGE. I will repeat my statement.

Nevertheless, the permitting by the joint assembly of a person so recognized by one of the houses as one of its members to sit in it and participate in its proceedings is a conclusive adjudication of his right to so participate in the proceedings of the joint assembly. I reckon the Senator will agree to that. If this be not so the result is absurd.

The joint assembly was empowered and directed by the law of Congress which gave it existence to choose a Senator by a majority of all votes cast by members of the legislature, and to continue its session from day to day till such a result should be reached, and to determine when that result had been reached, or else they would never have known how to stop, and when it had not been reached, because then they could not have determined that they would meet again the next day, so that they might in the one case continue their proceedings and in the other cease from further voting. And if it was not an incidental and necessary power to determine that a person recognized as a member of one house and actually participating in the proceedings when such voting by the member actually affected the result, as in this case, was validly or invalidly so acting, but this power could only be exercised by the Senate of the United States, we reach this absurd result, that the law of Congress enacted especially to regulate the proceedings of the joint assembly and empowering and directing it to continue to act until some person had received a majority of its votes and had been duly elected a Senator is impotent for the very purpose of its enactment. By that construction the law requires a thing to be done and withholds the power to do it. More than this, if this Senate possess this power and it is denied to the joint assembly, then the Senate possesses a power to supervise and regulate these elections in a matter other than and distinct from the mere power to adjudge whether the election has been conducted in accordance with the law. We may annul an election conducted in all respects by the State authorities in pursuance of the law which we ourselves have prescribed, and we may affirm an election not conducted in accordance with that law. Or, to state the matter more clearly, we have enacted that a joint assembly shall choose a Senator according to terms prescribed by us. And if they have not the power to exclude an intruder, and an intruder comes in and they let him vote, then they are acting according to the law we prescribe. They have followed strictly the law we have prescribed, with the result that there is no election according to that law. We then say—not that the assembly violated the law, but concede that they followed it, and hold that because we did not give them the power to do a thing which ought to be done, and which was necessary to be done in order to perform the duty we imposed on them—we may proceed to do that thing and declare a valid election. This conclusion, I confidently believe, will not be adopted by the Senate.

SENATE OF DELAWARE PRESENT AND COMPETENT TO ACT.

If it be objected that the constitution of the State of Delaware vested the power of judging of the election and qualifications of members in that house only to which the member belongs, or claims to belong, and not in a joint assembly of the two houses, the answer, so far as Mr. Du Pont's title is concerned, is conclusive.

The two houses were present, constitutionally and actually present, in the joint assembly. It was the presence of the two houses which made that assembly the joint assembly of the legislature of Delaware; and if the power to determine who were entitled to vote in the assembly did not vest in the assembly as one body, it must have remained in each house thus assembled to determine who were its own members—or else the power to determine this essential point vested in each house by the constitution of Delaware was lost or suspended at the very moment when its excercise was essential to the proper performance of a high constitutional duty. That power can never be suspended nor lost, because its continuous existence is essential to the constitutional organization and action of the legislature. Being then in full existence, it was competent for any senator who denied the right of Mr. Watson to preside over the joint assembly and to vote to make his objection. And on that it was in the power of the senate then and there to decide it, or to withdraw from the joint assembly to its chamber, and there decide it. The senate of Delaware was there—constitutionally there and actually there—every senator being present. Then, having this clear power and the undoubted right to object existing, the failure of every member of that senate, all of them being present, to make the objection, and the action of that senate in proceeding with the election and allowing Mr. Watson to vote and his vote to be counted was a clear recognition of his membership and of his right, and is as solemn and as conclusive an adjudication on that point as was its recognition of the right of every other member of the senate then present to take part in the proceedings.

Suppose when each house, on the second Tuesday after the organization of the legislature, acting under this same law of Congress, voted for a Senator and the vote had stood in the senate a tie, Mr. Watson, having acceded to the exercise of the executive authority, presiding and voting against Mr. Du Pont, whereby if Mr. Watson had not voted Mr. Du Pont would have received a majority of both houses and would have been elected Senator. That is a reasonable supposition. It might have happened. And suppose further, that after this proceeding whereby Mr. Du Pont was defeated, or appeared to be defeated, the two houses had met in joint convention and had elected some other person, Mr. Watson not voting, or notwithstanding his vote, or had failed for the whole session to make an election, could Mr. Du Pont successfully assert his right to a seat here upon the ground that he was duly elected on said second Tuesday, he receiving a majority of the legal votes in each house if Mr. Watson had no right to vote? If we assert that he could do this thing, then we assert that the senate of Delaware, acting in its separate and constitutional character, was not constitutionally competent to decide upon the election and qualifications of its members; a proposition never yet asserted. If we concede, as we are bound to do, that Mr. Du Pont could not take his seat under that proceeding because we would be concluded by the action of the senate of Delaware, and we then say that we are not concluded by the same action of the senate in the joint assembly, then we affirm that the law of Congress, in requiring the meeting of the two houses in joint assembly, deprived them of their constitutional right to judge of the election and qualification of their members.

But, sir, we even do more than this; that is bad enough; we reach the conclusion that Congress, in exercising a power to regulate merely the manner in which a State legislature shall choose a Senator, may so provide that not only a necessary function and a high constitutional right of that legislature shall be destroyed or suspended, but that this suspended or destroyed function shall, in virtue of such destruction or suspension, caused by our own act, be usurped and exercised by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, I have to be a little elementary here. I have to go back to first principles. Everything that I have ever recognized as settled in the constitutional law of this body has been disputed from the very beginning of this controversy; and hence the necessity of a more particular examination into the power of a legislative body under our system to judge as to the election and qualification of its own members, that is, to determine what persons are its members. That power is never in abeyance, never asleep, never suspended. It remains in full force and vigor at every moment of its existence, and is exercised, though sometimes silently, yet always effectively, at every one of its sessions. At every roll call, on every division, every time a motion is made, the question of membership is raised and settled. Should an intruder invade the chamber in which the body sits and make a motion or attempt to cast a vote he would be instantly expelled as a disorderly person.

The permitting a person to make a motion or to cast a vote and counting that vote is a clear recognition of that person's right as a member. Such a power to determine, at every moment of its existence as an organized body actually engaged in the discharge of its duties, as to who has a right to participate in its proceedings is essential to its very existence, essential to prevent its becoming a mob of unauthorized and disorderly persons. It is this power which makes the assembly a legislative body and not a mass meeting with membership in all who may choose to attend. Deprive a legislative body of this power, or even suspend it, and its legal death ensues with as much certainty as a natural death would ensue from depriving a living, organized being of that organ which circulates its lifeblood.

If a legislative body were voluntarily to surrender this power it would be felo de se. The same result would happen if its members, instead of judging who were entitled to fill the seats ordained by the constitution to be filled, should invite a company of militia or a town council to sit with them and participate in their proceedings. Such action would not be a judging of the election and qualifications of its members, but a revolution, an overthrow of the government as organized by their constitution. And in such a case it would be the duty of this Senate, in exercising its power to judge of the election of its members, to say that no legal legislature existed competent to elect a Senator, and to refuse admission to anyone such a body might assume to elect.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question just there in the line of the argument he is making?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. The contention of the Senator from Oregon and those who agree with him is based mainly on section 12 of Article II of the constitution of Delaware, which reads as follows:

> No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor members of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State or the United States * * * shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.

Their contention, as I understand it, and as I suppose the Senator from Mississippi understands it, is based largely upon that prohibition of the constitution of Delaware. Now, the disqualification of holding an office under the State, which they claim that Mr. Watson did when he exercised the office of governor, under the constitutional provision is a disqualification that is enumerated along with other disqualifications, such as that no person concerned in any army or navy contract shall be a senator or representative, no Member of Congress, no person holding any office under the United States, and so on; that is, the holding of such an office as they claim Mr. Watson held is one of the disqualifications enumerated in that section; and they say the prohibition of that section operates upon him and prevents his being a senator.

I would ask the Senator from Mississippi, suppose there was a person voting that day for United States Senator in the joint assembly, a State senator, who was interested in a navy contract, or affected by some other of the disqualifications enumerated in the constitution other than this of exercising the office of governor, and his vote in the joint assembly, as well as in the Senate, had been acquiesced in without protest or objection, much less without any judgment of ouster by the senate, can it be claimed that the Senate of the United States can adjudicate his right to act as senator and practically pronounce a judgment of ouster against him on the ground that he was interested, for instance, in a navy contract?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that is a very plain question, and a very plain answer can be made to it.

Mr. GRAY. And does it differ at all in principle from the disqualification urged of exercising the office of governor?

Mr. GEORGE. I was going to say that nobody in the world—that is, I would have supposed some time ago that nobody in the world—would have asserted that the man was not a senator under the circumstances mentioned by the Senator from Delaware; but inasmuch as the case is exactly parallel and the same thing as the one now before the Senate, I must confess that I have made a discovery on that point.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. I would prefer to go on; but I will hear the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. Oh, yes, let us hear the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should be glad to ask the Senator from Delaware whether he thinks that precisely the same inhibition applies to a person holding an army or navy contract as is applied to a person who holds an office by this section 12 of Article II?

Mr. GRAY. I have just read the language of the inhibition. I do not see how there can be any difference. They are both inhibited from being senators or representatives. A man who holds an army or navy contract and a man who holds an office under the United States or the State shall not be a senator or a representative.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think if the Senator will examine the clause more critically he will find that there is a wide difference, and for this reason. I read:

> No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor members of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State, or the United States, except the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia, holding no disqualifying office, shall, during his continuance in Congress, or in office, be a senator or representative.

It does not state during his continuance to hold the contract as well. Undoubtedly this clause declares the office vacant absolutely, without any question, in the case of a person holding an army or navy contract, while as to a person holding an office, it may be open to question as to whether the office is absolutely vacant or not. In other words, that the Senator may understand exactly what I am driving at, if it had been intended to apply the same disqualification to a person holding an army or navy contract which is applied to a person holding an office, then, in addition to stating "during his continuance in Congress or in office," it would have said "during the time of his holding such contract."

As it does not apply those words to a person holding an army or navy contract, it is perfectly clear to my mind that the disqualification applied to the one, namely, the office holder, is not the kind of disqualification applied to the other, namely, the person holding an army or navy contract.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Mississippi will indulge me a moment, apart from the obvious criticism that can be made, a verbal criticism, I admit that the words "during his continuance in Congress or in office" are words of supererogation so far as the question we are now concerned in goes. If we leave out all the intervening words between "no person concerned in any army or navy contracts" and the prohibition, which we can do for the purposes of this inquiry, so as to read, "no person concerned in any army or navy contract shall be a Senator or Representative," then my question is, suppose, as a matter of fact, it is believed or proved in some way to the Senate of the United States that A B, a person elected a senator and actually seated as a senator, whose participation in the office of senator is acquiesced in, against whom no judgment of ouster has been made by the senate of Delaware, should participate in the election of a United States Senator. Can the Senate of the United States pronounce a judgment of ouster——

Mr. HOAR. Allow me.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall object to any further debate.

Mr. GRAY. And say it was void?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is a different question.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will allow me to say one word. I shall be very much obliged if he will.

Mr. GEORGE. I never in the world will get through with my speech if I allow this debate to proceed.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will allow the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Massachusetts indicate how much time he desires?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Mississippi has allowed one side to be heard.

Mr. GEORGE. I have allowed the other side, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. How much time does the Senator from Massachusetts want?

Mr. HOAR. Two minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; take it.

Mr. HOAR. In answer to the Senator from Delaware, I will state that the distinction is between an official incompatibility, which is the case of the governor and senator, and a personal disqualification.

Suppose the Chief Justice of the United States had sympathized with the eager majority who desired to convict Andrew Johnson and turn him out of office, and they had said, "In order to get a two-thirds vote, we will add the Chief Justice of the United States to the Senate, and let him vote, and thus count a two-thirds." Would that have been binding on anybody else under the sun? Is that the same thing as if the question had been whether some senator was interested in a contract? There is the broad distinction between those two cases. The majority in the senate under this great temptation said they would add to the senate the governor of the State, a man who had gone out of the senate, in order to defeat the choice of the people of Delaware. That is the difference.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course I desire to be as liberal as any man in the world to interruptions, as I have been, but it will prolong my remarks indefinitely if I allow debates to occur between Senators during the time I ought to be engaging the attention of the Senate. As I am making, as I think, an argument which is very concise, although it is of some length and requires some attention, interruptions make a break in my argument.

The requirement of the Constitution that Senators shall be chosen by the legislatures of the States necessarily imposes a duty on this Senate in admitting a person claiming to be a Senator of deciding that the body which elected him was the legislature of the State. How far this body can go in that direction it is not necessary now to discuss. Perhaps it would be difficult to draw a line which would always and under all circumstances mark the boundary of our power in that respect.

It may be that, in the language of Chief Justice Marshall—

> The power and the restriction on it, though quite distinguishable when they do not approach each other, may yet, like the intervening colors between white and black, approach so nearly as to perplex the understanding as colors perplex the vision in marking the distinction between them.

[See Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wheaton, page 441.]

We have no need to define the demarcation in this case. The validity and legality of the legislature of Delaware are not denied, but affirmed on all sides. The constitution of Delaware is plain, fixing the number of senators at 9 and of representatives at 21. The constitution is plain also in its mandates, that all these 9 and all these 21 shall be elected and shall qualify and take their seats. The constitution is also plain in requiring all vacancies in any of these seats to be filled, and that the total membership shall be kept always full.

The fact is also plain and undisputed that all the 30 members of both houses had been duly elected and were duly qualified and took their seats in their respective houses. The fact is also plain and undisputed that all these identical 30 members took their seats in the joint assembly of the legislature on May 9 last, and every one of them, without objection from any quarter whatever, voted twenty-eight times for Senator, each voting resulting exactly alike. If the contention of Mr. Du Pont that he was elected on the first of these votings or ballots be sustained, then the further fact is plain that the general assembly in proceeding to have twenty-seven other distinct votes or ballots for Senator did that which they had no right to do, because their business was completed. These twenty-seven votings were had by the unanimous consent and approval of every representative and senator of the legislature of the State, all being present and actually voting every time of the twenty-seven.

Here were twenty-seven distinct and unequivocal affirmations and adjudications, as shown by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], not only of the general assembly, but of the senate then present and agreeing thereto, that Mr. Watson's vote was a lawful vote.

I wish Senators to bear in mind that if Mr. Watson's was not a lawful vote, then Mr. Du Pont was elected on the first ballot, and when the senate of Delaware and the house of representatives of Delaware, both being then present actually, upon a proper motion, proceeded to vote again, they decided what? They decided that Mr. Watson's vote was legal and proper.

There is a little more on this subject which I want to bring out. It was omitted by my friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. Let the Senators bear in mind that Mr. Watson's vote being out, there was an election on every ballot, and that when the joint assembly or when the house of representatives and the senate proceeded to another ballot they necessarily determined that Mr. Watson's vote was a good one and that there was no election. They did some other things, too, which emphasized this, which were not noticed by my friend from Indiana. After the fourth ballot, after they had voted four times, each one resulting exactly alike, a member of the joint assembly, a member of the senate, I suppose thought they had been wasting time there long enough, and he made the following motion:

> Mr. Fenimore, of the senate, moved that the two houses separate.

It was their business to have separated immediately on the taking of the first ballot if Mr. Du Pont had been elected. They had no power to stay there after that. The joint assembly was a tribunal with only a special and limited jurisdiction, and that was to perform the duty of electing a Senator, and when that duty was performed they had no other power. Mr. Fenimore, who had been voting all along against Mr. Du Pont, supposing that, as the law of Congress only required them to take one vote, it was about time to separate, moved to separate. The yeas and nays being called for, the speaker of the senate, this same man Watson, then and there presiding, directed the clerk to call the rolls of the respective houses, and the members having answered as their names were called, the result was as follows: Ten for separating, 20; including every man who voted for Mr. Du Pont, against separating. What did that mean? It was a solemn affirmation on the part of the joint assembly that their business had not been concluded; that they had business on hand, and that business was to elect a Senator. If the Senator had been elected, it was their duty to separate. That same motion was made, as will be seen on pages 11 and 12 and others, five or six times, and every time it was voted down by the joint assembly.

But the committee undertake to meet this solemn adjudication of the senate of Delaware by asserting a proposition of law which I undertake to say was never before heard of, and which is certainly without foundation in our Constitution.

They assert that the senate of Delaware, if it made a judgment in this case, could not make it final and conclusive as to the law. The committee says:

> What the senate—
> Of Delaware—
> has a constitutional right to do is to judge whether a particular person is possessed of the qualifications which the constitution and the statutes have prescribed.

In another place they say:

> While it is the constitutional right of the senate of Delaware to judge as to the qualifications of a senator, this does not include the right to determine the kind or number of qualifications. * * * These are determined by the constitution.

If this only means that the senate of Delaware has no right to add to or to take from the qualifications prescribed by the constitution, then the committee has asserted a truism which nobody disputes and which is of no earthly value in this case. If they mean, however, as they evidently do, that in judging of the qualification of a senator as prescribed by the constitution, the State senate can not ascertain what qualifications the constitution of Delaware prescribes, then the committee asserts an absurdity and a contradiction. For how can the State senate judge as to what qualifications the constitution prescribes unless they can first ascertain and judge what qualifications are prescribed by the constitution? And how can they do this without considering the language of the constitution and ascertaining what that language means? What is that ascertainment but a judging as to the law which they are administering? There can be no answer to these questions which does not admit the fact that the senate of Delaware is full judge of the law as well as of the facts in this case.

If the senate of Delaware mistake as to the law or as to the facts, who can correct it? There is no tribunal, State or Federal, which has a revisory power. If the Senate of the United States undertakes to do this thing, then they usurp a power not granted to them. They possess the power to judge of the qualifications of their own members, both as to law and as to fact. They have this power by virtue of a grant of jurisdiction to them in the same language exactly as is the grant to the senate of Delaware—

> Each house shall judge of the election and qualifications of its own members.

In our case that language is understood to mean to be the absolute judges of the fact as well as the law, with no revisory power whatever, and in the case of the State of Delaware in their constitution it is held to mean something else.

This Senate has solemnly decided, whenever the question has been presented, that it has no power to revise or reverse the judgment of a State legislature as to the qualifications of its own members. The contention of the committee overrules this settled doctrine and makes this strange anomaly in constitutional law: that it requires both the State senate and the United States Senate to judge finally of the qualifications of a State senator—the one possessing full power as to the facts and the other as to the law. This is but holding that it requires both senates, State and Federal, to make a legal tribunal competent to decide on the qualifications of a State senator—the one body acting as judge to expound the law and the other as jury to ascertain the facts. Under this view the judgment of a State senate as to the qualifications of one of its own members is no more than a special verdict found by a jury—ascertaining the facts upon which the Senate of the United States shall render final judgment. It is impossible that the Senate shall yield assent to that view.

THIS SENATE HAS NO POWER, EVEN IF THERE WAS NO DECISION BY THE STATE SENATE.

But, Mr. President, I have been discussing at very great length a question which this Senate has no right to decide—no power to decide. My apology for this is that these questions have been raised in support of Mr. Du Pont's claim and urged with great zeal and distinguished ability, and though I feel assured that his claim must fail upon another ground independent of the considerations which I have pressed, I could not foresee that this ground would be accepted as good and valid by the Senate.

The Senate has ruled that way during its whole existence. It might, however, being somewhat of a partisan body, do what the Supreme Court has recently done, go back on its decisions for half a century and rule another way.

I now proceed to discuss this ground of objection to Mr. Du Pont's claim.

It is that the Senate of the United States have no power to deny the right of any person acknowledged and recognized by the legislature of Delaware as a member thereof. Our duty and our power extend only to this point, Was there a legislature of the State of Delaware, and did that legislature, in pursuance of law, elect Mr. Du Pont? We have no power whatever to inquire into and decide as to the qualifications and right of any member sitting in that body. Our power and duty begins and ends in the inquiry, What did that legislature do?

This ground is stated very clearly and forcibly in the case of Mr. TURPIE, decided in 1888. The report of the committee says:

> This body (the Senate of the United States) is made by the Constitution the judge of elections, qualifications, and returns of its own members.
> The senate of Indiana is likewise the judge of the election and qualification and returns of its own members. We must determine all questions arising out of the proceedings of the electors.
> But who sustain the character of electors is to be determined by the legislative body of that State.

This is the solemn decision of this body by one of the ablest committees that ever had a trust committed to it by the Senate, assented to by the Senate by an almost unanimous vote in seating Mr. TURPIE upon that report. The judgment is, we deal with the proceedings of the legislature, "but who sustain the character of electors"—that is, members of the legislature—"is to be determined by the legislative body of that State." That is exactly what they are trying to do here, neither more nor less, as everybody who has listened to the debate up to this point knows.

And as to the force of a mere recognition without an actual case made and a direct adjudication I quote from the same report, as follows:

> It seems to us that, without entering upon the question whether there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor (the presiding officer of the senate), which Mr. Robertson was duly elected to fill, the recognition of Mr. Smith (the person actually presiding) by a majority of the senate as its lawful presiding officer, and the recognition of the senate as a lawfully organized body by the other house as well as by its own members who remained and took part in the legislative proceedings, and by the executive department, require us to consider it as a lawful senate, lawfully organized so far as to be entitled to take part in the joint convention which elected a Senator of the United States.

Where is recognition here? Everywhere. The recognition by the executive department of Delaware, recognition by the senate of Delaware, in joint assembly; recognition by the house of representatives of Delaware in the same joint assembly, 27 times recorded on the journals, besides five other instances, to which I called the attention of the Senate, in relation to motions to adjourn and to take a recess.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]—who I believe was at that time a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was he not?

Mr. PUGH. He was.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Colorado made use of language which I want to read, not only on account of the high character of the Senator who uttered it, but also for the great truths it expresses in terse and unmistakable language:

> It does not lie in the power of the Senate of the United States when it comes to a question of this kind to reverse the decision [the decision of the senate of Indiana], and no matter where it may take us, no matter where it may land us, with reference to the misconduct of State legislatures, it never was intended by the framers of this Government that that question of the right of members of the Indiana State legislature to sit in each body there would ever be a subject of discussion in this body. We must accept [as] the legislature of Indiana that which the people of Indiana in all departments of its State government recognized as their legislature.

That is the decision of the Senate. From the foundation of the Government up to this time not only has there been no decision against it, but there has been no serious claim made by anybody that that was not the law. The eminent Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who was the author of the report which I have just read, in defending the report, said further:

> The objection of the remonstrants, the gentlemen who contest Mr. TURPIE'S title, was to the recognition of both these men—Branahan on the ground that he was unlawfully put in his place by the exclusion of the Republican McDonald, and the Democratic McDonald on the ground that he had no right to sit there, he being ineligible.

That is, not possessing the qualifications required by the constitution of the State. That was the contention. That was the proposition which the remonstrants made to the Senate of the United States, and asked to be admitted to test Mr. TURPIE'S seat.

Mr. PUGH. To show that he was an intruder.

Mr. GEORGE. To show that he was an intruder. They asked the Senate to permit them to prove those facts in order to unseat Mr. TURPIE; and what did the committee do? The committee said, "Taking all you say to be true, taking every word of your claim, as you have put it out here, to be true, we will not inquire into it. You have not said enough to bring the title of Mr. TURPIE into disrepute or into question."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to say a word right here?

Mr. GEORGE. I am not through with this point. I shall have to go back and read again the language of the report, as I have been interrupted.

> The objection of the remonstrants * * * was to the recognition of both these men—Branahan on the ground that he was unlawfully put in his place by the exclusion of the Republican, McDonald.

The charge was there that a Republican was actually turned out of the seat to which he was elected and another man put in his place who was not elected. That was a pretty serious charge. The committee said, "we will not look into that." Another charge was that the Democrat, McDonald, was ineligible, I believe, because he held the office of postmaster of the United States.

Mr. TURPIE. He was a postmaster.

Mr. GEORGE. And under the constitution of Indiana persons holding offices of that sort were supposed to be excluded from holding a State office. That was the claim made. That was the ground of ineligibility there, and Mr. HOAR, in defending this report, says:

> And in regard to both of which—

The man who had been put in, who was not elected, and the man who had not been turned out, who was ineligible—

> the Committee on Privileges and Elections are of the opinion that the judgment of the senate of Indiana is final.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I say a word?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; you may ask me a question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I would not wish the Senator from Mississippi or the Senate or anybody to understand for one moment that I deny the doctrine asserted in that report. I agree to every word of it. The case of Mr. TURPIE in Indiana was simply this: There were two persons in the Indiana legislature who were seated on their certificates. They claimed they had a right to be there. Two other persons on the outside claimed that they were the lawfully elected men to those two seats, and that they ought to have the seats. Contests were inaugurated, and the Indiana senate decided that the two men who were in had no right to be there and they put them out and put in the two contestants. That was a case pure and simple of passing upon the qualifications of persons to those two seats. The senate of Indiana had the right, and the exclusive right, to pass upon the facts that were raised in those two cases. They did pass upon them, and that was the end of it, and the Senate of the United States so decided, and decided correctly.

I will state what I understand to be the difference in the cases, for the question here is entirely different, as I contend. The question here is not as to the qualifications of this man Watson to a seat in the senate, but the question is whether there was a seat in the senate to be filled.

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer that now. That is enough.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The question is whether there was a seat in the Delaware senate to be filled; whether during the time of the exercise of the office of governor by Mr. Watson the senate of the State of Delaware was to be composed of nine members or of but eight members. I contend, and those who agree with me contend, that under the constitution of the State of Delaware during that time the senate of the State of Delaware was to be composed, in one theory of the case, of but eight members, and therefore there was no seat to be filled.

Mr. GEORGE (to Mr. GRAY). Give me the constitution of Delaware.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. You can read it all, but do not read simply one clause.

Mr. GEORGE. I am going to read just exactly enough to refute everything the Senator from Oregon has said. That is enough. There is no use of beating a man after you have ruined him and struck him down.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the reason why I do not wish to say anything more now.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Oregon says the senate of Delaware by the constitution of Delaware was to have only eight members.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. During the time that the speaker exercised the office of governor.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, I am going to read what the constitution says. If you can find the words "during the time he was governor" in the constitution you can read that.

There shall be seven representatives chosen in each county.

Three times seven are twenty-one. Twenty-one representatives were here in this joint assembly acting and voting.

There shall be three senators chosen in each county.

There are three counties in the State of Delaware. Three times three are nine. The Senator from Oregon says three times three are eight. [Laughter.] That is all of it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am afraid that is begging the question a little.

Mr. GEORGE. Everything is begging the question with my distinguished friend except when he is allowed to interpolate in the constitution of Delaware words which are not there and to erase from that constitution important words which are there. That settles that point.

With this eminent and conclusive authority, sustained by the Senate of the United States, by seating Mr. TURPIE, it would seem that no further argument is needed. Yet the fact exists that a majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections now report that we can go behind the action of the senate and legislature of Delaware, and by casting out a vote which they recognized and received as being cast by a lawful senator, determine that a choosing of a Senator has been made, when both branches of the legislature had decided to the contrary. This position of the majority of that committee imposes on me the duty of inquiring into the foundation upon which rests the rule of law stated by that same committee and sanctioned by the Senate in Mr. TURPIE's case, and also sanctioned by the Senator from Oregon in the remarks which he has just now made.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes, I agree to it; it is good law.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator will not think while I am reading this that I am putting in Confederate politics here, because I will prove by the best authority in the world that I am only quoting from official language of the highest character. Each State is sovereign in respect to all powers not delegated to the United States nor prohibited to it by the Constitution. The United States are sovereign in respect to all powers delegated to them by the Constitution. This principle is stated by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton's Reports, on page 410, in these words:

In America—

The United States—

the powers of sovereignty are divided between the Government of the Union and those of the States. They are each sovereign with respect to the objects committed to it, and neither sovereign with respect to the objects committed to the other.

That is John Marshall in the Supreme Court of the United States in one of the greatest judgments that was ever pronounced in that court.

That the United States in some one of the organisms provided in the Constitution have the power to judge finally as to the extent of the powers delegated, as well as of the powers reserved (that is an admission I make since the war), does not absolve them from the great duty of marking this extent rightly, giving to the United States only such powers as are granted and denying to the States no power reserved. On the contrary, it increases this duty to judge carefully and rightfully, in a case of disputed powers, that the right of final judgment rests with one of the claimants. I invoke the observance of this obvious duty in deciding this case.

The Government of the United States is partly Federal and partly national in its organization. These two principles are intermingled throughout the system. This double nature is not the result of accident, but was impressed on the Constitution of the United States in indelible characters in order to give the Government that shape and operation which our forefathers deemed essential to carry out the objects of its establishment as expressed in the preamble to that instrument:

To form a more perfect union, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

This double nature has always been considered as potential in construing different parts of the Constitution. In relation to the election of a President, the power of each State in the Electoral College is based partly on a Federal and partly on a national basis. Two votes represent the Senators and then each Representative represents an elector. But in the process of making the election the provision is wholly Federal. The Constitution gives to each State the power to appoint electors for President in such manner as its legislature may direct. Hence it is held that the power of appointment includes within it the power to determine finally and conclusively who are appointed. The apportionment of Representatives is almost wholly national, being made according to the population in each State; yet it is also partly Federal, in that the apportionment is among the several States, and each State "is entitled" to at least one Representative, however small its population may be.

The election, however, of Representatives is wholly national, the qualification of the electors being prescribed in the Constitution, and the manner, time, and place of elections being subject to the authority of Congress.

That the Constitution declares that the electors for Representatives shall have the qualifications of electors for the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State in which the Representative is chosen does not contravene the idea that the qualifications are fixed by the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution, it is true, does not particularize what these qualifications shall be, but it adopts as qualifications those which the State has fixed for electors for the most numerous branch of its legislature. It is not in the power of a State to fix other and different qualifications for a Representative than it has fixed for electors of the most numerous branch of its legislature. In fact, a State can not directly fix the qualifications for Representative at all. It can, in virtue of its reserved power, fix the qualifications of electors of the most numerous branch of its legislature, and that is all the State can do as to this point. When it has done this, the Constitution of the United States adopts these qualifications for Representative from that State. The State law thus adopted by the Constitution of the United States becomes in effect, as to qualifications for Representatives, a national law. So that it results naturally and logically that the power given to the House of Representatives to judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members carries with it the power to determine in each case whether a claimant or the sitting member has received the greater number of qualified electors, and in determining this the House may judge as to the qualifications of every elector voting in the election. But when we consider the Senate we find the whole matter changed. The members of the House are elected, as expressed in the very language of the Constitution, "by the people of the several States." The Senate, on the other hand, is "composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof."

The language is, "chosen by the legislature thereof," and not by the members of the legislature.

There are no electors for the Senate named in or contemplated by the Constitution.

The report in the TURPIE case said, as to these electors, who they are, who they may be, we have no authority to decide.

The choosing is the act of a body organized under and by virtue of the constitution of the State and endowed with the power and duty of making the laws of the State. Where the power to make the laws of the State is, there also rests the power to choose a United States Senator, and when you say that here is a body which may make the laws of a State as organized, and that that body can not elect a Senator as thus organized, or defeat one, then you destroy the Constitution as it is plainly written.

The Constitution of the United States takes no notice whatever of the manner in which this organism is created, nor of the persons who compose this body; nor of their qualifications; nor as to who shall have the right to vote for them; nor of the length of their official terms; nor of the powers vested in them, except only it shall have the power to make laws for the State. It says nothing and means nothing as to the number of persons who shall constitute a quorum. If the constitution of a State provides—as the English constitution does—that a small number, less than one-tenth of the whole number, shall constitute a quorum, then such constitutional number being present in both houses during a sitting constitutes the legislature, capable of doing any act whatever which the legislature of the State may lawfully do. And when—note now—any official act is performed it is the act, not of the individual members of the legislature, but of the State organism endowed with legislative powers.

It is just like the acts of Congress. I had a curiosity the other day to see how the very first statute ever passed by Congress claimed to be passed. It did not say, "be it enacted by the Senators and the Representatives of the several States in Congress assembled." It said "be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled," that such and such shall be the law; and every act passed from that first one on the 1st day of June, 1789, and approved by George Washington, down to the present time has contained that same formula.

No man has ever seen an act passed by any legislature in this Union that did not express in its enacting part the idea of enactment in either one of these two ways, "Be it enacted by the legislature of the State" (I believe that is the rule in Mississippi), or "Be it enacted by the senate and the house of representatives of the State in general assembly convened." Not one of them ever said or could say, "Be it enacted by the senators and representatives" that such is the law.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I quite agree with the Senator, but I should like to ask him one question just to get his opinion on a certain point.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have been very much interested and entertained by what the Senator has been saying recently.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope you have been instructed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And instructed. I should like to have the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi on one point. I do not know that it has any bearing on this case particularly.

Mr. GEORGE. Please do not ask me anything outside of this case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But it has occurred to me just now, and it is a very interesting question. The Senator is arguing that it is the legislature of the State that must elect the Senator, to which I agree. The act of Congress passed in pursuance of that constitutional provision speaks of the members of the legislature who shall meet in joint assembly. I suppose the Senator would agree that in this case, for instance—take a legislature that has 21 members of the house and 9 members of the senate, if there is a majority of the whole number present in the assembly, although not a majority——

Mr. GEORGE. In either house.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Although not a majority of both houses.

Mr. GEORGE. Of both houses.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I suppose the Senator would agree that that would be the legislature of the State within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, and that such a joint assembly could elect a Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I have just gone over that. If the Senator had given me his attention he would have seen what my views are upon that subject. I say that when this joint assembly meets it is the joint assembly of the two houses of the legislature. The constitution of Delaware says there shall be two houses, and unless in a constitutional sense the two houses are present it is not the legislature and can not elect a Senator. But in this case (and I am not going outside of this case) they were every one of them present, and on that we are trying this case. Every one of them was present.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senate has held several times, as I understand it, that it is not necessary that there should be a majority of the members of both houses present. It does not bear on this case, I admit.

Mr. GEORGE. Do you mean to say that the joint assembly is not a legislature?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Oh, no; I do not mean to say that.

Mr. GEORGE. That is enough.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. But I do mean to say that the joint assembly may be composed of a majority of all the members of the two houses, and yet a majority of each house may not be present.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be true or it may not be true, but it is not a question in this case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It does not affect this case, I admit.

Mr. GEORGE. Because every member of each house was present.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Actually present and voted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to call my friend's attention to what I shall read, because I took some pains in drawing it up so as to express my ideas correctly.

The members, or rather the persons claiming to be elected members, do not of themselves constitute the legislature, and can do no official act as persons or individuals. It is only after organization—that is, after the members elected meet together in the place fixed by law and at the time prescribed by law, and ascertain, prima facie at least, who are elected, and then proceed to take the oath prescribed by law, and then elect a presiding officer (if none has been furnished by law, as a lieutenant-governor for the senate in some States)—that a legislature is constituted or organized, and can be said to be the legislature or lawmaking power of the State. And when this is done, then no member of the legislature—recollect that—can do or perform a legislative act, except in and as a part of this organized body. Before that there is no legislature; nothing but a number of men authorized by law to become a legislature.

To illustrate: As soon as the Senator from Oregon, or any other Senator, steps outside of this Hall, he can not perform a legislative act until he gets back in here. Now, Mr. President, I want to emphasize that idea, because it has a good deal to do with making still more and more plain the utter absurdity of the claim of Mr. Du Pont.

In 1839 a very remarkable contest occurred in the House of Representatives. There were five members elected from the State of New Jersey, who held certificates from the governor of the State. There were five others who held certificates from somebody else—I believe from the secretary of state. It just so happened that if the five on either side were seated (they were all Whigs on one side and all Democrats on the other) that side would have the control of the House of Representatives. Of course there was intense interest there. The House was many days organizing. The old Clerk of the House for awhile tried to regulate the proceedings of the meeting. Finally he could not do it, and after some days Mr. Rhett of South Carolina offered a resolution:

Mr. Rhett then offered a resolution that Lewis Williams, the oldest Member of the House, be appointed chairman of this meeting until the House should be organized.

Not Speaker pro tempore of the House, but "chairman of this meeting." He soon afterwards changed it:

Mr. Rhett then varied his motion so as to bring Mr. Adams to the chair instead of Mr. Williams, and putting the question himself to the meeting—it was carried, and Mr. Adams took the chair.

Not to the House—

There was a great deal of excitement and debate, and I remember in reading over the proceedings that Mr. Adams before he had been made chairman in addressing that body of men addressed them as "Fellow-citizens." This shows what I have stated here, that the Members are nothing per se; that it is only when they have been organized into a House and acting as a House that they possess any powers whatever.

This view is plainly recognized in the statute of Congress regulating the election of Senators. Does that statute say that the legislature shall proceed to elect a Senator on the second Tuesday after the date fixed by the constitution for its meeting? No. On any other date? No; except this one date:

The legislature shall proceed to elect a Senator (only) on the second Tuesday after its organization.

Recognizing plainly that until there was organization there was no legislature.

Before organization the persons elected can do nothing but proceed to organize. This reasoning establishes beyond controversy the proposition that the act of a State legislature in choosing a Senator, when accomplished lawfully and constitutionally, is the official and corporate act of a State organism authorized and formed under the laws of that State, with membership powers and faculties fixed by those laws. The sole question we can consider in this case is, Was there a legislature of the State of Delaware on May 9 last, and did that body as then organized proceed according to law in electing a Senator? What was the result of that proceeding? In fact we have but one question, for Mr. Du Pont's claim eliminates the first question. Since if there were no legislature, no valid and legal legislature as organized at the time, he has no claims here.

He necessarily asserts the existence of a valid and constitutional and duly organized legislature in asserting his right to a seat here. He asserts that there was such a legislature, which did in law elect him; yet, strange as it may seem, he also asserts that the actual voting in the legislature did not elect him.

We are asked to affirm that the legislature of Delaware on May 9, 1895, was a valid, constitutional, and duly organized body—organized as required by law and capable of electing a Senator. Then we are asked to affirm that notwithstanding the action of the legislature as organized resulted in no election, yet Mr. Du Pont was duly and constitutionally elected and should be seated.

In other words, we are asked to affirm that the lawful and constitutional legislature was so organized and constituted at that time, contrary to law, that it could not express its will by a vote of all the members—recognized members present and voting—but did express its will validly and constitutionally if only the Senate of the United States, ten months thereafter, will eliminate one name from the roll of its membership as it actually existed on May 9, 1895. In Mr. TURPIE'S case it will be noticed there was no attempt to seat his opponent. They had not advanced then up to the point to which our friends have advanced here. They undertook only to invalidate the proceedings of the legislature in making any election at all. In this case the attempt is to invalidate what the legislature actually did and to set up as valid something that the legislature did not do.

These inconsistencies, not to say absurdities, are the necessary condition into which Mr. Du Pont's claim has placed his advocates.

It is admitted in the report in Mr. TURPIE'S case that the senate of a State is the judge of the election and qualifications of its members as much so as the Senate of the United States is the judge of the election and qualifications of its members. It is also admitted in that report that this Senate in exercising its power to judge of the election and qualifications of its members has no right to revise and reverse the action of the State senate; that in the exercise of this power of judging vested in this body we must accept as settled and beyond our jurisdiction to disturb the action of the senate of Indiana. We are asked now to disregard, to trample upon, to spit upon, the action of the senate of the State of Delaware. It seems manifest that this admission is conclusive in this case, unless we hold that there is no judgment or determination of the question as to Senator Watson's membership by the State senate, and, further, that such judgment is necessary to prevent our acquiring jurisdiction.

I have sufficiently discussed the question of the judgment of the Delaware senate and have proved that such judgment was rendered in every constitutional sense in this case.

But since it is disputed I go further. I am authorized, even required, by a due fidelity to the Constitution of the United States to go further and to affirm that even if there was no technical judgment rendered at all by the senate of Delaware, there is no power in this Senate to judge of the qualifications of Mr. Watson as a member of the senate of Delaware. Whether he were qualified to act on May 9 last is not a question submitted to our judgment by the Constitution of the United States.

The power to judge of the elections and qualifications of members of this Senate has been assigned by the Constitution of the United States to us. The power to form a legislature or law-making body for a State is a reserved power to each State. This power in all its amplitude, in whatever form it may be necessary to exercise it, is a State power, and a State power alone. It happens to be one of the few powers reserved to the States which is expressly recognized in the Constitution to be a State power. There is no limit or restriction placed on this State power—to form and organize a legislature—except that it shall be republican in form, that is, elected by the people and not hereditary.

The provision in the constitution of Delaware (and in every State) making each house of its legislature the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members is not in any respect the source from which the State gets this power. That is a mere provision for the exercise of the undoubted reserved power which belongs to each State, which may be exercised by such agencies and in such manner as the State may ordain. The State might, if it saw proper, give the power to the supreme court of the State. The failure of a house of a State legislature to exercise this power might possibly result in a total failure to organize the house as a legislative body, whereby it would not be competent to concur in making a law or to do any other act imposed on it as a part of the legislature; but such failure could not have the effect to transfer or, what is possibly a better word, to delegate that power to the United States to be exercised by this Senate or by any other Federal organism. Every power possessed by the Government of the United States or any department or officer thereof is a power delegated by the Constitution of the United States, either expressly or by implication, as proper and necessary to carry into effect an expressly granted power. No provision is made for the Government of the United States to acquire a new power or, which is the same thing, to enlarge a granted power by any lapse or failure in any State to exercise a reserved power. A new Federal or national power can come only from an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The Senate of the United States is as much bound by the Constitution of the United States and as much bound to observe the line of demarcation between granted and reserved powers as any other department or officer of the Government. This duty to obey the Constitution is as binding on the Senate when it exercises one of its granted powers as when it exercises another; as much binding in the judging of the elections and qualifications of its members as in enacting a statute. We can not, in judging as to the election of our members, invade the domain of the reserved powers of the States and determine for the State the qualifications of the members of its legislature.

Clear and unanswerable as I believe the argument to be that we have no power to judge of the qualifications of a member of a State legislature, yet I deem this matter of such moment as to authorize and even require me to go further. If we usurp the power we are incompetent to exercise it wisely and properly, and especially in a case like this, when the contention is that a member once duly qualified has become disqualified during his term, and the effort is, as here, to remove or suspend him from the exercise of the duties and powers of his office.

Calling attention again to what has been said about the undisputed right of Mr. Watson to act as a duly elected and qualified senator up to the 9th of May, 1895, and to the argument showing that only the senate of Delaware could determine whether he had vacated or become disqualified for his office as senator by exercising under constitutional mandate the office of governor, and to the authority from Cushing's Parliamentary Law read to support that argument; and proving that he is in fact and in law a senator, whatever disqualifications may have ensued after his first seating as a senator until that body has adjudged otherwise—under these circumstances, the true and legal circumstances of this case, the seating of Mr. Du Pont by adjudging that Mr. Watson had either vacated his seat or was suspended from its exercise is neither more nor less than a judgment of amotion of Mr. Watson from office.

It is well to bear in mind what we are asked to do in determining whether we will usurp or, if that word be preferred, assume the power to do it. It is also well to bear in mind that what we do here in this case will be a precedent for the future, to be avoided, not followed, will be—if we use the power needed to seat Mr. Du Pont—a solemn adjudication of this body that in all cases hereafter when a question is made as to the vacating or suspension of a member of a State legislature from his office in order to judge who has been elected a Senator by that legislature, that we have the power to do that thing.

Let us see what difficulties impossible of removal we will encounter in the performance of this assumed task.

The constitution of New Hampshire, in part 2, section 14, reads as follows:

> Every member of the house of representatives shall be chosen by ballot, and for two years at least preceding his election shall have been an inhabitant of this State [shall have an estate within the district which he may be chosen to represent of the value of 100 pounds, one-half of which is to be a freehold whereof he is seized in his own right]—
> The words in brackets were stricken out in 1852—
> shall be at the time of his election an inhabitant of the town, parish, or place he may be chosen to represent; shall be of the Protestant religion—
> These words were stricken out in 1877—
> and shall cease to represent such town, parish, or place immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid.

That turns him out, and in express terms, as soon as he ceases to be a Protestant, and as soon as he ceases to be a resident of the town or parish in which he lived at the time of his election then he is out, and ceases to be a member. If we go into the business of determining whether a member of a State legislature has ceased to be qualified by changing his religion or by removing from one district to another, where will this thing end?

Mr. GRAY. To the constitution of what State does the Senator refer?

Mr. GEORGE. The constitution of New Hampshire.

There are at least seven States which provide expressly for vacating the office of a legislator by his removal from the district in which he was elected. Rhode Island provides that "if a senator or representative, after his election and engagement, accept any appointment under any other government his office under this shall be vacated."

So it is seen what questions are to be decided by this Senate within the rule sought to be established in this case. In New Hampshire prior to 1852 it would have been our duty to inquire whether the representative still owned his estate to the value mentioned in their constitution, and prior to 1877 it would have been a proper question for us to decide whether such a representative had ceased to be of the Protestant religion. And in reference to that State now, and at least six others, it would be necessary to decide whether a legislator had moved from the district in which he was elected.

Rhode Island would furnish us with the question whether a senator or representative, after his election, had accepted an appointment from any other government.

In all these cases there is an express provision for the immediate vacating of the office. There is none such in the constitution of Delaware.

Mr. President, I am very nearly through, and I feel that kind of joy which the weary traveler who has been for many days working his way homeward under troubles and difficulties feels when he comes in sight of the old homestead. There is but one other absurdity, allow me to say, with due deference to my distinguished friend from Oregon, which needs to be exposed, and which can be exposed in a few words.

SEAT NOT SUBJECT TO OCCUPATION.

The report of the committee discloses a new invention to avoid the irresistible argument that this Senate can not judge of the election and qualifications of a member of a State legislature. The committee asserts that the question here is not as to the qualifications of Mr. Watson to be a senator, but whether the senate of Delaware can fill a seat which under the constitution of Delaware is not subject to occupation, whatever that may be. The answer to that is plain and easy. That seems to be the last ditch into which our friends have been driven, and in which they propose to die. The Senator from Oregon a few moments ago would not allow me to get to this part of the argument without reiterating to the Senate that while the constitution of Delaware provided for nine senators, it also provided that the State should only have eight. Now we will see what few words will expose that fallacy:

First. The constitution of Delaware, as I have shown, does not vacate the office of senator held by the president of the senate when he exercises the office of governor, nor does it suspend the senator from his office. That has been made so clear that the Senator from Oregon, and no other Senator, will say that either one or the other is true. He will say that one of those must be true, but he will not say which.

Second. There are nine seats in the senate of Delaware, every one of which is expressly required by that constitution to be filled at the general elections, and to be kept filled should a vacancy occur in it.

There never was a constitution in the world framed so carefully and with so many provisions to fill vacancies in the legislature as the constitution of Delaware. Let me mention some of them. I can do it without reading. In the first place, the speaker of either house shall issue writs of election whenever a vacancy may occur. Then the constitution says, in addition to that, any other person authorized by law shall issue such writs. Whether they have ever passed a law of that kind in Delaware I do not know; but the constitution was so careful that vacancies should be filled, that the power was vested not only in the speakers of the respective houses, but in any other person who might be designated by law. They were not satisfied with that, and in vacation they authorize the governor of the State to issue writs. If the Senator from Delaware will put his finger upon that clause of the constitution where provision is made for the filling of vacancies I shall be glad to read it.

Mr. GRAY. Section 3, on page 26.

Mr. GEORGE. The language of the constitution is as follows:

If the office of representative or the office of senator become vacant before the regular expiration of the term thereof, a representative or a senator shall be elected to fill such vacancy, and shall hold the office for the residue of said term.

When there is a vacancy in either house of the general assembly, and the general assembly is not in session, the governor shall have power to issue a writ of election to fill such vacancy; which writ shall be executed as a writ issued by a speaker of either house in case of vacancy.

I do not know any way the Senator from Oregon can get out of that, unless he reverses in one respect and follows exactly in another the performance of electing a president pro tempore. There the constitution said either house may elect a president pro tempore. The Senator said that meant "shall." Now, when we come to this clause, the Senator finds himself in a difficulty about "shall," and he will have to change that into "may." There never was in any constitution such particular provisions for the purpose of keeping every one of the nine senators' seats and every one of the twenty-one representatives' seats full, not only during the session of the legislature, but in vacation, for the governor is authorized to issue the writ when the legislature is not in session.

With that provision of the constitution, the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the Senator from Oregon assert to the Senate that there is a seat, one of the nine seats in the senate of Delaware, which is not subject to occupation, which I suppose means—I do not know what it means unless it means this—is not subject to have an incumbent in it.

Mr. GRAY. That it is vacant and can not be filled.

Mr. GEORGE. That it is vacant and can not be filled, when the constitution says it shall be filled.

Third. There are nine seats—and all required to be filled. The contention is that Mr. Watson could not further occupy the seat to which he was elected and in which he was duly installed, and the trouble is not that the seat could not be occupied at all, but could not be occupied by Mr. Watson after the 9th of April, he becoming on that day, according to the contention of the committee, disqualified to fill it. There is no provision there, and the Senator does not even argue that there is, that there shall be a vacant seat, but he says, admitting that there are nine seats there, Mr. Watson could not occupy one of them. That is the whole contention on the other side.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Oregon just now contended that there were only eight seats.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; eight. Where is the provision of the constitution of Delaware which says, under any circumstances, that the constitutional number of seats in the senate—nine—shall be reduced to eight? This whole debate on the other side, and nearly all of it on this side, has been conducted on the idea on one side that Mr. Watson could not fill the seat and on the other that he was in the seat; and that is all there is in it. If he was qualified under the constitution to fill it, then he could fill it. The contention is that he could not fill it because on that day he became disqualified. Whether he was so disqualified or not was in effect the same thing exactly as whether he was qualified or not, and this is the sole question in this case. It is not denied but admitted that the senate of Delaware is the judge and the sole judge of his qualifications. Is not the same senate the sole judge of the disqualifications? The Senate of the United States has not the slightest jurisdiction over that question, as has been held for a hundred years and never disputed until this case came up.

Mr. GRAY. Is not the meaning of "qualification" the absence of disqualification?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly it is. One is put in the affirmative and the other in the negative; and that is all there is in it. It is just the same as the proposition that all men are mortal, or no man is immortal. That kind of Jesuitical hair-splitting will not do for the judgment of the United States Senate in seating a man in this body who has never been elected to it.

My friend got up to-day an eighth-member theory. In the committee and in the argument heretofore he thought it was better to go for a tenth member. We were to have ten members. Then he supposed the case of the tenth member of the senate; he put the supposition of Grover Cleveland, the President of the United States, being a member of the senate of Delaware, and asked what we were going to do then? Then a case from Kansas was brought up, upon which all this sophistical reasoning is based, in which the supreme court of that State decided that for four men who voted for a public printer, or something of that kind, there were no seats, not that there were seats there not subject to occupation, but that by the law of Kansas there were no seats for those four men. It is all based on that. Here is a seat; here is the ninth seat; and the constitution of Delaware says it shall be filled, and points out the mode in which it shall be filled.

Mr. ALLEN. And the man who shall fill it.

Mr. GEORGE. And the man who shall fill it. Now, they say if Mr. Watson was not exercising the office of governor they will admit that he could fill the seat in the senate. The Senator from Oregon admitted some time ago that the decision of the senate of Delaware for many years had been that the man exercising the office of governor did not lose his seat in the senate, but had come back to it; and he is bound to admit, under that argument, that if Mr. Watson on the morning of the 9th day of May had resigned what my friend calls the office of governor, which he says Mr. Watson could resign, he would then be a senator and in his seat. What is that but saying, not that there is no seat there subject to occupation, but that there is no man there who is authorized and qualified under the constitution to occupy it? That seems to me, sir, to answer the question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I say it is not subject to occupation only during his continuance in the office of governor. That is the answer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have now performed my duty as I understand it in reference to this case. I have discussed at some length, probably more than I ought to have done, the various phases of this question. In conclusion I only desire to say this, and no more than this, that after a very careful examination of the case I can reach but one conclusion, and that is that if Mr. Du Pont is seated in the Senate of the United States the Senate will perform no act different for Mr. Du Pont than electing him to a place to which the legislature of his State failed to elect him.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him two questions before he takes his seat?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the lengthy and interesting speech of the Senator from Mississippi, and I simply wish to ask him two questions. The first question is in reference to the matter discussed last by the Senator. The constitution of the State of Delaware provides that a person to be entitled to a seat in the senate of the State of Delaware shall have certain specific qualifications, namely, he shall be of a certain age; he shall have a certain amount or kind of property; he shall have lived in a certain county a certain length of time, etc. Does the Senator from Mississippi hold that the right of the senate of Delaware to pass upon the qualification of a senator in the senate of Delaware extends beyond those specific qualifications enumerated in the constitution of Delaware, or is it confined to them? That is the first question.

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer the question. I have already stated very fully to the Senate that at every moment of the existence of the senate of Delaware it had before it the question of the right, the power, of any man who assumed to be a member of that body, and it had the right to decide on the question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I admit that, but——

Mr. GEORGE. And they decide it. They first ascertain what the qualifications are, and then they decide whether the man possesses them; but whether they decide right or wrong it is not subject to review in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is not an answer to the question.

Mr. GEORGE. That is an answer.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is not an answer to the question, as I think, with all due respect to the Senator. My question was whether the right of the senate of Delaware to pass upon the qualifications of its own members extends to the question of passing upon some other matter than the specific qualifications of the constitution. That is the question. Of course, the answer would mean, although it was not specific, that it does extend beyond that. I deny that as a legal proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. My answer is that they have a right to determine whether A, who presents himself as a member of the senate, is entitled to a seat. That includes all qualifications and all disqualifications, because there are disqualifications put in the constitution of Delaware, which they could decide upon.

No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State, or the United States, except the attorney-general, officers usually appointed by the courts of justice, respectively, attorneys at law, and officers in the militia, holding no disqualifying office, shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.

They can pass upon all of those disqualifications and every one of them, and it is absolute, final judgment.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I understand the position of the Senator from Mississippi, and I do not agree with him. There is one other question——

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is one other question I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi. I said I would ask two questions, and I shall confine myself to those two. The other question relates to another branch of the subject. The Senator, in his speech, has contended very vigorously that the speaker of the senate, when he succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, exercises such office not in his own right, but as speaker, and that the speaker of the senate can not, in the event of the death of the governor, resign the right to exercise the office of governor, but that the only way he can get out of exercising the office of governor is to resign as speaker of the senate.

Mr. GEORGE. That is my view.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is the Senator's view. The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: Suppose, after the speaker of the senate, Mr. Watson, had entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, the senate of the State of Delaware had expelled Senator Watson for some good reason, and whether it was a good reason or not, had actually done so, because he is still senator, according to the theory of the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. He is still speaker of the senate, according to the Senator's theory.

Mr. GEORGE. And according to the theory of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Suppose the senate of Delaware had expelled Senator Watson from the senate, which, of course, would have dragged down the speakership as well, he would have been expelled not only as senator, but as speaker of the senate.

Now, what I wish to know is, whether, after that is done, is he still governor—the constitution says he is, or at least that he shall continue to exercise such office until a governor elected by the people is duly qualified—and if so, is he still governor as speaker, or in his own right—how is he governor? Can he exercise the office of governor after that? And if so, does he exercise it in his own right, or as speaker of the senate, although he is no longer speaker?

Mr. TURPIE. That is an inability provided for in the constitution of Delaware.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am asking the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. TURPIE. That is an inability——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am asking the Senator from Mississippi. I wish to have the question answered by that Senator, as I think it thoroughly tests the validity of the whole argument of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. TURPIE. It does not test any argument.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am asking the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be very glad to answer all the conundrums which my distinguished friend——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have no conundrums, only that plain and very pertinent question, and I should like to have it answered.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be very glad to answer all the conundrums which my distinguished friend may see proper to put to me. But there is no case before the Senate which involves any question of that sort. I have thought of it a good deal. Either one of two things is true. One plausible view is that in virtue of that provision of the constitution which says that the speaker shall exercise the office of governor until a certain time, he is kept in there, except he be impeached. The other is the one suggested by the Senator, that being a senator and speaker, independent of and contrary to the express command of the constitution, he may be removed. There are two ways to get rid of him. He may be removed by a majority vote from the office of speaker or he may be expelled by a two-thirds vote. Unless that provision of the constitution to which I have alluded makes it absolutely impossible for the senate to proceed in that way, he could neither be expelled nor removed. My own idea would be that he could be removed from the office of speaker by a majority vote of the legislature, and then he would not any longer be the governor.

Mr. GRAY. He would no longer exercise the office of governor.

Mr. GEORGE. He would no longer exercise the office of governor.

Mr. GRAY. Words are things now.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. These are all of the questions I wish to have answered.

Mr. GRAY. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am not on the witness stand.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to put the Senator there. This matter is before the Senate, and it is a privileged question. When the Senator from Mississippi yields the floor I propose to take it. Let me ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to try to find something. Here it is:

Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

Whether or not that would continue him against the removal by the legislature I am not prepared to say. I am inclined to think it would not.

If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives, etc.

That seems to go to sustain the idea that he could be removed, not only by impeachment, but by the action of the legislature. But that is not in this case.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, if he will so far indulge me, to make a little more clear to my mind at least his position in regard to the extent of the jurisdiction of the senate of Delaware to judge of the qualifications of its members. I understood him to say—and if I misunderstood him I hope he will correct me—that that jurisdiction extended only to those qualifications which are enumerated in section 3 of the constitution, to wit:

No person shall be a senator who shall not have attained to the age of 27 years, and have, in the county in which he shall be chosen, a freehold estate in 200 acres of land, or an estate in real or personal property, or in either, of the value of £1,000 at least, and have been a citizen and inhabitant of the State three years next preceding the first meeting of the legislature after his election, and the last year of that term an inhabitant of the county in which he shall be chosen, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States, or of this State.

Will the Senator so far indulge me as to say whether I am correct in the assumption that he contends that the jurisdiction extends only to those qualifications enumerated in that section?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I simply desired to get the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] on that point, as to whether he holds that the right of the senate of Delaware extends to questions beyond those specified in the constitution.

Mr. GRAY. I understood the Senator from Oregon to say that in his opinion it did not extend. Am I right in that respect?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think it is very doubtful whether it does.

Mr. GRAY. Very doubtful?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes; very doubtful, at least.

Mr. GRAY. Then the Senator's opinion is that it does not extend to the disqualifications mentioned in the same article which I will not take up the time of the Senate by repeating, but which are very familiar to the Senator. Perhaps I had better enumerate them. It says:

No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State, or the United States—shall during his continuance in Congress or in office be a senator or representative.

Does the Senator think the jurisdiction of the Senate to judge of the qualifications of its members does not extend to the matters enumerated in that section? Is that his view?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was calling upon the Senator from Mississippi to define his opinion of it.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I understood him to say that he differed with the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do. I certainly differ so far as this question is concerned. Here is a constitutional provision which states that in a certain contingency the speaker of the senate shall become the governor or shall exercise the office of governor.

So far as that question is concerned, which involves a construction of the constitution of the State, as to the status of this person, after he succeeds to the exercise of the office of governor, I do undertake to say in the most positive terms that in my judgment it is a disqualification, if you so please to call it, or, to be more accurate, it places the seat of that person in a certain state as to its being subject to occupation or nonoccupation, and thus presents a question upon which the senate of Delaware can not, under its power to judge of the qualification of its own members, act so as to bind the Senate of the United States. That is my opinion.

Mr. GRAY. Is it the Senator's view that the jurisdiction of the senate of Delaware, while it extends to those qualifications mentioned in section 3, does not, so far as being conclusive upon the Senate of the United States is concerned, extend to the matters mentioned in section 12?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It certainly does not, in my judgment, extend to any question which involves a construction of the constitution of the State of Delaware. I am not prepared to state positively that they would not have the power to pass upon the question as to army and navy contracts, because that is a plain provision not open to construction. There is no constitutional question whatever involved. But the other matter involves the construction of the constitution of the State of Delaware, and upon that question I do undertake to say, and have said from the first, and I insist upon it, that the decision of the senate of the State of Delaware is not binding.

Mr. GRAY. Then, in other words, if I understand the Senator, the jurisdiction of the senate to judge of the qualifications of its members extends to every case enumerated in the constitution, both of qualification and disqualification, except as to that matter which concerns the decision of this case?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Oh, Mr. President, that is not a fair comment upon what I have said.

Mr. GRAY. That is exactly what the Senator has said.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have not said so by any manner of means. In one case there is a plain, specific, statutory provision that a person holding an army or navy contract shall not be a Senator, while in the other case——

Mr. HILL. What does the Senator from Oregon mean by a statutory provision?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I stand corrected. I did not mean to say statutory, but a plain, specific, constitutional provision, not open to construction.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa will state his point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the pending question?

Mr. GRAY. The pending question is the privileged matter of the Senatorship from Delaware, which I am discussing and upon which I have the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not so understand it.

Mr. GRAY. I understand it is a privileged question at all times.

Mr. ALLISON. I had the floor three days ago and yielded to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who desired to make a speech. Of course I do not wish to interfere with proper debate of the privileged question.

Mr. GRAY. I am not going to interfere with the Senator from Iowa longer, but I do not care to be taken off the floor in a summary way.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. I am here discussing a privileged question, as I understand it——

Mr. ALLISON. I understand——

Mr. GRAY. To wit, the right of a claimant to a seat in this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear one Senator at a time.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa will state the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a right to make it——

Mr. GRAY. I am discussing the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Without having the Senator from Delaware intimate that I am taking him from the floor. I yielded to the Senator from Mississippi to make a speech upon the privileged question, and for that purpose only. I did not know that the debate was to last three or four days. If it is the purpose of Senators to complete the privileged question, I of course yield the floor and will make no further objection.

Mr. GRAY. I did not suppose that I was trespassing upon anybody's time or anybody's rights. I merely rose to add something to what had been said in regard to the privileged question before the Senate. I did not propose and I do not now propose to occupy the time of the Senate further. But I merely wish to assert in regard to the point of order that I believe under the rules of the Senate I was occupying the floor in my own right, and that I am not amenable to the point of order made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Delaware was in the middle of a question which he was asking the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I hope we may have the question completed, so that we may also have the answer.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Oregon was in the middle of an answer to the question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I knew it was one or the other. We on this side could not tell which it was.

LEVI STOLTZ.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Post-Office appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow me to call up a private bill. It will take but a few moments to read it. If the bill excites any opposition at all I will yield at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1546) for the relief of Levi Stoltz.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield if the bill does not lead to debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it leads to discussion I shall not ask for its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 4, after the word "directed," to insert "any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding"; in line 7, after the name "Ohio," to insert "in accordance with the provisions of section 6, act of March 1, 1879, as amended by subsequent acts"; in line 10, after the word "him," to insert "prior to January 1, 1874"; in line 14, after the word "amount," to insert "of taxes"; and in line 15, after the word "overcharged," to insert "or allowable on account of accident"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding, to consider and adjust the claim of Levi Stoltz, a citizen of Greenville, Darke County, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of section 6, act of March 1, 1879, as amended by subsequent acts, for excess of taxes and assessments charged by the United States against him prior to January 1, 1874, on the Greenville Distillery, owned and operated by him, said excess of assessments caused by accidental bursting of the stills, necessary changes in the still tubs by errors in surveys, and to refund the amount of taxes that may be found to have been thus overcharged, or allowable on account of accident: Provided, That the whole sum allowed shall not exceed the sum of $1,153.56.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

Mr. PEFFER. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that upon the conclusion of the Post-Office appropriation bill the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution proposing an investigation into recent sales of bonds, not, of course, to displace the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HILL. As it is impossible to state how long the consideration of the Post-Office bill will take, I must interpose an objection. Twice I have proceeded to discuss the question involved in the resolution, and twice have I been cut off, when it could not be prevented. I want the resolution brought up some time when it can be taken up like any other order of business and continued until disposed of. What has become of the unfinished business, the Utah joint resolution? Whenever the resolution of the Senator from Kansas can be taken up to be continued to the end, not only so that I can express my views upon it, but that other Senators may do so, will be ample time to call it up.

Mr. ALLISON. The Utah joint resolution, I understand, is the regular business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the regular order.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] is attending a funeral at this hour, but he probably will be in his seat before the Post-Office appropriation bill is disposed of. If so, he will be glad to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will then lay the unfinished business before the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we can now proceed with the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6614) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 7, after line 8, to insert:

For additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamers sailing from San Francisco to New Zealand and New South Wales by way of Honolulu, all mails made up in the United States destined for the Hawaiian Islands, the Australian colonies, New Caledonia, and the islands in the Pacific Ocean, $80,000: Provided, That said additional sum with the sum now paid shall not exceed $2 per mile, as authorized by act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce."

Mr. HILL. I understood last night that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] took the floor to explain to the Senate more particularly in regard to the question involved in the amendment. Did not the Senator intend to answer the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not aware that there was any specific question to which I was to make answer.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether he is ready at this time to have extraneous amendments offered?

Mr. CULLOM. Not until this amendment is disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As to the Oceanic Steamship Company?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the Senator to ask that the bill be proceeded with for the present, and that this matter should be passed over. I do not understand whether he wanted it passed over only until the reading of the bill was completed.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing that other amendments shall be offered, allowing this amendment to be passed over until other amendments are disposed of.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Just as suits the convenience of the Senate. It is unimportant to me. I have an amendment which I shall be glad to offer now if it is agreeable to the Senate and the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided, however, That whenever, by order of the Postmaster-General, any post-office is consolidated with any office so as to become a station or substation of the same, the salary of the superintendent or clerk in charge of such station or substation may then be paid out of the appropriation; not, however, to exceed the amount of the salary previously paid to the postmaster of the office which has become such station or substation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the amendment just read was reported unanimously by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and was referred for action to the Committee on Appropriations. Not only was the action of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads unanimous, but each member of the committee, and I imagine very many members of the Senate, have received during the last week or two repeated letters and telegrams and inquiries from citizens all over the country having no interest in this matter except that interest which every good citizen feels in the economical and wise administration of the law, urging that the amendment be brought to the favorable consideration of the Senate. I have referred to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads resolutions passed by the Democratic State committee of Massachusetts, and various resolutions passed by other organizations of both political parties throughout the United States.

The reason for the amendment is very easily understood if a word of explanation is given concerning it. It has for some years been the belief of many incumbents of the office of Postmaster-General that the present organization of the Department was unfortunate so far as concerns the securing of economy and safety and celerity in the transacton of the business of the Department. There are something more than 68,000 fourth-class post-offices, all the postmasters of which report directly to Washington. They are like an army of privates with no intermediate officers. When each one of them desires stationery, or stamps, or supplies of any character, he communicates with the home office at Washington. Whatever supervision is extended over him reaches from Washington to the possibly remote place where he may be filling the little office of postmaster in some small community.

The Postmaster-General under the Administration of Mr. Harrison made an earnest representation to Congress in favor of the distribution of the United States into 100 post-office districts. He suggested that there should be appointed to each of these districts, under the title of supervisor or superintendent, or whatever you like, some person whose business it should be to gather together the affairs of the fourth-class post-offices within that district; that he should instruct new appointees in their duties; that they should apply to that supervisor for such supplies as they might need, for such instructions as might be needed; that he should generally oversee them in the conduct of their business, and that if there was inspection to be made of their offices the inspection should be made through one of these 100 supervisors. He showed, and showed with quite an array of facts, the utter lack of economy in the present methods of conducting the business of the office and the utter inability of the Department properly to investigate the conduct of the offices by the fourth-class postmasters.

The recommendation of that Postmaster-General was followed by Postmaster-General Bissell, who in a very strong communication to Congress adopted the suggestion of his predecessor and urged that the country be divided into districts. He was in doubt as to the wisdom of dividing it into 100 districts, but he suggested that there should be a district perhaps for each State, with the larger States perhaps divided into additional districts, and that the supervision should come through those districts. He showed, I think, with much conclusiveness that such a division would add greatly to the good conduct and the economical administration of the office.

But Congress has not acted. Under existing law the Postmaster-General may establish and may vacate such offices as he shall see fit. Under this construction of the law the Postmaster-General from time to time has been disestablishing or closing smaller offices near large cities, and has been gathering them in as a part of the metropolitan district of those cities. The result has been that he closes the office and that the person in charge ceases to be an appointive officer by the Postmaster-General, coming under the Assistant Postmaster-General, but the office is then administered by a clerk of the Post-Office Department at a certain salary which is regulated by law. Under the existing provisions of law that salary may be from $300 to $1,000 at the option of the Postmaster-General of the United States, the salary being paid in accordance with the service rendered. The effect of that has been not to obliterate the office. It keeps its name.

For instance, at Chicago there are countless small offices, Presidential offices, second-class, third-class, and fourth-class offices, which have from time to time been gathered into the administration of the office at Chicago. They keep their names. There are Englewood and Lake View and a number of different towns all embraced in the same district. They keep their autonomy. Except that the public gets better and more economical and quicker service, the public rarely knows that the change has been made, and yet it is true that those offices have ceased to be appointive offices and come under the administration of the postmaster of the metropolis of the district. At Cambridge, another large city in immediate communication with the city of Boston, this same extension has been had, and in Brooklyn an order was recently made attaching several districts. The Postmaster-General in a report which he has made, and which is published with the report upon this amendment (it has been upon the desks of Senators, and I have no doubt they have read it), recites that in Brooklyn a few offices have been attached, and that with great economy and wisdom all of Long Island could be attached to the city of Brooklyn, and if it should be so attached the mails could be carried much cheaper and much better than they are at present carried.

There is nothing political in this, Mr. President. It does not savor in the slightest degree of politics. As I have said, there are now 68,000 fourth-class offices. Between now and the close of the present Administration there could not be a thousand offices changed if they worked night and day. The change must be gradual. It is not for the aggrandizement of either political party; it is solely for the benefit of the public service.

It is true, and we must face the fact, that this is doing by indirection what Postmasters-General have asked in vain of Congress. They have suggested a division into districts. They have suggested that Congress find some way for gathering together these offices so that they may be administered from a few heads. We have failed to do it. Postmasters-General, relying upon the general provisions of law, have gone to work themselves and have gradually reached out and gathered the offices in. You must leave it to their discretion.

I looked for some time to see if we could not suggest in this bill some amendment that should make it connect, for instance, with the extension of trolley service or of other communications where there should be some natural limit which we could prescribe to it. You can not with safety do it. There are often offices which are disconnected by any quick method of travel and yet which in the conduct of the business of the Department should be associated and connected with metropolitan offices.

I am free to say that the amendment which has been adopted tentatively as we have gone along—the amendment which immediately follows the amendment which I have offered on page 2, an amendment to the effect that no office shall be discontinued at any county seat—is not in accordance with the principles which I am here declaring. It is not necessarily fatal to them, but it is not in the line of the suggestions I have made. I understand probably why the amendment has been interposed, or perhaps one of the controlling reasons. I am advised that the Postmaster-General, in one of the States in this Union, in the State of Maryland, reached out some 14 miles and took the post-office at Ellicott City, a second-class post-office, a Presidential office, closed it, discontinued it, and attached it to the post-office administration of the city of Baltimore. This would have been all right provided it was in the line of a legitimate extension of the business of the office, but I am advised that in doing this he reached over and skipped office after office, leaving a great lot of them between Baltimore and Ellicott City, and seized upon that particular office. Without some explanation, which I have not yet been able to receive, such a proceeding is destructive of the very principle which this amendment seeks to establish and which is itself recommended by the Postmaster-General.

It may be that he has some adequate explanation for it; I do not know what it is, but I do say that even if it shall have been in one instance abused it is in the line of good service and economical administration, and that all of us should look forward to the time when these post-offices will be administered principally from the larger cities, where the new appointees in the little offices may receive the benefit of the counsel and advice and suggestion of the postmasters in the cities; that they may receive the benefit of close proximity to some head, who shall guide them in the discharge of their duties and be able to ascertain if they are fulfilling them.

The Postmaster-General says that as a rule this service is so scattered, with so few facilities for investigation, that there is practically never an investigation made of a post-office until there comes a complaint. There ought to be some head near by to whom these men can look up, to whom they can report.

As far as the expense of it goes, it is a very great saving. The report shows how great is the saving. It is a saving in a thousand offices of more than a half million dollars a year. Of course, the amount of the saving varies in different offices, but you get better service and you get it for less money.

Under the present condition of affairs the payment of fourth-class offices depends upon the business transacted. The fourth-class postmaster gets all the proceeds of the cancellation of stamps up to a certain amount, and then it is graded up to a certain other amount, until his pay becomes $1,000, and as soon as his pay becomes $1,000 then at once it becomes a third-class office and he is appointed. In addition to that, the Postmaster-General in his option may make certain further allowances to the fourth-class postmaster. If he is on a line where a route starts off from some other place and where there may be letters to be assorted and counted and stamped, he may make certain allowances for clerk hire. All this will be brushed away. There will be a simple, direct administration of the office, out of politics, by some competent clerk who is able to take the position for less remuneration, as a rule, than the cost of the administration of the office, with very possibly a larger individual salary to the person conducting it than has heretofore been received.

Mr. President, I trust that the Senate will see, as the committee has seen, the wisdom of adopting this amendment. In my opinion there should, perhaps, be from the amendment as it has been reported by the committee the elimination of all the words in the amendment after the word "appropriation," and for the reasons which I shall give. As the amendment was proposed, it is as follows:

That whenever, by order of the Postmaster-General, any post-office is consolidated with any office so as to become a station or substation of the same, the salary of the superintendent or clerk in charge of such station or substation may then be paid out of the appropriation.

Then comes the clause—

Not, however, to exceed the amount of the salary previously paid to the postmaster of the office which has become such station or substation.

The inequality of that is evident. It is difficult to determine it. Not only may it be different last year from what it was year before last, but it may differ in different quarters of the year, and it may be difficult for the Postmaster-General to determine it.

Then, also, it would be so permanently fixed that it would require an express provision of law to change the remuneration of it. As these communities near the larger cities grow larger, the pay should increase. The Postmaster-General under existing law may make his allowances not less than $300, and up to $800, and it is not necessary that this provision should remain upon the statute. So, with the permission of the committee which reported the amendment, I will strike out from it all after the word "appropriation" in the fifth line, so that the amendment will read as I have suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that the proposed amendment, if inserted at all, should be inserted at the end of line 11, rather than after the word "dollars," in line 1, page 2.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well, I accept that. I agree to anything that will make the bill symmetrical.

Mr. ALLISON. The compensation to postmasters provided for in the bill, $15,250,000, is a specific appropriation for their compensation, and the amendment is a proposition to compensate clerks of post-offices. So it should be added to the provision for clerks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I accept the suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the amendment, if it is thought necessary, except that I think by implication even we should not provide for superintendence. That is an office not now known to the law, so far as I am aware.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Right at the inception of the Senator's remarks I should like to suggest that nowhere is that intended.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Colorado look at line 3? It reads, "Salary of the superintendent or clerk." I think we might strike out the words "superintendent or"; so that it would read:

The salary of the clerk in charge of such station.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. They are, then, to be paid out of the appropriation. With those modifications, the one suggested by the Senator himself and the one now suggested by me, I have no objection to the amendment. I think, however, that it is unnecessary, and the First Assistant Postmaster-General so stated to the Committee on Appropriations. The only difficulty as respects the payment of clerk hire was in the fact that the appropriation was too small, and therefore, in order to meet this condition, as also one or two other conditions, the Committee on Appropriations increased the item for clerk hire from $10,350,000 to $10,500,000. The First Assistant Postmaster-General, or perhaps one of the subordinates under him—I am not certain on that point—stated to us that with this increase of appropriation they could deal and would deal with this entire question.

As respects the consolidation of offices in the neighborhood of cities, the power is clearly given now by statute for the Postmaster-General to accomplish this end. Whether he is authorized to skip over half a dozen post-offices in order to reach a county seat and abolish a post-office there, I am not quite so clear; but it is certainly within the power of the Postmaster-General to establish post-offices and to abate offices or discontinue offices.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator from Iowa for a moment? I beg pardon if I interrupt him untimely. I do not mean to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the First Assistant Postmaster-General would feel very badly to be quoted as the Senator from Iowa has quoted him, I am certain under some misapprehension. The Senator and I talked this over the other day and I was aware of the understanding with the Senator that the First Assistant Postmaster-General looked upon this as a matter of appropriation. Since that time I have talked with him. It was only the latter part of the clause, which is stricken out, that he thought doubtful, and he expressed himself to me as feeling deeply the importance of the first portion of the clause. So there is a bare possibility, and I want to do him that justice——

Mr. ALLISON. I may possibly be mistaken in my impression of what the Postmaster-General said.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Postmaster-General himself reported this amendment in its very phraseology——

Mr. ALLISON. The First Assistant Postmaster-General?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, the Postmaster-General; and I should not like to see the First Assistant Postmaster-General quoted as against his chief if he did not intend to be so quoted.

Mr. ALLISON. Neither would I. I am very certain the First Assistant Postmaster-General suggested that latter clause of the amendment was not only an unwise one, but that it would interfere with the proper success of the enterprise of consolidating offices. But if there is any doubt about the power of the First Assistant Postmaster-General to execute the proposed reform, I am perfectly willing that the amendment as modified shall be added to the provision. I do not understand that it changes existing law or affects existing conditions.

Mr. LODGE. As I introduced the amendment which has been reported and approved by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I merely desire to say that it certainly has the cordial approval of the Postmaster-General, from whom I have a letter here, as the Senator from Colorado has already stated, and, with the lines omitted which have been stricken out, it has also certainly the very hearty approval of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, whom I saw this morning.

In my State, where the population, especially in the eastern part, is very dense and the cities and towns are large and near together, the consolidation of offices has taken place to a considerable extent. In every case it has made an improvement of the service. More persons have been able to be served by the carriers than before and better service has been given to the public in every way. I know that in my own State, where it has been so largely tried, there will be great objection to giving up that consolidated service at the large metropolitan offices. Also, as the Senator from Colorado has pointed out, it will make a great saving of money to the United States. Probably $500,000 will be saved the first year. When we can get such a vast improvement in the service as this amendment will permit, and also at a reduction in expense, it seems to me that there is no serious argument to be made against it. I have no objection to the amendment, which I think has already been adopted, at the top of the page, in regard to county seats; but I should like to add at the end of the amendment:

Provided, however, That this shall not apply to the city of Cambridge, in the State of Massachusetts.

The city of Cambridge has been for a long time consolidated with the metropolitan system of Boston. Although there are two cities and two municipal organizations, the community is the same practically, and all the service is conducted through carriers and local lines of street cars. It would entirely break up the present system if Cambridge could not be excepted from the amendment. Cambridge happens to be a county seat, one of the county seats of Middlesex County, and I should like, if there is no objection on the part of those who are interested in the amendment, to except the city of Cambridge from the operation of the amendment by the words which I have proposed, which I ask to be inserted at the end of line 6 on page 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of line 6, page 2, the following proviso:

Provided, however, That this provision shall not apply to the city of Cambridge, Mass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "post-offices," line 11, page 2:

Provided, however——

Mr. ALLISON. Strike out "however" after "Provided."

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That whenever, by order of the Postmaster-General, any post-office is consolidated with any office so as to become a station or substation of the same, the salary of the clerk in charge of such station or substation may then be paid out of the appropriation.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether he understands that the effect of the amendment, if adopted, would be that the Post-Office Department may create any number of substations with reference to the main office? Is there to be any limitation on the power of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; the Department may do that now. They may extend the system as they see fit.

Mr. WHITE. In cases where the substation system is extended the salary system now prevailing will be changed, I presume.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It does away entirely with the present system of payment, which depends on the cancellation of stamps.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that is the law now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It does away entirely with that system, and a salary of from $300 to $800 per annum is paid under existing law, at the option of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. WHITE. Then in those cases where postmasters of the fourth class now receive smaller salaries of course the bill will inure to their advantage.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, yes; generally speaking, the bill inures to their advantage, because they get more. Additional service is cut off, because additional expense is not incurred in transportation in reaching the different places. It is all done through fewer hands and more directly.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the amendment, if adopted, will, I understand, be the first direct approval by Congress of the system which has been entered upon of the consolidation of any number of small, fourth-class post-offices with the large post-offices of the cities. It is a reversal of the practice of the Department from the beginning. It is in accord with the general tendency of all the business affairs of the world to wipe out all of the small offices and concentrate the power in the hands of a few men.

Under the statute the Postmaster-General, having the unquestioned right, has taken quite a number of the large cities in the Union and abolished the independent offices in the little country places entirely outside, in the villages, the ordinary country post-offices, and has placed such office in charge of a clerk who is an appointee or under the control of a postmaster 10½ miles distant. To illustrate, the city of Baltimore, with 500,000 inhabitants, has a post-office, but they are not content with serving the people in that community who are engaged in business enterprises and who want frequent deliveries of mails, where such a system has become a necessity for them, but by an order of the Department a circle of 10 miles is thrown around that city. It embraces the farming section and fifteen or twenty little post-offices outside of the city, where there is no necessity for daily delivery or delivery by carriers, and where the people in those communities prefer to assemble at the local post-offices, and get their mail once or twice a day. This provision must of necessity increase the expenses of the office. It can not be otherwise. It is a hardship upon the people who use the small post-offices. The man in charge of a little post-office is the neighbor and the friend of those residing in the community. The mere fact that there is a change of power from one political party to another amounts to nothing. These postmasters remain, no matter what party is in power. But these people want the post-offices near their own homes. They communicate through the local postmaster with the Postmaster-General at Washington. To communicate with the postmaster at Baltimore is no convenience to them; on the contrary, it would be a hardship, and there is no desire for such a change.

It is said that this system is to be adopted so that the people will get more frequent deliveries, and all the small post-offices be brought within the supervision of a single man. That may be, Mr. President, but, at the same time, it will be taking from the people that to which they have been accustomed, and I do not believe they will long submit to it.

Take the case of the abolishment of the Presidential post-office in the community in which I reside—not within the county of Baltimore, not a part of the Baltimore post-office, and having no connection with it—an office as old as that in the city of Baltimore. It is the distributing office for the country back of it for 20 miles, and was by this order consolidated with the city of Baltimore. There is no way to reach Baltimore from it except by a winding road around the Patapsco, and then into Baltimore, 14 miles distant. I know the people of that community. They denounce the act; they know it is an inconvenience to them; they know that under this system which is being entered upon, if it is unlimited, as is proposed, the whole post-office business of the State will be centered in the hands of one postmaster.

Mr. ALLEN. For political purposes?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir; of course, for political purposes. I do not care, however, to speak of that. I am against the principle which enables the Postmaster-General to abolish all the small offices at his will. It is not only undemocratic and unrepublican, but it is un-American, as we have understood the meanmg of the term American. The people have looked to the small post-offices as the only places through which they come in contact with the officers of the Government. They care nothing about your custom-houses. It is not the office or the salary of the office, but it is the fact that as American citizens they should have a place near their door where they may go and tell their postmaster what they desire, and let him communicate directly with the Postmaster-General, or the President, it may be, but the Postmaster-General as a rule.

Mr. President, I can go from here to the city of Philadelphia in less time than the Baltimore city post-office could be reached from one of these substations, and the postmaster at Baltimore would be as foreign to those agricultural people as the postmaster at New York.

I see that there is a provision in this bill for the purchase of bicycles, horses, and wagons. We will see a man wearing a uniform start from the city of Baltimore on a bicycle, with a small mail bag on his back, riding up into these communities and delivering mail to them. If they wanted to make complaint they could not catch the mail carrier, because the riders are usually expert.

I agree that around cities like Baltimore, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, New York, or Boston, where the street-railroad cars operated by electricity have penetrated, communication is easy and swift, and better mail service can be established. Consolidation would be a great benefit to communities so situated, but it ought to be done with discretion. It ought not to include the agricultural portions of the various States. No such lines as have been drawn around Brooklyn and Baltimore for from 15 to 20 miles ought to be permitted.

I think the present Postmaster-General or the First Assistant Postmaster-General, who is a very capable and bright man, and, I think, one of the best we have ever had in the Department, has made the suggestion, though it did not originate with him, but he has emphasized it, that he ought to have a hundred districts in the country, with the Assistant Postmaster-General, if you please, or some important officer, to supervise the system within each district, to examine its workings, and to report upon it. It may be all right and it may be a wise provision, but I am opposed to abolishing these offices for the purpose of putting them under the civil service. That is all there is in it; that is the incentive and the motive—to get these small offices within the classified service.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that under existing law these consolidations were now being made, and I understood the Senator from Maryland to say that a town in his own county, 14 miles off, had been consolidated with the post-office at Baltimore. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain to me how this amendment affects that, and how that consolidation is to be prevented, or is to be aided, by this amendment in any way?

Mr. GORMAN. It does not prevent the consolidation. The Postmaster-General has construed the present laws to give him this authority; and I rather think he is right about it, although there may be some doubt concerning it, but he finds this trouble in extending the system. He can not find the money to compensate the agents; he can not any longer use the amount of compensation which the postmasters at the small offices have received of forty, fifty, or one hundred dollars to pay the clerks. This provision opens the door so that he can go to the general fund and use that, as I suppose has been done, to compensate those clerks.

Mr. FRYE. Then, to carry out the Senator's proposition and prevent this undemocratic and, as he says, unrepublican method of doing business, why is it not necessary to amend the bill and forbid the Postmaster-General from making any such consolidation?

Mr. GORMAN. I should be delighted to do it within reasonable bounds, as I said a moment ago. Take the large towns around a great city like Baltimore, or Philadelphia, or Boston. In the instance given by the Senator from Massachusetts of Boston and Cambridge and New York and Brooklyn there ought to be discretion, in my judgment, in the Postmaster-General to permit such consolidation; for in those cases the community is homogeneous, consisting of business people, and in all such cases there ought to be discretion, but the provision regarding it should be carefully drawn.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me again?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Why is not the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado a necessary auxiliary to the existing power of the Postmaster-General if he may now consolidate, and why should he not have, as provided in this amendment, the power of paying for the offices in the consolidated district?

Mr. GORMAN. He has that power now, but if this amendment be adopted it will give him additional power to extend the system to any places he pleases, not only for 10 miles from the center of a city, but for 100 miles. At present he is limited in the territory to which the extension can be applied because of the want of sufficient legislation to allow him the money to pay his clerks. This amendment proposes an enlargement of his power.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator, under the bill as it now stands and under the amendment should it be adopted, if the only limitation is as to county seats?

Mr. GORMAN. A provision has been already adopted as to county seats; but now the Senator from Colorado, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, brings in another proviso, which enables the Postmaster-General to draw from the general fund a sufficient amount to pay all the men who may be employed in the substations. In other words, it gives him sufficient money for the first time to enlarge the scope of the operation of this theory of his, which he can not do now because of the want of money.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator how far can the Postmaster-General, through the postmaster, for instance, in Baltimore, extend these substations?

Mr. GORMAN. I have no doubt he may embrace the whole State of Maryland.

Mr. ALLEN. Over a hundred miles?

Mr. GORMAN. There is no limit except the amount of money at his disposal.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the postmaster at Baltimore would be practically the postmaster of Maryland?

Mr. GORMAN. He would be, and it would be the same in any other State. There is absolutely no limit except as to the amount of money.

Mr. BATE. How about the postmasters at county towns?

Mr. GORMAN. As to the postmasters of county towns, the amendment has been adopted. As I said to the Senate before, in quite a number of these cases, two, I think, in my own State—I do not know how many in others, but there are quite a number—the office at the county seat, being a Presidential office, has been abolished and subagents appointed to fill the office.

Mr. BATE. How can that be done?

Mr. GORMAN. By the order of the Postmaster-General, as Senators will find if they read the report which the Senator from Colorado has made, Report No. 592, which was placed on our desks yesterday.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Maryland will permit me a question in reference to this matter, I will say that I notice on page 5 of the report to which the Senator refers that there is a recommendation that the sum of "$2,000,000 be taken from the appropriations for the salaries of postmasters, and that in place of this an increase of $1,500,000 be added to the appropriation for clerk hire." Has that been done in this bill?

Mr. GORMAN. The amendment now pending, reported by the Senator from Colorado, enables the Postmaster-General to take any amount of this money. There is no limit to it, as I understand. I ask the Senator from Colorado if I am correct in that?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, my understanding, unfortunately, is that the effect of this amendment is not to enlarge the power of the Postmaster-General in the application of the fund. I should be very glad if it did. I understand—I should be glad to have the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations correct me if I am wrong, as I am very apt to be [laughter]—that the effect of this amendment is simply to declare the opinion of Congress that it recognizes the right of the Postmaster-General to so distribute, coalesce, and consolidate these offices as the public business shall require. The necessary effect will be at a subsequent Congress that the necessary appropriations will be changed from such sums as are applicable to fourth-class postmasters, so that they will be gradually applied, as necessity may require, to the payment of clerks. I take it that that will be so. I should be very glad if this amendment did enlarge the powers of the Postmaster-General; but I do not see that it does, and I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to tell me if it does.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me a moment?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. If the pending provision shall be added to the appropriation for clerk hire it will place the clerks at the substations in the city post-offices upon the same plane as the clerks in the post-offices themselves; they will be paid out of the same appropriation, and will be employed, as now, practically by the Postmaster-General under one of the divisions of the Post-Office Department.

As to the appropriations for postmasters, if the Senator from Maryland will allow me a moment further in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], we have appropriated here $16,250,000 for the salaries of postmasters, the Postmaster-General saying that the amount needed is $17,000,000. So we have appropriated in this bill $750,000 less than the Post-Office Department says is necessary for the payment of the salaries of postmasters; and those salaries, being fixed by law, must be paid through a deficiency bill to the extent of the deficiency in this bill.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if the $750,000 is necessary why it is not appropriated?

Mr. ALLISON. According to the statement just made by the Senator from California, if this new system is applied to the whole country it will reduce $2,000,000 on postmasters and increase a million and a half on clerks, and thus save a half million dollars. So we have gone at least part way in this bill thus far, by reducing the compensation of postmasters from the estimate to the extent of $750,000.

Mr. GORMAN. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what is the necessity for this amendment, if it does not enlarge the powers of the Postmaster-General or empower him to pay these clerks? I want to call his attention to the provision contained in the bill. It reads:

> For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $10,500,000; $600,000 of which shall be available and used in payment of clerk hire in third and fourth class separating post-offices.

If the Senator is correct that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado does not enlarge that, I do not understand it. Let me read the proposed amendment as it now stands:

> Provided, however, That whenever, by order of the Postmaster-General, any post-office is consolidated with any office so as to become a station or substation of the same, the salary of the clerk in charge of such station or substation may then be paid out of the appropriation.

I say that is an enlargement of the powers of the Postmaster-General. To-day he has not the power to pay the clerks out of that fund to the extent which is necessary for him to conduct his scheme of consolidation.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am glad to have the Senator from Maryland state that he does not think this power exists now. I am not absolutely familiar with the details of the administration of the postal laws as to compensation to clerks. I will illustrate by taking the city of Chicago, where there are a dozen substations. The cost of maintaining those substations is paid out of the compensation and allowances to the postmaster at Chicago. If he fixes a salary for a substation he can, as I understand, assign any one of the clerks in that post-office to the substation. If the clerk has a salary of $300 or $600 or $900, or any other sum, he will earn it in that substation. If that be true, this consolidation, so called, is nothing more than the abolition or discontinuance of certain post-offices, and the people who are supplied from the post-office are drawn into the substations of the city post-office. If that be so the substations come under the general provision. That is my idea. I believe that is the law now. If that is to be enlarged so as to take $2,000,000 or $1,000,000, by gathering in all the post-offices in a community, I can quite understand that it would be necessary to wholly change the present system as to the delivery of mails to those offices and the payment of those who are charged with the duty of delivering letters. But I do not understand that that is the project here; at least it is not so disclosed so far as I have seen.

The intention is simply to gather around the large cities the small offices, and make them substations or branch offices to the main office. That power may be abused, but I am surprised to hear an intimation here that it has been abused. I hope that will turn out not to be true, but it seems to me that it is a reasonable thing to trust the Postmaster-General not to abuse this power as against the wish and will of the community which receives its mail at these little or great offices. I know of nothing about which the people of a locality are more sensitive than having a post-office taken away from them or having any of the privileges as to the prompt delivery of mail taken away from them at any time. Therefore I had supposed, and still suppose, that if we should agree to this amendment there would be some sense and discrimination in the exercise of the powers already in the law and only recognized by this amendment.

If it be true that the Postmaster-General has not now the power to fix the compensation of the clerks at substations, of course that power ought to be given him, and I suppose it is given in this amendment. My impression was that the power existed now without the amendment; but the Senator from Maryland has examined the law upon that subject and thinks the power does not exist, while I have not made any special examination on that point.

Mr. CULLOM. The power has been exercised, has it not?

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed it had been.

Mr. GORMAN. That is the object of the amendment. I will illustrate it by the offices right here under our eyes. The law fixes the compensation of a postmaster to-day by the receipts of his office from the sales of stamps. The postmasters at small offices get from $30 up to two or three hundred dollars; the salaries of the Presidential offices are fixed according to their receipts. When the consolidation took place in the office at the county seat of the county in which I reside, where the postmaster's compensation was fixed by the receipts of the office—twelve or fourteen hundred dollars—he was appointed as a clerk or a keeper of a substation, and his compensation was fixed at one-half, we will say, of what his compensation was as postmaster. The salary of the postmaster of adjoining post-office, which was consolidated, was only $25. No substation man could be employed there for that sum. Owing to the expense of the letter carrier on his bicycle running out 10 or 12 miles from Baltimore on the turnpike road, the delivery could not be had at any such amount. So the Postmaster-General found he was embarrassed under the present law in paying for the number of clerks it was necessary to employ, instead of the small postmasters appointed under the general law. Hence the enlargement of that provision becomes necessary if this scheme is to be extended.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, if I understand the Senator from Maryland, the effect of this scheme would be to increase to a certain degree the expenditures rather than to diminish them, because these men would not take care of the substations as they now do for the letter postage.

Mr. GORMAN. The Postmaster-General's statement and his belief is, I have no doubt, that in the end he will probably save a large amount; at all events, that is his assertion. This plan has not yet gone far enough to test it; it is a mere speculation. The estimate of its cost is as wild, I think, as the estimates of the amount of revenue to be derived from the revenue bill which we passed several years ago, and also of the revenue to be derived from the last bill. Nobody to-day knows just how it will work out, but the Postmaster-General can not carry it out to the extent he desires without some such provision as that now pending. It must go on, then, if we can not prohibit it, as I should like to do, outside of the corporate limits of the great cities, with a few exceptions I have named. I want to limit it by the amount of money he can use. Let the law remain as it is; let the experiment which is going on in several of our great cities be tried for a year or two until we can ascertain what will be its effect.

I am loath to have the Post-Office Department enter upon a scheme which will remove the post-offices from the people. The whole tendency of legislation, the whole thought of the country, it seems, at this time, if we are to believe the press, is that you are to discredit the people, to take away from them all power under the Government, to remove from the people of the communities any power to determine who are to be their public servants.

Good as civil service may be for the great Departments of the Government, I do not believe in it when it comes to these small offices, which belong to the people and which are of them.

I believe, Mr. President, that this Government will be a failure if we are to have guardians appointed for the people, if we are to have a permanent tenure in all these small offices which are scattered through the country. When changes are made in such offices they are denounced as part of the spoils system. Nobody cares for the small post-offices so far as political power is concerned. There is no political power in the small post-offices in the country districts so long as they are scattered, so long as the postmasters are the servants of the people, selected by the residents of the neighborhood without regard to politics, or with regard to politics, if you please. I do not want to see a system inaugurated which will take the men of the counties of the State in which I reside to the city of Baltimore to consult with a postmaster to be selected by and from that city, who has no interest in their small affairs. I want to see those people continue now, as they have for a hundred years, to feel that they have a right to go directly to the Postmaster-General or to his agent in their neighborhood, the man whom they have selected. I am against this consolidation in everything wherever it can be prevented by legislation. With all we can do it is impossible to restrain it.

I have seen, Mr. President, under the guise of civil-service reform, men who shouted loudest in my own party use this very system, which is now attempted to be broadened and enlarged, as a powerful political machine to bring about results while they were clamoring and crying for civil-service reform and protesting that they were the only honest men. I take the case of the Baltimore post-office, enlarged as it has been. It embraces two entire Congressional districts, and reaches now, with this enlargement, to two more districts, not the entire districts, but within the districts, making it in touch with four of the six Congressional districts in the State of Maryland. From headquarters came the order to this man with enlarged power to select the men who should be sent to the Congress of the United States, and at least one of them came. I would limit the power by keeping those offices spread throughout the country in the hands of the people. I am sorry to say—and I do it without any disrespect—that we have been following too closely on the line we have charged has been the practice on the other side.

Mr. President, I trust the amendment will not be adopted. Let the law remain as it is. Let the experiment which has been inaugurated be tried in Boston and Brooklyn and Baltimore and Chicago and the other large cities; permit the consolidation of the offices within the corporate limits of those cities or within given territory, but do not extend the system, for it will be abused, as it has been abused.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I desire to say but a very few words in reference to this subject; and I am sorry that, with respect to it, I am obliged to disagree to some extent with the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I think the amendment ought to be adopted, and the reason for its adoption, in my opinion, which controls my judgment more than almost any other, is twofold. First, that perhaps there will be some improvement in the service; and I think there must be some improvement in the service resulting from its adoption. But the second one is that I think it will prove a step in the gradual extension of the principles of civil-service reform, as it is called, over the post-office system of the United States. There has been so much exploitation of civil-service reform by those who use the subject only to talk about it and to attract attention to themselves in regard to it that I do not care to spend any time arraying myself among the class of those who favor the principle for any other reason than because I believe it is the true principle for the maintenance of democratic institutions in the country. I do not use the term "democratic" in a political sense or with reference to any division of party. I use it in the sense of the principles which I profess as necessary to the maintenance of the system of republican government which we enjoy.

Mr. FRYE. No one suspected the distinguished Senator of such a use of the word, because everyone now understands that it would not have commended the amendment to the American people.

Mr. VILAS. I must decline to make a trivial jest with my distinguished friend the Senator from Maine when we are discussing something which I would prefer should be quite removed from partisan politics, and to discuss it upon the basis of a larger view.

Mr. FRYE. I am glad the Senator recognizes it as a jest.

Mr. VILAS. Perhaps something might be said on that subject in view of some recent developments which may lead us to hope that the American people are not quite ready to be sold or bought.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator is taking me altogether too seriously.

Mr. VILAS. Ah!

Mr. FRYE. Altogether too seriously.

Mr. VILAS. For a great many years there have been gradual, moderate efforts to improve the postal service of this country. It has grown and developed with enormous rapidity. Within ten years 20,000 new post-offices have been added. There is no country in the world which possesses anything like the number of post-offices that the United States affords to its people. Its use of railroads for the transportation of the mails is so great that almost as many miles of railroad are in the employ of the United States postal service as in all the rest of the globe combined.

The laws which control the system were devised at a very early day, when the post-office was placed in the hands of the Postmaster-General, and he himself in the first place declined to accept the appropriation which Congress made for an assistant, because he said he found himself able to do all the work of the office himself. But without much change in the system there has been a tremendous spread of its extension until the number of people employed in the Department now is probably not less than 150,000. It is necessary in such a vast force of men that there should be some division and separation, some orders established, as it were, in the arrangement of the force.

I do not understand, when we come to the particular subject of the post-offices, that anything very extraordinary is to be done with the post-offices as they exist under the policy which the Postmaster-General proposes to try to a certain extent. Small post-offices lying within a district of country which may be better governed by one postmaster will be discontinued. In their place a station will be established. The clerk in charge of that station takes the place of the postmaster who was there. He will conduct the office substantially as the postmaster did. He can supply every convenience and advantage which the postmaster could supply to that community. He is just as much the servant of that community, he is just as much to belong to them, he is to be their man, to live with them, as he would be under the present system. The postmaster is appointed at Washington.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Wisconsin will allow me for a moment. Is there any law requiring actual residence in the town where the post-office is located?

Mr. VILAS. The statute requires the postmaster to live in the town.

Mr. HILL. The clerk, however, can live in the city and be sent out into the rural district?

Mr. VILAS. It can be very easily corrected, if it is necessary.

Mr. HILL. It is a fact that he can be sent there? There is no law to the contrary?

Mr. VILAS. Perhaps the law does not explicitly say that a clerk shall live in the district where he serves.

Mr. HILL. If that be true, the clerk has not the same relations to the locality as has the postmaster who lives among the people and is a resident of the community.

Mr. VILAS. So far as the legal provision is concerned, there may be a slight difference. So far as the practical result is concerned, there can be none, in all probability.

The Postmaster-General now possesses the power to establish an office, to discontinue an office, to define the districts of country over which the authority of the office shall extend, to appoint the clerks, to assign them their compensation. I should prefer that the word "salary" in the amendment should be changed to "compensation," because we do not fix salaries for the clerks. The phrase generally employed, I believe, is "compensation." I merely mention that and call attention to it in passing. The Postmaster-General does not, as I understand it, intend to sweep away the system of post-offices in this country. It may have happened that in some particular instance an injury has been sustained or some wrong thing has been done. It would be a wonder if something of the kind did not happen in the administration of a system so vast. But if there be any fault of that kind, it is ordinarily immediately corrected when the facts are represented to that officer. It may be expected that a mistake of the kind will always be promptly corrected. If not, there is the same authority to correct the abuse of power which is intrusted to him that exists now.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question or two which I regard as very important. Do I understand that as the law exists now and as it is proposed to perfect it, the Postmaster-General may, for instance, say that a post-office 50 miles from the city of Omaha in the country shall be a subpost-office of Omaha?

Mr. VILAS. The law as it stands now gives the Postmaster-General power to establish or discontinue a post-office at pleasure. It gives him power to establish substations within any post-office district, and it is within his power to define what the post-office district shall be.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I understand the Senator to assert this——

Mr. VILAS. But I wish to add that it is not to be presumed that a law which has existed like that since the beginning of the Government, since the establishment of the Post-Office Department under Benjamin Franklin, is to be abused as is indicated by that question.

Mr. ALLEN. But I do not understand that since the time of Benjamin Franklin the law has existed to establish subpost-offices. I understand that the power to establish or abolish a post-office exists, but what I want to know of the Senator——

Mr. VILAS. It has existed since the system was begun.

Mr. ALLEN. What I want to know of the Senator is how long there has been a law upon our statute books that would authorize the postmaster of the city of Baltimore, for instance, to create subpost-offices beyond the corporate limits of that city?

Mr. VILAS. I think since the system was originally devised.

Mr. ALLEN. Since the system was originally devised?

Mr. VILAS. Yes. The law now directs, and always has directed, everything within the postal service to be done by the Postmaster-General. The law says the Postmaster-General shall stamp and back stamp letters. The Postmaster-General carries the mail. The Postmaster-General does everything. Congress simply provides him with authority to employ means to do it. Originally postmasters were known as and called deputy postmasters, because they were the deputies only of the Postmaster-General. The phrase "deputy" was afterwards dropped.

Mr. ALLEN. The question I put to the Senator, which he does not answer—at least I have not heard his answer—is, how long has the Postmaster-General had the right, for instance, to create a subpost-office to the main post-office of the city of Baltimore beyond the corporate limits of the city of Baltimore?

Mr. LODGE. He has always had it.

Mr. VILAS. I think he has enjoyed the same right that he now has since the Government of the United States was instituted and the Post-Office Department was established, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. LODGE. He has always had it.

Mr. VILAS. He has always had it.

Mr. ALLEN. How long has the system of substations been in existence?

Mr. VILAS. A very great many years. I can not undertake to tell the Senator when the first substation was established. Probably it was in the city of New York. But it must be understood that there is a vast difference in the character and classes of substations. The Postmaster-General now has in the city of New York probably a hundred stations where nothing is permitted but the sale of stamps, others where letters are received and transmitted, others where money orders may be issued, others where various different descriptions of business may be done, so as to accommodate, by all the various agencies that he can provide, the community which is to be served.

This system is nothing new. It is merely to do for a community at large just what has been done ever since there was a necessity for it by the growth of population in localities.

Mr. ALLEN. If the position of the Senator from Wisconsin is correct, what is there to prevent the Postmaster-General from making, for instance, a post-office 400 miles across the entire width of the State of Nebraska a substation of the post-office at Omaha?

Mr. VILAS. We do not as a rule have Postmasters-General made of that stuff.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask what is there in the laws to prevent it?

Mr. VILAS. There is nothing in the law to prevent it. What is there in the law to prevent the Chief Justice of the United States from doing something unbecoming his station and abusing the lofty trust which is reposed in him?

Mr. ALLEN. There is the power of impeachment.

Mr. VILAS. The power of impeachment rests with Congress as regards the Postmaster-General equally as with respect to the Chief Justice.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. If under existing law the Postmaster-General may—I am not saying certain whether or not he will—establish a subpost-office 400 miles from the city of Omaha, then the Postmaster-General may make the postmaster at Omaha the postmaster-general of the State of Nebraska, with every office under his control, and he may send from that city or from any other place a citizen, 400 miles from where he lives, to act as agent or postmaster in a given community. Is not that true?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest that some of the railway mail clerks are much farther from home than that.

Mr. VILAS. I know; and Congress last year, when it was suggested——

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not undertake to avoid the question.

Mr. VILAS. I have not. I think I have answered it fully.

Mr. ALLEN. The Postmaster-General has the power, then, if he sees fit to exercise it, and we have to trust to his honesty or knowledge of the fitness of things as to whether he will exercise it.

Mr. VILAS. I think the Postmaster-General has almost a plenary, despotic power over the postal service.

Mr. ALLEN. He has the power to send into the community where I reside a man from a place 400 miles distant, who is to act as postmaster and distribute the mails to my people.

Mr. VILAS. Let me say——

Mr. ALLEN. Has he that power?

Mr. VILAS. Let me say to the Senator that he has the power to appoint a postmaster for the city in which the Senator resides, subject, perhaps, in that case, to confirmation by the Senate, from any place, and all that the law requires is that he shall be a resident of that city while he is postmaster.

Mr. ALLEN. That does not answer the question.

Mr. VILAS. It shows what great power——

Mr. ALLEN. The question is, has he the power to send a man from a point 300 or 400 miles distant from where those people live to administer the affairs of their office?

Mr. VILAS. I suppose he has power now to send one a thousand miles.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; and the Senator wants to increase that power.

Mr. VILAS. Not at all. I do not propose to interfere with that power. I am simply proposing to regulate its exercise.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Senator think that the power should be curtailed and that the Postmaster-General should be confined in the creation of substations to the corporate limits within which the main office is situated?

Mr. VILAS. I do not. I think the power should be left substantially as it is.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I understand the Senator wants to take the power out of the hands of the people in their own community and centralize it in the hands of some one man in the State or in the hands of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is very far off. What power have the people now over a postmaster?

Mr. ALLEN. They have this power: By the established custom of the country, which has become a law, the postmaster must come from the community where the post-office is situated. He must be a member of that community whom the people approve—that is, whom they know and who can be answerable to them while he administers the affairs of the office, and not only at that time, but in his social, his business, and his political relations for all time.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator if he has not known of a great many instances—and if he has not, I presume other Senators have—where postmasters have been imported from a considerable distance to localities they afterwards served as postmasters? Does he not know also that in a great many instances postmasters have been appointed whose appointments were by no means in accordance with the desires and wishes of the communities they served?

Mr. ALLEN. I have known of the latter, but I have never known of the former.

Mr. VILAS. There have been instances of the former.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think the American people would tolerate the importing of a man from one State or section of a State into another section of it to act as postmaster for them. There may be some instances——

Mr. VILAS. I agree entirely with the Senator from Nebraska that there is a force of public opinion which no officer of the Government would wantonly disregard, but it would be just as efficacious in respect to the appointment of clerks at stations where those post-offices were as it is now with respect to the appointment of the little postmasters, so called, who serve them.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me for a moment?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. GORMAN. Does not the Senator know the fact that the moment the offices are consolidated they go into the classified service? The moment that occurs the appointment of the substation agent or clerk must come from the classified civil-service list, and it will not be within the power of the Postmaster-General to select a resident of the neighborhood. He will have to take the first on the civil-service list, and he may be a resident of a place 200 miles distant. If the consolidation takes place there is no help for it. It destroys the right of the people in this respect.

Mr. VILAS. Let me answer the question first in this way. The first superintendent is the man now there.

Mr. GORMAN. That depends upon circumstances.

Mr. VILAS. The Postmaster-General's universal rule would be necessarily so. He makes the postmaster in charge of the office the clerk in charge of the station.

Mr. PLATT. He may not wish to remain as such, though.

Mr. VILAS. No, he may not; and then the civil-service rules, I understand, require that the eligible list from which clerks are chosen shall be made up of residents of the locality.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to this fact. I had occasion to investigate it a short time ago as respects a citizen of my own State. The Senator from Maryland is wrong in his statement that the Postmaster-General must take the first person on the classified list. He may go down to the very bottom of the list. A man may pass a perfect examination under the civil-service rule and may be eligible and remain upon the list for years and never receive an appointment, while some other man who has taken the examination is selected for an office. I know it from the fact that I investigated the matter some time ago with reference to a citizen of my State.

Mr. VILAS. I have no doubt at all that there have been many abuses and gross mistakes made in the administration of that law, as there may be in the administration of any new law.

Mr. ALLEN. One question more. Suppose a man living in the community where the post-office substation is located should pass an examination and be placed upon the classified list. What is to prevent the Postmaster-General from selecting some one from some other community, to pay a political debt possibly or a personal obligation, and sending him to that community to administer the affairs of the office?

Mr. VILAS. I think the rules of the civil service governing the mode of choice sufficiently provide to prevent the exercise of any such capricious or malicious authority.

Mr. BATE. Is not the Postmaster-General absolutely denied the right to appoint to one of those substations anybody outside of the civil service, although those on the eligible list may live ever so far away?

Mr. VILAS. I suppose he would be obliged, except in the first instance, to make the appointment, when the office is brought within the classified service, on the same principle upon which clerks are appointed in other offices now.

Mr. BATE. Has it not now gone so far in the classified service as to deny to the Postmaster-General the power to appoint anyone who may be a favorite in the neighborhood or anyone outside of the classified service, though there may be no one living in the community who is on the eligible list? Is he not denied that right now?

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me on this point?

Mr. VILAS. I will. The Senator from Massachusetts wanted to interrupt me a few moments ago.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to say that the appointments in the classified service to local offices are made from the locality. They can not be made from elsewhere.

Mr. GORMAN. They are made from the States.

Mr. LODGE. I think they are made from the locality.

Mr. GORMAN. No; from the State.

Mr. LODGE. No. For instance, take the custom-house at Boston or Baltimore. A man can not be sent from Washington and put into the post-office or the custom-house at Baltimore or Boston.

Mr. GORMAN. But any——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, in the substations the clerks of course are simply detailed from the force of the office. They are all, as a matter of fact, citizens of Boston or of Baltimore, within the Baltimore and Boston districts. I wish before I sit down to ask the Senator a question which I have been trying to ask him. The Senator from Maryland gave the impression that this is a new movement. Am I not right in saying that this consolidation in the metropolitan districts has extended over some years? Certainly it has been going on in Boston for ten or fifteen years.

Mr. VILAS. It has been gradually going on for a great many years. When I was in the Department I contemplated pushing the very system of extending the consolidation of offices with a view to the improvement of the service. But there were so many difficulties pressing at the time and there were so many other directions in which preparation was necessary for changes gradually coming over the Department that it was impossible to undertake this improvement, or it was thought inexpedient then to undertake it. I believe it will prove a great benefit and a great advantage to every community where one of these stations is located, and that instead of resulting in being poorly served they will enjoy a great deal more facility in respect to the use of the postal service.

Mr. BATE. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Wisconsin has not answered my question, if I understand him.

Mr. VILAS. I perhaps did not hear the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. Has the Postmaster-General——

Mr. VILAS. I yielded to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Wisconsin yielded to the author of the amendment. Does the right now exist in the Postmaster-General to appoint to one of the substations anyone outside of the civil service, no matter how far those on the eligible list may reside from the city or the locality where the service is to be performed?

Mr. VILAS. Except in the first instance, I understand not.

Mr. BATE. Then my question went further. Suppose there is no one in that district, or around anywhere near the city, who belongs to the civil service, are they not going to import a man who may be objectionable to the people, and have they the right to do that under the law?

Mr. VILAS. As I understand it, all the eligibles for appointment to a post-office within a certain district must be made up from citizens within that post-office district.

Mr. GORMAN. No, no, Mr. President.

Mr. VILAS. I may be mistaken. I do not profess a particular knowledge of the rules of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GORMAN. The law is and the rule is that for a position in the custom-house in the city of Baltimore a resident of Maryland may apply, and so with regard to the post-office at Baltimore. So no matter in what part of the State a person may reside he is eligible to an examination, and if he passes it he is entitled to appointment when his name is reached. It embraces the whole State.

Mr. VILAS. I am under the impression that the Senator from Maryland is mistaken in regard to post-offices like the post-office in Baltimore. I think the rules do not admit the authority of the postmaster at Baltimore to appoint except from an eligible list made up from citizens of Baltimore or of the district which is comprised within the Baltimore post-office.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin correctly understood the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. I understood the Senator from Tennessee to ask if there was no one fitted to fill the office or to pass the examination in the locality where the post-office was, what would happen? I understand that under the rules of the Civil Service Commission, if there is nobody in the community who cares to act or who is intelligent enough to act, then the law permits the postmaster to go somewhere else and find a man who will act.

Mr. VILAS. I did not understand that to be the question of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. I ask if the postmaster is not denied the right of appointing anyone unless he belongs to the civil service in that community? I do not care how many there may be there who are capable and who might desire it, or might be popular with the people, and they might ask for their appointment, yet he is confined to the rule of the civil service in appointing some one who belongs to the district.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Tennessee talks as if belonging to the civil service was like belonging to a fire company. Anyone who is 21 years of age and sound in health can present himself for examination. Four times a year or oftener there are examinations held, and anybody in a community is eligible to be examined. The civil service board go around and make as many stations as possible to receive applicants for examination, and the members of each community have a chance to be examined. If a vacancy occurs there is an examination, and anybody in the community may be examined.

Mr. BATE. I suppose, then, the man will have to wait after he has been examined. I have had something to do with the rule in trying to get appointments. In making the selection, they begin at the top, and the first three have to be chosen, I understand, and you can not go beyond that. I understand that they must make the selection in that way.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But giving preference to the locality.

Mr. LODGE. The entire three may be rejected by the appointing officers.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I do not propose to spend much time in discussing the rules of the Civil Service Commission or the method by which they make their appointments. I only desire to say if these rules require amendment in order to perfect that system, let us amend them and perfect them. That is not the question I am now debating. I am merely insisting now that we shall get a far better service and that we shall very much relieve the country by the regulation of the system of post-offices so that we shall not have a vast number of independent post-offices scattered through the country to the extent that now prevails under no local supervision or control.

When I was in the Department, I asked Congress to give $100,000 extra for the inspection force one year in order that we might inspect the post-offices of the country. Congress made the appropriation for a particular inspection, and the post-offices were inspected by a systematic examination such as had never before taken place in the country. It was found that in these little local post-offices in remote quarters of the country gross abuses were perpetrated upon the service; that men obtained for themselves as much as $1,000 a year for salary when there was not in reality $50 of legitimate business in the office.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator pardon me? He has had more experience than any other Senator, having been Postmaster-General. Was this system of substations in vogue when he was Postmaster-General, and did he ever make an appointment outside of a corporation?

Mr. VILAS. Substations were in existence long before I was Postmaster-General. There were many substations established by my order, and the postmaster in every case made the appointment at those substations.

Mr. BATE. But did he make the appointment from a list of eligibles after a civil-service examination?

Mr. VILAS. If the post-office was in the classified service, he did; if it was not within the classified service, he did not. The practice is simply this, let me say, so far as the Postmaster-General is concerned: He considers the service at a particular locality, sometimes upon reports of inspectors, sometimes he depends upon the report of the postmaster, and at other times sends out a commission for a special inquiry. Then he awards to that post-office so many clerks at such a salary; so many at such other salaries; so many in charge of stations; so many as assistants at stations; so many for a minor station where it is allowed, perhaps, $25 a year. Then the postmaster makes the appointments.

Mr. BATE. Have they a right to go to all ages? Are they not required to take persons between 40 years and 20 years, and does not that rule disfranchise two-thirds of the population?

Mr. VILAS. Whenever the office is within the classified service, they must comply with the rules fixed by the President for the guidance of the Civil Service Commission, but when it is not, the postmaster exercises his own discretion, subject to the review of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BATE. He is confined to those ages, is he not?

Mr. VILAS. Not in the latter case. There are a great many—probably thousands—clerks in post-offices who are under the age of 20 years, and I suppose that will always be permitted; I presume in many of the cities persons under that age may now be employed. I am not quite certain in respect to that fact, however.

Mr. BATE. Pardon me; are those rules established by an act of legislation or is it done simply by a regulation of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. VILAS. The rules of the Civil Service Commission are prescribed by the President under the authority given to him by the act establishing the Civil Service Commission. They are, of course, in the first instance, prepared by the Civil Service Commission after a long study and examination into the nature of the case for which they are devised, but none of them have force until they receive approval, and thus may be said to receive the enacting force of the President, to whom Congress has committed the authority. It is just so with the regulations of the Army and the regulations of the Navy. The President is delegated with the authority.

Mr. BATE. One is a military and the other a civil department. I think there is a great difference.

Mr. VILAS. Certainly there is a great difference between them. There is great difference in the methods. But I want to add another thing.

I was about to explain that by reason of a very careful inspection of the post-offices which took place, and systematically, so that one section after another was swept with the examination as with a broom, no office being omitted from it, it was found that so many offices ought to be discontinued and so much saving was actually effected in the obliteration of abuses that the cost of the inspection was very much more than repaid by the immediate saving effected as its result.

This simply shows that what the Postmaster-General says in his letter is true, that there is needed some more immediate and direct inspection of the various local post-offices. How is it possible for the Postmaster-General or either of his four assistants to make an inspection of the offices even with the aid of the force of inspectors, who are generally very useful men and very effective men? I want to say right here that I am obliged to the Committee on Appropriations for one thing they have done in this bill. They have amended the provision which the House inserted that would change the rate of expense for an inspector from $4 a day to $3 a day. If we are going to effect savings in the expenses of this country I trust they will not be of that nature.

There is another consideration. Aside from the mere abuses which may be put upon the Department by these scattered postmasters without any local supervision and control, there is great risk of loss. Perhaps it is not known to the extent to which it is worth while it should be known that there is in this country a system of thieves whose business it is to rob post-offices. It is well known by the inspecting force that there is a well established and organized gang of thieves who devote their attention to post-offices. They particularly fall upon the little isolated post-offices. There the postmaster is obliged to get his stamps from the Department in order to supply the office, and almost invariably he carries a considerable amount in value of stamps. It is a very simple thing to rob such post-offices. The post-offices are often in stores, and often when they are in separate buildings there are a great many ways by which burglars can effect entrance to the post-offices. If we had a system like this, we ought to save a great deal in the mere matter of the burglaries which take place as well as in the losses by fire.

Mr. WHITE. Can the Senator from Wisconsin state how much was lost during the last year by burglaries in the postal service of the United States?

Mr. VILAS. I presume I could by referring to the figures.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator has not the figures at hand he need not spend the time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can refer to it.

Mr. VILAS. It will be found in the report which lies on my table. It is usually a great many thousand dollars every year.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from Wisconsin know whether the postmasters at the small offices are more dishonest than those at the larger ones? Does he mean to assert that the percentage of dishonesty is greater among them?

Mr. VILAS. Not in the least. I am not speaking of the question of the honesty of postmasters in that respect. I am speaking of the exposure to thieves to which they are necessarily subjected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I dislike to interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin unless he wants me to do so, but I have looked up the figures on his behalf, and can answer the Senator from California if he desires.

Mr. VILAS. I will thank the Senator to do so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Department lost last year $138,000 and upward for burglaries committed, outside of the bills which Congress passed. The Department can only settle claims of $2,000 and under.

Mr. MILLS. What was the amount of revenue paid in by all the post-offices of the United States?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know. The Senator can easily look it up.

Mr. ALLISON. About $85,000,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This $138,000 was a part of it; that was taken in, if that is what the Senator from Texas desires to know.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I will not engage the attention of the Senate further in this matter. I have said a great deal more than I expected to say. I merely wish to say in general that as the result of such experience as I have been able to have I think this is one of those steps which with care, with prudence, with good common sense, with gentle and reasonable effort ought to be gradually pressed forward as a step in advance in the postal service and in the reformation of the business of the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, so far as I can discover the thing aimed at here is something I am not friendly to. Some one says, and everybody knows it, that the Postmaster-General has always had the power to discontinue a post-office, to consolidate one, or to establish a branch of a post-office. Certainly that was true a hundred years ago. We all know how it was exercised. But I deny that the law to that effect had in view anything whatever of the system that is now submitted for our consideration. I do not like it. I prefer the old-fashioned post-office in the country districts and suburban villages. One must confess that in a place like Boston and the neighborhood around there, where there are half a dozen municipalities, all practically one now, where the means of communication are exceedingly facile and easy, it is quite proper perhaps to make branch stations of the general office, as we have here in Washington and elsewhere. But that is a different thing from reaching out 5, 10, or 15 miles in the country and taking the old-fashioned rural post-office, which is an institution in the affections and traditions and feeling of the people.

Now, going out of my own town, I can imagine places you would not know anything about if I did name them, and you will find in some suburban village or country settlement one country store where by general consent the post-office has been kept for a generation. Very likely it is a place of resort; it is a fountain of news; it answers the purpose of a clubhouse, in a certain way, for the people of that neighborhood. The postmaster and his father before him knew everybody in the town. If he saw a country wagon moving along he would go to the door and hail the man to know if he was going by Oak Lane. "Yes." "Well, take along a weekly or religious newspaper or some letters to an old widow who lives out there. She has not been downtown this week." A hundred things of that sort occur to every man who has had the pleasure of living in one of those simple regions.

Now, there is to come to that little place some young gentleman who has happily passed a civil-service examination in the city 20 miles off. He does not know anybody there, he does not own a house, he has not a wife, he has not a shop at all, he has no place to put his post-office in, and the old postmaster does not look upon him with friendship and will not let him have a corner of the country store. What is he going to do? Who wants him, anyhow?

As the old concern goes on now, when the citizens get uneasy about some management of the post-office they make trouble for the postmaster certainly, and when he is their friend he is the only intermediary between them and the great fountain of power here in Washington. Under your system they may make complaint to this civil-service clerk, and he will give his own impression of it to a certain postmaster, and then it will, perhaps, go on to Washington or be entirely overruled in the beginning of it.

It is impossible to say that the postmaster—I beg pardon, the clerk—under the new system shall be a resident of his country post-office. It possibly might be the case, but he will more likely be a foreign element injected there. I dislike this thing because in a certain way it comes out of a tendency common to human nature, and, as the Senator from Alabama said, human nature is a thing not confined to a few persons; it is pretty generally diffused. It comes out of a tendency to think that you can boss other people and do their business better than they can do it, and a tendency to put everything on earth in the form of a machine.

I am a civil-service man. I was chairman of the committee that reported the bill, and I worked for it with all my power for months, but there is a possibility of carrying it to the ridiculous. If you carry out these forms and these ideas of minute organization and centralization of power, taking it away from the locality, you will not find in the end, in my judgment, that you have made any special improvement in the morals or in the business of the community. It is making a sort of military organization of it, gathering them into one shop like the hands in a factory or the soldiers in a company, to be under a central discipline. The central postmaster will have 50 or 100 postmasters in his district, and he will have, if he chooses to exercise it, obviously a great deal more political power than he has now. Inevitably the men he has under him will be more his slaves than anybody in the old-fashioned post-office, and it will be done under a machine known as the Civil Service Commission, carried to an extreme.

I do not like it. It is against the feeling, the old-fashioned feeling, of what the post-office ought to be. The postmaster, as a rule, is a respectable and capable man. As a rule the people collect the $85,000,000, and throughout the great body of the country the postmasters are practically chosen by the neighborhood. I had some experience as a member of the House, where I was supposed to select the postmasters over two counties. I do not think that I ever selected one. My practice was to write to one or two leading citizens in the locality when I found there was to be a resignation or heard there was a death and say, "Put half a dozen or ten names of your best men to an application for the man you think ought to be postmaster." Then I looked it over and said, "I know these men; that is all right. Whatever they say is just what the neighborhood wants." I simply viséd or indorsed it and sent it on here. That is the way I appointed postmasters. I give you my word I never appointed one because he was my political henchman; never. Now, I would a great deal rather be that kind of a postmaster, selected instinctively, as they are ninety-nine times out of a hundred, by the people whom the postmaster is to serve, and whom they knew beforehand, than to have a boy sent down because he has passed a civil-service examination.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate to allow me to make a few observations on the amendment that is really pending, which is the subsidy to the Oceanic Mail Steamship Company, as I shall not be in the city on Monday. I shall not take more than ten or twenty minutes, if the Senate will allow me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I favor the amendment reported by the committee. The Oceanic Line is one of our American lines on the Pacific Ocean, and I think it is now in great peril owing to British competition. It needs this aid, but I doubt whether, when it gets it, it will be able to sustain itself.

In the able report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1892 I find that he anticipated the difficulties this line would have to encounter in trying to sustain itself and continue business on the Pacific Ocean. I will read from the report what the Commissioner says in relation to the Oceanic Line. It will be found on page 13.

> In this connection I would allude to the difficulties which just now threaten the Oceanic Steamship Company (American), which for years, under great difficulties, has maintained a monthly line between San Francisco and Australia. This line is composed of three American-built ships and one foreign-built ship. Upon the passage of the subsidy act of March 3, 1891, the Oceanic Company decided, upon purely business considerations, that it could not afford to tender for the carriage of the mails under the provisions of that act. It is, therefore, receiving from the United States the postage on the mails carried by it, which amount to about $5,000 per trip. Besides, it receives a subsidy from the Government of New Zealand, the Australian colonies having withdrawn the subsidies formerly paid by them. Just at this juncture the Canadian Pacific is scheming in Australasia and New Zealand and openly declares its intention of putting on a line of steamers heavily subsidized by the British and Canadian Governments. That, in the absence of some energetic action by the Government of the United States, would mean the destruction of a trade which has grown as follows:

Merchandise value of imports and exports.

Year.	Exports.	Imports.
1880	$4,748,590	$2,920,812
1892	11,386,677	8,492,306

Mr. President, the anticipation of the Commissioner as to the establishment of a rival line by the Canadian Pacific has come about. The British and Canadian Governments have established a line on the Pacific Ocean in competition with the Oceanic Line, and it is running to-day from Vancouver to Australia. The amendment brought forward by the Committee on Appropriations is to save, if possible, this American line from being driven off the ocean by British competition.

In 1895 we paid for carrying foreign mails $1,173,561. Of this sum there was paid to American ships for carrying the mails $633,350. This is the only compensation that American ships got during that year. In the same year England paid for carrying the mails about $3,885,000, and suffered an actual loss in this branch of her service of $2,225,000; that is to say, the mail service cost England $2,225,000 more than she received.

American citizens have only two steamship lines on the Pacific Ocean. One is the Pacific Mail, running from San Francisco to China and Japan, which receives a subsidy of $6,384 per trip; the other, the Oceanic Mail Steamship Company, the one which is under consideration and named in the amendment, receives about $5,000 per trip from the United States, according to the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, and received $4,400 a trip last year, as suggested to me by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Now, let us see what British ships get in those waters in competition with the Oceanic and the Pacific Mail steamship lines. The British and Canadian lines on the Pacific Ocean to China and Japan from Vancouver get $400,000 a year from England and Canada, or $30,767 a trip.

How is the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to survive this sort of competition? The Pacific Mail Steamship Company gets $6,384 per trip, while one of the British steamship companies gets $30,767 per trip for like service, and the other, to Australia, gets about $175,000 per year.

How can the American lines survive this competition? How can they successfully compete against such odds? How can they stand out and hope to do business upon any profitable basis? It is simply impossible.

Only the other day it was decided to establish a fast steamship line from Halifax to Queenstown, and tenders have been invited to build this line, which is to consist of four first-class ships, as good as the Teutonic, to run 20 knots per hour, of 8,500 tons burden, and to make the trip in five and one-half days. Now listen to the subventions, or subsidies, if you please, which this line is going to get, making it the rival of any line out of New York City. It is to get from the Canadian Government a subsidy of $750,000 and from England $350,000 a year, making a total of $1,100,000 a year from those two Governments; nearly twice as much as all the American ships get for all the mails they carry.

Mr. PLATT. Is that the Montreal line?

Mr. ELKINS. It is the new line from Halifax to Queenstown. This fast line is to connect at Halifax with the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and at Vancouver the railroad is to connect with the Canadian Pacific Steamship Line to China and Japan and the other Canadian Pacific line to Australia. This is a vast scheme reaching halfway around the world, the Canadian Pacific Railroad forming the link on land. It is both a railroad and a shipping enterprise, and threatens the interest of the United States. The subsidies for these two steamship lines, one on the Pacific and the other on the Atlantic, amount in the aggregate to $1,500,000 per annum.

In connection with the efforts being made to destroy our shipping, particularly on the Pacific, I wish to read from the report of Gen. E. C. O'Brien, Commissioner of Navigation, for 1892, pages 11 and 12:

> The Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed almost entirely by gifts of money, gifts of constructed railroad, gifts of land, the guaranty of bonds and of stocks and franchises, exemptions from taxations, and exclusive privileges conferred upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by the Canadian Government. These gifts and subventions of various sorts amount to a donated capitalization of about $210,000,000, a sum considerably in excess of the officially reputed cost of the entire Canadian Pacific Railway.
> The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has besides established a steamer line between the western terminus of its road and China and Japan. This line, started in the year 1886, is also heavily subsidized by the Canadian Government and by the British Government. The combined subventions and largesses to this transcontinental railroad and associated steamer line, with exemption from taxation, amount to a discriminating annual subvention of at least $10,000,000 over and above the aids extended to any transcontinental railroad in the United States, even in connection with the aids extended to any American steamer line plying between San Francisco and China and Japan. This powerful Canadian and British combination was inaugurated and consummated with the openly-avowed object in view of securing the control of the commerce of the United States with Asia and of diverting from American internal transportation lines and from American trade centers as large a portion as possible of our own domestic commerce. In all the wondrous history of British commercial aggression there is nothing so audacious or so potential. The whole enterprise seems to be predicated upon the long-continued failure of the United States to protect its own foreign commerce.

Mr. President, in view of this official statement—and I think it is borne out by the facts—how can the United States hope to meet and resist this vast combination? It is the greatest combination in the interest of trade and commerce ever formed on sea and land, and is backed by the treasuries of two governments.

Then, again, we are threatened on the south by another British line across the continent. It is stated upon good authority that English capital has brought about an arrangement by which she is to secure a railroad through Mexico, connecting the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific Ocean. She already has a great line on the north, and will soon have one on the south; and our people sit idly by and make no attempt to meet this aggression and invasion of our commerce and our trade.

The Canadian Pacific Railroad, Mr. President, has been styled the Canadian Government on wheels, oiled and pushed by England. I make no such statement. But I do say it is the natural enemy of the transportation interests of the United States, and it stands to-day as our greatest commercial antagonist. It violates our interstate-commerce law with complacent indifference; it cuts rates, and it takes freights from our Pacific railroads, in which the United States has a direct interest. It hauls more cheaply from St. Louis and other interior points in our country, by way of Canada to Oregon and San Francisco, than the Pacific roads can do, though the distance is much shorter. It is a sharp competitor now for business with all the Pacific roads from and to California. For 2,000 miles the Canadian Pacific traverses a nonproductive country, one not able to support a railroad. It lives off its subventions and the business it takes from the railroads of the United States.

The agents of the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company, I am told, are now in Washington about this Capitol. I suppose they are here to make cut rates to Halifax, Vancouver, Hongkong, and Shanghai, and working against any aid being given to American steamship lines. This cutting of rates, this violation of our interstate commerce law, this invasion of our trade, should be stopped, and we can do it; we have the remedy in our own hands. All we have to do is simply to discontinue the bonding privilege, under which they carry goods in bond, starting from Vancouver, to Europe and points in the United States. I would suggest that we stop every car and break every consular seal at our frontiers beyond Chicago and the Soo. This would throw the trade from Asia to San Francisco and pass it over the Pacific Railroad lines. It would break up in part, or largely, the violation of the interstate-commerce law and stop the giving of rebates and the cutting of rates.

It is claimed that this bonding privilege, under which the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company is able to live and do business, is authorized under the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of Washington, which was entered into and ratified in 1871. At that time these privileges were confined exclusively to the Eastern roads and water routes. The Canadian Pacific never had been dreamed of at that time, and its construction took place long afterwards.

Under a fair construction of that treaty, the Canadian Pacific Railroad would have no right to pass its cars into the United States at points in the far West; and we have it in our power, by a rule or regulation of the Treasury Department, to open each car and examine the contents thereof. If that were done it would stop this invasion of our commerce, the taking of our trade, and the violation of the interstate-commerce act.

To oppose this active, open, and oppressive hostility to American trade, American steamships, and American railroads by England and Canada is the kind of Monroe doctrine I favor. And I am sure it will have better results to our people and their interests than a dispute with England over an obscure boundary in a foreign country 3,000 miles away. The United States, in my opinion, should at once withdraw this bonding privilege to the Canadian Pacific.

In twenty-six years we have collected from the tariff $4,300,000,000. That is an appalling sum. Our people have paid out to foreigners for foreign shipping about $4,100,000,000. The larger part of this vast sum of money could have been paid to our own people. It should have been kept in our own country, and would have been if we had extended the proper protection to American shipping.

From 1848 to 1891 Great Britain paid in the way of subsidies and mail pay to her steamers $197,027,789, while the United States paid in the way of mail payments and help only $25,546,330; that is to say, $8 to our $1 to support her shipping. We can not cope with England by subsidies at this late day. She is too strongly intrenched and established on the seas. It would take fifty years, if we should match our Treasury against England's, to even catch up or be on an equal footing with her in shipping and as a maritime power.

Mr. Chamberlain, in his speech of March 25 before the Canada Club in London, said:

> The greatest obligation is the imperial defense, the greatest interest the imperial trade. The former must be reached through the latter.

Why can not we learn a lesson from these utterances? This is the policy of England and this has made her the mistress of the sea, controlling the commerce of the world. If we were to adopt such a policy and protect our own interests, then we would be a great maritime and a naval power, the equal of England, our flag known and respected all over the world.

Mr. President, the question is how to bring this about. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] in his speech yesterday opposed this amendment; he opposed subsidies. I take it this is so. I heard his speech and I take it he means that it is the duty of our Government to secure the transportation of the mails for the least amount of money, and therefore, if British ships will carry them cheaper, let the British ships have the business and the American ships go out of business. That is the way I interpret the Senator's speech. But, Mr. President, that would leave us at the mercy of England without any shipping or without any pretension to being a maritime power.

The best plan that suggests itself to my mind is that we should go back to the teachings of our fathers, and that we should restore the old discriminating duties; that we should impose a tax of 10 per cent ad valorem, in addition to whatever tax is imposed by law, on all goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States in vessels not of the United States. It seems to me that this would settle the question upon the best possible basis and in time revive and restore our shipping.

Our first Congress, upon the recommendation of Washington, Madison, and Hamilton, passed just such a law as I suggest, which lasted more than twenty-six years; and under the operation of which, in 1807, we were equal to England in the shipping and carrying trade of the world. Such an act would take no money out of the Treasury. It would not be open to the objection that a subsidy is open to, and that our people so persistently fight and have fought. It would, on the contrary, put money into the Treasury, and at the same time give shipping a new life. If we would enact such a law, within two years we would find money coming into the Treasury and American ships in every port of the world. Under such a law our shipping would prosper at once.

We began our Government with protection to American manufacturers and likewise with protection to our shipping interests. We have continued, under constant assaults, however, protection to our manufactures, and the result is that we are the leading manufacturing nation of the world. At the end of twenty-six years of protection to shipping, by the persuasion of England we abandoned it. What is the condition now? Had we continued throwing around our shipping the same protection we afforded to our manufactures, our shipping interests would be in just the same condition that our manufacturing interests are, and we should be leading the world in shipping.

After seventy years of abandonment of protection to American shipping, the result is that to-day American ships are carrying but 11 per cent of our foreign trade, and we are getting worse off in that direction every year. It is very significant, however, and also gratifying, that this subject is engaging the attention of the country. I beg the indulgence of the Senate while I read from the platform adopted by the Republican convention of Massachusetts last week bearing on this subject.

> We have always given protection to our shipbuilders. In late years we have neglected to protect our shipowners. We believe the time has come to return to the policy of Washington and Hamilton, which by discriminating duties in favor of American bottoms secured 90 per cent of our carrying trade to American ships, and which, if now restored, would again revive our shipping and cause American freights to be paid to Americans.

That I believe to be sound doctrine. Listen to what Jefferson said on the same subject in 1791:

> If particular nations grasp at undue shares of our commerce, and more especially if they seize on the means of the United States to convert them into aliment for their own strength, and withdraw them entirely from the support of those to whom they belong, defensive and protective measures become necessary on the part of the nations whose marine sources are thus invaded, or it will be disarmed of its defense, its productions will be at the mercy of the nation which has possessed itself exclusively of the means of carrying them, and its politics may be influenced by those who command its commerce.—Jefferson's Works, volume 7, page 648.

Mr. President, what is the position of the United States? It has to-day the best business stand on this planet. On one side of us are 800,000,000 people, and on the other side 400,000,000 consumers. We are located between these vast populations; we have the longest seacoast line of any country in the world; we are the richest nation; we consume more and produce more than any other nation in the world. With these advantages and with a proper policy, we should be and we will be the greatest shipping and maritime power on earth.

But what is our present condition? As I have said, we carry only 11 per cent of our foreign trade, and this percentage is growing less every year. This is humiliating to Americans. Our flag is almost a myth and not known or seen in many important cities of the world. Notwithstanding our greatness, we are in some parts of the world almost an unknown people. Think of it! In 1895 only two American sailing vessels visited Liverpool, and during the same year not a single American vessel touched at the great cities of Glasgow, Hull, Cardiff, Belfast, Dublin, Stockholm, Portsmouth, Genoa, Naples, or Rotterdam. The United States flag was not seen on a ship in any one of those great cities of the world in 1895. In Barcelona only two American sailing vessels were seen last year. No wonder the Spaniards were willing to assault and insult our consul. What reason had they to believe that we had any flag, or a people capable of defending it? They scarcely ever see the flag of the United States in their waters.

In Bergen, the second largest city in Norway—and Norway is one of the largest shipping countries in the world, ranking next to Germany—the United States consul overcharged some person 25 cents in connection with a bill of lading. He was reported to the State Department, and on being called on for an explanation his answer was: "I am not familiar with the regulations, I confess. This is the first American ship that has come to this port in twenty-five years; and it is the first time I have had to look up the regulations."

Mr. President, I shall at some later day discuss further the question of discriminating duties. But in view of the circumstances surrounding this very steamship line, which needs this help, I state frankly that I do not believe that with the $80,000 with which we are trying to bolster it up it will be possible to save it for more than two or three years against Canadian and English opposition.

Mr. PASCO. I send to the desk an amendment which I intend to offer, and give notice of it now.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the pending amendment it is proposed to add:

> Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the establishment of any substation or branch office beyond the limits of any city or town in which the principal office is established.

Mr. PASCO. I shall desire to say a few words in support of the amendment at some time on the next legislative day. I understand the bill is not to be further considered to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Florida will yield to me, I will say that I do not expect to conclude the bill to-night, but hope to take it up on the next legislative day immediately after the routine morning business is disposed of. I have promised to yield to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that he may ask for the consideration of a bill which he has in charge.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENT AT PORTLAND, ME.

Mr. FRYE. I report at this time, from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment, a joint resolution (H. Res. 159) to authorize the Secretary of War to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Portland, Me., and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, as it is important to get the information.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 494) constituting Stamford, Conn., a subport of entry;

A bill (H. R. 55) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near the entrance to Maurice River, New Jersey; and

A bill (H. R. 6408) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott.

NORTH MANITOU LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to have laid before the Senate House bill 3736, which came over from the House of Representatives this afternoon, so as to have it considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 5736) to authorize the Light-House Board to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan; which was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Light-House Board be authorized to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan, heretofore appropriated for, and that the aforesaid board be authorized to lease the land necessary for the site of said aid to navigation until a perfect title to said site can be secured by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. HILL. This bill has been passed by the House of Representatives, and I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to say that they have approved the bill informally and recommend its passage. I will state that it is also recommended by the Light-House Board, and it is important that it be passed immediately. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT M'GEE.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 229) for the relief of Robert McGee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Senator from Missouri will reduce the amount to $5,000 I shall not object; otherwise I shall object.

Mr. VEST. That is the report of the committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Ten thousand dollars is a very large sum in these times especially, and $5,000 is certainly more than enough. It comes out of the Indians of my State. I have heretofore objected to the passage of the bill.

Mr. VEST. I have simply to say in regard to this case that it is the most atrocious that has ever come within my observation even among Indian depredations. Mr. McGee was utterly incapacitated, by reason of the great outrages by this tribe, for any business whatever. The whole top of his head was absolutely removed by the tomahawk and the scalping knife, and to-day and since that time his living at all is almost a miracle. I have seen him. There is only a membrane, and you can see the pulsation of the brain.

In addition to that he has, as the report shows, some twenty-odd wounds, inflicted by lances and knives, and the surgeon of the United States Army who attended him, and who made the report upon the case, says that he can not explain how the man survived those injuries at all. He is an object of charity now and has been ever since. Ten thousand dollars is a mere pittance, if the Indians can ever be made to pay the money. I do not know——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what committee reported the bill?

Mr. VEST. The bill was reported by the Committee on Indian Depredations. The report was made by the Senator's colleague [Mr. KYLE], and is filed with the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the bill goes over.

Mr. VEST. Then I shall ask the Senate to pass the bill when it is reached by the Senate on the Calendar, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from South Dakota.

GEORGE H. TICE.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1585) to authorize and direct the Auditor for the Post-Office Department to credit the account of George H. Tice, postmaster at Perth Amboy, N. J., for postage stamps and money-order funds stolen from his office.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 6, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 2, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

A. P. BROWN.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Lemars, Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $888.98 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa, for loss sustained by reason of burglary of postage stamps and money from said post-office on January 9, 1894.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES P. ANDERSON.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 641) for the relief of Charles P. Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to Charles P. Anderson, late first lieutenant of Company B, Second Regiment Arkansas Infantry Volunteers, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to the pay of a first lieutenant for the period beginning on the 10th day of September, 1863, and ending on the 16th day of February, A. D. 1864: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct from the sum so paid claimant any sums which have been heretofore paid him by the United States for his services in any military or other capacity from September 10, 1863, to February 16, 1864.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to have some explanation as to this bill; why, at this late date, you want this officer paid? This has been running over a period of some thirty years.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report of the Committee on War Claims be read, which will answer fully the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas.

The report (by Mr. COOPER of Texas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 641) entitled "A bill for the relief of Charles P. Anderson," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House report from the Committee on War Claims of the Fifty-third Congress, hereto attached and made a part of this report:

[House Report No. 350, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2560) for the relief of Charles P. Anderson, submit the following report:

A bill, in all respects like the present one, for the relief of this claimant was investigated by this committee in the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, upon which the following report was submitted by Mr. COBB of Missouri:

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3827) for the relief of Charles P. Anderson, submit the following report:

"This is a claim for pay for services rendered prior to muster by Charles P. Anderson, formerly first lieutenant Company B, Second Regiment Arkansas Infantry Volunteers.

"It appears from the petition and evidence filed in support thereof that Charles P. Anderson was appointed first lieutenant of said company and regiment on September 10, 1863. He was mustered into service as first lieutenant Company B, Second Arkansas Infantry Volunteers, to date from February 16, 1864, to fill an original vacancy. He tendered his resignation as such September 14, 1864, which was accepted September 19, 1864.

"By the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, it was intended by a general bill to give relief in this class of claims, and it appears that Mr. Anderson presented his case to the War Department under the act, and that his case has been decided adversely, because 'there is no record of a commission or appointment having been issued for him as of the grade and organization named; there was then no governor of Arkansas.'

"In the latter part of the summer of 1863 the Secretary of War transmitted to Maj. Gen. John M. Schofield, then commanding the Department of the Missouri, authority to organize and equip Union soldiers from citizens of Arkansas. In conformity with that authority General Schofield, in paragraph 5 of Special Orders, No. 238, dated at St. Louis, Mo., September 1, 1863, put Brig. Gen. John McNeil, commanding the District of Southwest Missouri, in charge of the organization of the troops. General McNeil was also instructed to appoint some officers to take immediate charge of organizing the troops. The officer thus appointed was authorized to recommend, with the concurrence of General McNeil, competent and efficient men to fill the positions of company officers in the various companies raised, such officers to be taken as far as practicable from citizens of Arkansas, the recommendation so made to be forwarded to department headquarters for reference to the Secretary of War.

"In pursuance of these orders M. L. Stephenson was appointed by General McNeil to take immediate supervision of the organization of the Second Arkansas Infantry by paragraph 7, Special Orders, No. 170, dated at headquarters, District of Southwest Missouri, Springfield, Mo., August 31, 1863. Charles P. Anderson was appointed first lieutenant of Company B, Second Regiment of Arkansas Infantry, under this authority on the 10th of September, 1863.

"While the decision of the War Department may be in accordance with the law, the fact remains that from September 10, 1863, to February 16, 1864, Anderson was on duty and recognized as first lieutenant; that his services as such were accepted by the Government. Having obtained the benefit of Anderson's services, the Government ought not to set up a technical plea in bar of its obligation to make compensation therefor, and your committee is of opinion that payment should be made Mr. Anderson."

In the conclusion reached and stated in said report the present committee concur, except in one particular.

It is obvious that if the claimant was paid by the United States in any other capacity than as first lieutenant for the period between September 10, 1863, and February 16, 1864, the sums so paid ought to be deducted from the payment authorized by this bill.

The committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by adding this clause:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct from the sum so paid claimant any sums which have been heretofore paid him by the United States for his services in any military or other capacity from September 10, 1863, to February 16, 1864."

The committee also recommend the following amendment to correct an error in drafting the bill:

In line 7 strike out "second lieutenant" and insert "first lieutenant."

And the committee recommend to the House that when so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, inasmuch as I could not hear all of the report read owing to the confusion on the floor, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if the command to which this man was attached was ever mustered?

Mr. TERRY. No, sir. The facts are these, I will state to the gentleman and to the House, so that there can be no misapprehension in reference to the matter:

This man went into the service on the 10th day of September, 1863, but a point was raised that there was no governor of the State of Arkansas at that time to commission him, and he was not duly mustered until February, 1864. The report shows, and the facts are, that he was doing duty and served as a first lieutenant in the Army of the United States from the date he entered the service—that is, September, 1863, and there was a general bill passed in 1884 which it was supposed would give relief in this and similar cases. But the point was made that he was not duly mustered in at that time, and it was answered there was no governor to grant commissions. We did have a governor, it is true, but he was on the other side of that business. Mr. Anderson was mustered under authority of the Secretary of War, transmitted to General Schofield, who placed General McNeil in command of the troops authorized to be raised in Arkansas.

Mr. HULL. Do the records of the War Department show that this man was on the rolls at that time?

Mr. TERRY. I suppose the roll that went to the Department would be the roll that was made up after he was mustered, but the report of the committee shows that he performed the service as first lieutenant, that he was recognized as such, although he did not receive pay from the 10th of September, 1863, until the date specified in the bill. The bill was fully considered and unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims, and if there is any objection to the relief asked, I have no knowledge of it. Mr. Anderson is a very worthy man.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that these bills ought to be investigated as to the remuster. We have before the Military Committee probably 300 bills or more of this character.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is another very important question, and that is, whether the command was of a size that authorized the muster in.

Mr. HULL. I was going to refer to that. We have a large number of Tennessee cases especially. The law of 1863 provided that a man, even if he was regularly commissioned, could not be mustered unless he had a command of sufficient size to justify mustering a commissioned officer. In other words, under the law of 1863, in a large number of these cases there was no vacancy for a man to be mustered in even if he had been commissioned.

Mr. TERRY. This was a full regiment, as I understand, and I will call the attention of the gentleman to this part of the report——

Mr. HULL. I object, because I think the matter ought to be investigated. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the bill and let it go over until to-morrow, until I can tell whether I will object or not.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

T. J. PITZER.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4842) for the relief of T. J. Pitzer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to T. J. Pitzer, of Barbourville, Ky., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400 for mules taken from him and used for the public service during the late civil war.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PUGH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4842) for the relief of T. J. Pitzer, report as follows:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House report from the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended and made a part of this report.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and recommend that the bill referred to them do pass.

[House Report No. 1625, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant, Thomas J. Pitzer, of Knox County, Ky., brings this claim for $400, the price of two good mules taken from him in 1864, at or near Barboursville, Ky. The proof is conclusive that claimant was a loyal citizen, and it is equally as well shown that the two mules were taken and used by the Army of the United States. The witnesses differ a little as to the value of the mules, one witness fixing the value at $150 each, and the other at $200 each. The committee fix the value at the sum of $200 each, making $400 for the two, and this sum they recommend be paid claimant. The committee think there is nothing in the statement of the agent of the Quartermaster-General that claimant purchased these mules from some men residing in a State in insurrection, there being absolutely nothing in the record to show any collusion or bad faith in any part of the transaction.

The committee are of opinion that the claim should be allowed, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, or any member of that committee if any member be present, what is the aggregate of the claims for mules taken in the war by our forces? How many bills are now pending?

Mr. DOCKERY. And for horses also?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. And I should like to ask further why these claims should not take the same course that is taken by other claims for supplies? Is there any difference in law between a claim for a mule and a claim for corn or oats or hay?

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not on the Committee on War Claims, but this bill has come through the proper channel. It is a meritorious claim, it was early established, and this money should have been paid years ago. This man is entitled to the value of his mules, which were taken and used by the Government, as shown by the testimony on file in the committee room. I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask if this claim has been considered by the Court of Claims?

Mr. COLSON. It has not, and it is not such a claim as should properly go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask whether the claimant, the alleged owner of the mules, was a loyal man or not?

Mr. COLSON. His loyalty is shown by the testimony on file in the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Was he loyal throughout the war?

Mr. COLSON. Loyal throughout the war, as shown by the testimony.

Mr. LOUD. How many mules are provided for in this bill?

Mr. COLSON. Two.

Mr. LOUD. And $400 is asked?

Mr. COLSON. Two hundred dollars each. They are shown by the testimony to have been worth that, and this man has been kept out of his money for a long time.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I should like to state that I understand there is another mule bill to be brought up for consideration after this one, and the price of the mules in that bill is $150 each.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, these were Kentucky mules. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I move that the bill be amended by substituting $300 for $400. Will that amendment be accepted?

Mr. COLSON. No; I do not accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not in order until consent is given for the consideration of the bill. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BONDS OF THE TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. LOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The bill which has been read has passed the House.

Mr. LOW. There is a Senate amendment to this bill.

Mr. LACEY. There is a Senate amendment and a House amendment to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the engrossed copy——

Mr. DOCKERY. Just a word——

The SPEAKER (continuing). Which will be read to the House. This is a House bill with Senate amendments. The House bill will be read first, and then the amendments offered by the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. And it is a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it is a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. OWENS. I believe in addition to the Senate amendments the bill was reported back from the Committee on Territories with the recommendation that the House concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see that the Clerk reports the bill so that the House can understand it. The Clerk will first report the House bill.

The House bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendments of the Senate.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the recommendation of the committee. The gentleman from New York will state what the action of the committee was.

Mr. LOW. The committee reported favorably on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. What amendment?

Mr. LOW. The Senate amendment and the amendment made in the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that involves an important question of law as well as of fact, and was only reported yesterday, and therefore I will have to object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

FREDERICK VAN GUILDER.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Frederick Van Guilder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Frederick Van Guilder upon the records of Company K, One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteers, and to issue to him an honorable discharge, to date July 6, 1863.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman if that bill was considered at a Friday night session?

Mr. HEATWOLE. It was favorably considered last Friday evening and recommended to pass.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman named in this bill enlisted in a New York regiment, and the muster rolls were mislaid and not sent to the proper officers. Mr. Van Guilder served about eleven months with the regiment without pay, and it was also refused to issue clothing to him. After the fight at Gettysburg, in which he participated the first day, he surrendered to the provost-marshal at Baltimore, who sent to Washington to find whether this man had been mustered in. The records did not show that he had been mustered, and the provost-marshal then gave him a pass to New York and discharged him. Afterwards the muster rolls were found at Albany and sent to Washington, and then this man was marked as a deserter. He afterwards enlisted in a Vermont regiment, and served throughout the war and was honorably discharged. The bill passed through the Committee of the Whole last Friday night without objection.

This bill has been favorably considered by Colonel Ainsworth, of the War Department.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What is the object—to give him a pension?

Mr. HEATWOLE. He did not know until a few years ago that this charge was against him. He is in every way an honorable man. I am personally acquainted with him, and can vouch for him.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to state that this bill came up at the last Friday night session and there was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. But the gentleman from South Carolina agrees to a number of bills I can not. For instance, the other day he advocated dueling, notwithstanding——

Mr. TALBERT. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SAMUEL BURRELL.

Mr. BURRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2320) for the relief of Samuel Burrell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now on the records of the War Department against Samuel Burrell, late first lieutenant of Company M, Fifth Illinois Cavalry Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge, to date from November 26, 1862.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask if this bill has been considered at a Friday night session?

Mr. BURRELL. It has been through both committees some time back.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Has it been considered at the Friday night sessions?

Mr. BURRELL. Last Friday night?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Any Friday night?

Mr. BURRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BURRELL. If the gentleman insists I will ask for the reading of the report. The bill passed in the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and the Fifty-third Congresses, and there was no objection to it. It is simply to correct an error in the record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee are as follows:

Strike out all of line 8 and insert in lieu thereof the words "April 13, 1863"; also by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That he shall receive no pay or allowance by virtue of this act."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURRELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2912) granting to the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad Company, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, its lessee in perpetuity, the right of way over a part of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian Reservation in the States of Kansas and Nebraska; and

A bill (H. R. 4632) for the relief of Frederick B. Betts, Nichols & Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the concurrent resolution passed by Congress on the 27th day of July, 1894, authorizing and providing for the Compilation of all the Annual, Special, and Veto Messages, Proclamations, and Inaugural Addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894, inclusive, be, and the same is hereby, amended, so as to strike out of the resolution the words "to 1894, inclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "to March 4, 1897," so as to require said compilation to be brought down to the ending of the present Administration; and the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to apply so much of the money appropriated for public printing and binding for the current year, in addition to the $600 heretofore appropriated or set apart for that purpose, as may be found necessary to complete the copying of the said messages and other documents for printing.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, at the earliest day practicable, 5,000 additional copies, in separate form, with paper cover, of the paper entitled "Economic geology of the Mercur mining district," being a part of the Sixteenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, with accompanying illustrations, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for distribution by the Geological Survey.

Also:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report of a hearing before the Committee on Woman Suffrage, January 28, 1896; 2,000 copies for the Senate and 3,000 copies for the House of Representatives.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 941) granting to the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad Company, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, its lessee in perpetuity, the right of way over a part of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian Reservation in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 1205) for the relief of the persons who sustained damage by the explosion of an ammunition chest of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, July 16, 1894—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

VENEZUELA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report on a privileged question from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution No. 225, respectfully report the same back and recommend its adoption.

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives copies of all dispatches, notes, and cablegrams in the Department of State, from and after the 1st day of December, 1895, until the present time, that relate to mediation or intervention by the United States in the affairs of Venezuela, together with all correspondence with foreign governments relating to the same topic.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is guarded as in case of resolutions of inquiry ordinarily. It has received the assent of all the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs who are at present in the city, and I hope it will be passed without objection.

The resolution was adopted.

CORRECTION.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct a statement which I made on the floor yesterday. I stated that the general treasurer of the Soldiers' Home was compelled to give a security company bond by some officer of the Government, presumably by the Secretary of War, as he was the officer to whom the bond was made. My information was incorrect as to the treasurer having been compelled to give such a bond. What seemed to force the action of the treasurer in securing the bond was the fact that the Homes had been without funds for about three months and that he could more readily and promptly secure a bond from the security company than a personal bond. That was what induced him to give the security company bond, and not any requirement by the Secretary of War.

Mr. BLUE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLUE. Is it not a fact that you have appointed a man as general treasurer of the Home who can not give any other kind of bond?

Mr. STEELE. It is not a fact.

Mr. BLUE. Are you sure of that?

Mr. STEELE. I am.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the sundry civil appropriation bill.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, with the permission of the gentleman and of the House, I will say that there is a very decided contention between the House and the Senate upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill with reference to the compensation of the subordinates of the Department of Justice, and I desire to have printed in the RECORD, for the information of the House in the future, a letter from the late district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, Mr. Ingham, who went out of office yesterday and whose successor comes in to-day. I desire to have that letter put into the RECORD for future use by members of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to have printed in the RECORD the letter described by him?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will ask the gentleman whether there is anything political in the letter?

Mr. BINGHAM. Nothing whatever. It simply relates to the question of fees as against other methods of compensation.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, March 31, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the bill fixing the salaries of United States attorneys, in which Philadelphia is placed at $5,000, and at a lower rate than Chicago, Boston, and several other districts, notably several in the Western and Southern States, I desire to again call to your attention the large amount of important litigation which is transacted in this district and causes it to rank second in the country in the number and importance of the cases tried.

In the first place, the business in the criminal court here is large and would be much larger if many trivial cases were prosecuted. There never has been a year for many years when the United States attorney could not earn his maximum in criminal cases alone had the office been conducted with that object in view, but to the credit of the several gentlemen who have held the position it has been the uniform practice to issue warrants only when a prima facie case was made out and the offense a proper one to prosecute.

The criminal cases which I have in mind which required careful preparation (in some of them weeks and months) during my term of office, are—

United States vs. Evans, director Spring Garden National Bank. Convicted under section 5209, Revised Statutes.

United States vs. Young, director Spring Garden National Bank. Convicted under section 5209, Revised Statutes.

United States vs. H. H. Yard. Indicted for aiding and abetting officers of the Keystone National Bank. Acquitted.

United States vs. C. W. and E. M. Raymond, directors Middletown National Bank. Convicted under section 5209, Revised Statutes.

United States vs. Hunter, cashier Phœnixville National Bank. Convicted.

United States vs. Grady, cashier Marietta National Bank. Convicted.

United States vs. Baker, teller Consolidation National Bank. Convicted.

United States vs. Halterman, teller Columbia National Bank. Convicted.

United States vs. ——, cashier Ellenville National Bank. Convicted.

United States vs. Cochran. Robbing the United States Mint of $110,000. Convicted.

United States vs. Garfinkle et al. Organized band of counterfeiters. Convicted.

United States vs. Rosengarten et al. Organized band of counterfeiters. Convicted.

United States vs. Wibourg et al. Aiding a military expedition against Spain and landing force on the Island of Cuba. Convicted.

United States vs. Durland et al. and United States vs. Chambers et al. Schemes to defraud by means of investment companies. Convicted.

In the district court there are also a large number of civil cases. These are suits on official bonds; suits to recover duties, and various other cases. Among those I now think of as being more difficult of preparation than ordinary are—

United States vs. E. C. Knight et al. This was the sugar-trust case, involving the validity of the sale of four sugar refineries in Philadelphia to the sugar trust at a price of over $20,000,000. It occupied much of my time in the years 1892 and 1893; was argued in the district court and in the circuit court of appeals. I was never allowed any compensation for this, but would, I presume, be entitled to a docket fee of $20.

United States vs. Queen et al. A suit to recover duties on certain lenses. The case was tried twice, and involved a large sum of money, and established a new principle of law in favor of the Government.

United States vs. Snowden et al. Suit on official bond of H. S. Cochran, convicted of robbing the mint.

United States vs. Bosbyshell et al. Suit on official bond on account of defalcation of H. S. Cochran.

United States vs. Lees, United States vs. Wanamaker, and several other cases, for importing alien laborers under contract.

United States vs. Kenworthy. A suit for duties. Tried twice in the district court and once in the circuit court of appeals.

This list could be prolonged indefinitely, but is sufficient to show the character of the civil business in the district court. In addition to this there were a number of cases in admiralty—actions by the United States for penalties and forfeitures, and actions against the United States for salvage.

In the circuit court all the customs cases are tried. The United States attorney receives compensation for his services in these cases, which does not appear in his emolument account. Under the new act he must perform this service without any compensation. The cases are of vast importance to the Government. To be well tried they must be prepared thoroughly, and no class of cases are harder to understand and intelligently prepare. It is a distinct branch of the law, as much so as patent cases, and to do good work the United States attorney must spend much time and thought in the preparation of his cases. To convince one of the necessity of good legal ability in this class of cases it is only necessary to refer to the Hat Trimming Cases, several of which were tried in Philadelphia. These cases involve $25,000,000, and the ablest customs lawyers in the country are employed by the plaintiffs. The customs cases are very numerous; hundreds of them are still pending in Philadelphia; and the new cases under the act of June 10, 1890, are also numerous. During my term of office I disposed of a great many of these cases. The more important ones were those known as the Tile Cases. The winning of this case saved the United States in Philadelphia $20,000, and in New York I am informed more than $100,000. I also tried and won the Wool Waste Case, which involved quite as much money; the Yarn Case, which involved a large sum of money, and many others. The importance of properly trying these cases is not alone for the amount actually involved in the case, but because the Treasury Department follows the decisions and applies them to all other cases of a like nature wherever pending.

There is no district in the country where more favorable results to the Government have been obtained than in Philadelphia, and this has been largely owing to the fact that the cases were thoroughly prepared and the facts completely digested before going into court. The bulk of these cases are tried in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Baltimore, and New Orleans.

It certainly seems a short-sighted policy to ask a lawyer in addition to trying all the criminal and civil cases in the district court to go into the circuit court and try the customs cases as they should be tried all on a salary of $5,000, when his predecessors have all earned from $8,000 to $15,000 per annum for like services.

But in addition to the customs cases in the circuit court there are also condemnation proceedings and other cases; for example, the Interstate Commerce Commission vs. the Lehigh Valley Railroad, which has just been argued, but which has required attention in taking testimony, etc., for several years.

In condemnation proceedings during my term of office I have had several very important and difficult cases. The site for a new mint at Sixth and Walnut streets required months of the severest labor. There were 140 different defendants. Each case had to be separately prepared. Experts had to be employed, and as the Treasury Department requested quick work, it kept the office busy almost day and night. The owners claimed $1,600,000 and were allowed $900,000. The site not being approved, I brought new proceedings against the site at Broad and Race streets. The defendants were not so numerous, but the work was severe. The owners asked $1,200,000 and were awarded $550,000. Appeals were taken and cases tried in the circuit court before a jury of twelve.

Also I have had several proceedings for condemnation of land on the Gettysburg battlefield. The ground was owned by an electric railway company, which made the most bitter opposition. My work here was made lighter by the intelligent and valuable aid of the Battlefield Commission, but there was a great deal of work still left for the United States attorney. The case was appealed to the circuit court and finally to the Supreme Court of the United States. A favorable decision there will enable the Commission to go ahead with the cases to a final determination.

For all this work in condemnation proceedings not one dollar is allowed. The United States attorney performs it, according to the Comptroller's decision, as part of his duty under the salary of $200 per annum. My term of office was not an unusual one. My predecessor, Mr. Read, had as much or more to do, and the present United States attorney will have the same experience. In my judgment nothing less than $6,000 is a fair compensation, and Congress will simply make a blunder if the salary is cut down to a point where the best lawyers will be unwilling to take it.

Certainly, Philadelphia is entitled to as great compensation as any city except New York, and it will be a mistaken policy to cripple the service at this important point.

Trusting you may be able to get for Philadelphia at least as much consideration as is accorded to Chicago or Boston,

I am yours, very truly, ELLERY P. INGHAM.

P. S.—I am informed by my assistant, Mr. Newitt, that my emolument account for the last quarter, which does not include customs cases, will amount for the quarter to $4,500.

E. P. I.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. CANNON was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to pages 76, 77, and 86 to make what are substantially two or three verbal corrections.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, by unanimous consent, the following changes were made:

Page 76, line 23, after the word "home," the words "clerks and orderlies" were inserted.

Page 77, line 20, after the word "bedding," the words "bedding material" were inserted.

Page 86, lines 21 and 22, the words "printing of blanks at depot and necessary materials therefor" were stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read that portion of the bill, beginning on page 16, which has not been considered by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

For labor and expenses of engraving and printing: For salaries of all necessary clerks and employees, other than plate printers and plate printers' assistants, $420,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired.

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, $516,350, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired.

For engravers, printers, and other materials, except distinctive paper and for miscellaneous expenses, $166,650: Provided, That the appropriation herein made shall be used for all expenditures of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the manner in which appropriations for said Bureau have heretofore been used, and no part of said appropriation shall be held to be contingent expenses of the Treasury Department, nor be subject to the provisions of sections 240 and 3683 of the Revised Statutes: And provided further, That all the business of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall be under the immediate control of the director of said Bureau, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the director of said Bureau shall report to and be responsible directly to the Secretary of the Treasury.

For rent of office for agent of the Post-Office Department to supervise the distribution of stamps of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, $600.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, by unanimous consent, the paragraph just read was passed over when regularly reached in the consideration of the bill. I very much prefer that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], who desires to be heard with reference to the appropriation for the Howard University, should go on now (as I understand he is ready) and that this question which I desire to bring to the attention of the Committee of the Whole should come up immediately after the discussion with reference to the Howard University has closed.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentlemen concerned are agreed in reference to this order of proceeding, it is satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] will be withheld for the present; and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER].

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, while I was momentarily absent from the Chamber, an amendment relating to the Howard University was offered and, without discussion, was adopted by the Committee of the Whole House. The circumstances attending the offering of that amendment, the utter absence of any objection on the part of anyone, including the gentleman in charge, whose duty it was to protect the bill as reported, the very significant action of sundry members of the Appropriations Committee, left an impression upon many members of the House that as a matter of fact the amendment which was proposed was satisfactory to everyone; it was passed pro forma, as I understand, not exceeding half a dozen members voting for it. I apprehend the Committee of the Whole little understood the nature and far-reaching effect of that amendment; and in order that we may intelligently discuss it now under the arrangement which has been made, I ask the Clerk to read the amendment as it appears on page 3444 of the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 3, on page 59, the following:

"HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

"For maintenance of the Howard University, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, the balance of which will be paid from donations and other sources, $27,500; for tools, materials, wages of instructors, and other necessary expenses of the industrial department, $3,000; for books for library, law library, bookcases, shelving, and fixtures, $900; for material and apparatus for chemical, physical, and natural history and laboratory, $200; for improvement of grounds and repairs of buildings, $1,000; in all, $32,600: Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any teacher or professor of theology or religion, or to any chaplain in said university."

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I think it will be admitted on all hands that the Howard University is an institution situated in the District of Columbia; that it is a private institution; and I think, beyond all question, every candid person must admit that it is also a sectarian institution. The House will readily understand what is involved in this amendment. Already on two different occasions this House, after full debate—debate of a character calculated to bring out the real judgment and sense of the House—has placed itself emphatically upon the ground that it will not appropriate a single dollar to any sectarian institution. I think it may also be fairly argued from the action already had that this House goes further, and that it is not in favor of appropriating money for any private purposes.

Let me first address myself to the character of this institution. I hold in my hand its official catalogue, the last one issued, covering the period from March, 1894, to March, 1895. That catalogue tells me—I read from page 66:

This institution is always emphatically Christian. Its instructors believe in Christianity as the only basis of true culture. But pupils here are given no denominational bias. The Bible is one of the regular text-books.

Referring to the first pages of this same catalogue, I find that its first department, the one to which greatest prominence is given, is the department of theology, of which the president is dean. I find that it has a department of medicine, a dental college, a pharmaceutical college, a department of law, a college department, a preparatory department, a normal department, a department of music, and an industrial department. It will therefore be observed that this institution is endeavoring to do not only preparatory work but work of a high grade, such work as is usually done by a university as contradistinguished from a college.

Theological students attend classes in other departments. I think it will be admitted that at no time has the Congress of the United States ever gone so far as to commit itself to a national university. Ever since the days of Washington various Presidents have recommended the chartering of such an institution. Petitions in favor of such a project have come in from all parts of the Union. Educators all over this land have strenuously advocated it. But never to this day has the Congress of the United States set apart a single dollar for university education of the youth of our land, except as small tracts of land have been set apart for the use of State universities, and in this regard the several States have fairly shared. We have in the main thus far limited our appropriations and all governmental agencies to such education as is deemed on all hands necessary to qualify a person for the ordinary duties of citizenship. With the common-school education we have stopped, save and except only the aid which has been granted the industrial colleges and State universities of the land. I do not now refer to the class of appropriations by way of subsidies, and which appropriations I am attacking.

This Howard University is an institution for colored people, primarily and principally. Generally speaking, there are no white students there. I want to know on what principle of equity, on what principle of right or of equality, gentlemen will vote for the so-called higher education of the colored race money which they withhold from their own race—from their own children. What excuse can you give—those of you who live in New York or in Georgia, in Nebraska or in Kansas—for appropriating money for the so-called higher education here in the District of Columbia of a certain race, when you deny such appropriations to your own people? If you must appropriate for the institution, why not do so out of District of Columbia funds? You support your State schools by State taxation.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the broadest and the most liberal education. But one of the first essentials of the right kind of education is equality in education as well as before the law. You have no right to make preferences. You have no right to single out one race, one nationality, one creed, or one social class, and confer upon that race, nationality, creed or class benefits which you deny to others. There is absolutely no excuse or justification for taking one dollar by taxation from the masses and bestowing it upon the few. Favoritism has no place whatever in an intelligent republic. Here is this institution, which is admittedly private, taking care of the few; but we are doing it in a way in which we have never taken care of any other class when we have known what we were doing.

I said this is a sectarian institution. Let us see. This catalogue says:

The students conduct with enthusiasm literary and missionary societies. Africa is regarded with prayerful attention as a missionary field.

So we are educating these missionaries for Africa. I submit the time is now and here when the colored people of this country need, and the white people need, missionaries at home, not abroad; men and women who can rise to the plane of good citizenship here and not undertake to work out, at the public expense, a system of evangelizing the people in Africa.

But further, Mr. Chairman, we are informed here in this same catalogue to which I have already referred "that the students preach sermons and conduct pulpit exercises in the presence of one another and of the faculty, who kindly criticise them."

And I may say for the edification of the members of the House who have been given some extraordinary exhibitions of delsartean oratory here from time to time that, so the catalogue says, "much attention is devoted to pulpit elocution, with a large application of delsartean principles." And yet you propose for that purpose to take and expend the public money.

But it is insisted that the amendment provides that no part of the money appropriated shall be paid for theological or religious teachings. Not so. Gentlemen, we can not afford to attempt to deceive each other by any such subterfuges in order to get in an appropriation of money. We owe it to ourselves to be reasonably candid, at least. We can not deceive the people of the United States. You may cover it up here under a form of words in the excitement of the moment, but in the calmer moments which come to the people out yonder by their firesides—the people whose representatives you are will read what you have done here. They will not be deceived. They will discover the true nature of this amendment. They will see its pernicious doctrine and pronounce their righteous judgment on such actions. But what does this amendment provide? After making the appropriation of $32,600, it proceeds with a sham effort at self-disinfection:

Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any teacher or professor of theology or religion or to any chaplain in said university.

I ask you in all candor what practical effect has that? Are there no other expenses of the university than those involved in teaching theology? Is there no other income than that which you propose to appropriate here for this establishment? Why, gentlemen, I find in the report of this institution for 1895 that the income of the institution itself was $57,640.55, of which the Government of the United States appropriated $29,500. In other words, only about one-half of the money came from the United States, and that the balance for the support of the establishment came from other sources. Now, I ask, if that is the condition of affairs, what is the practical effect of the proviso which is added to this amendment, and which was thrown in for the purpose of catching the House on yesterday? What is its practical effect? Can not the institution take the $29,000 received from other sources and use that for religious instruction, and use the other $29,000 or $30,000 that the Government of the United States appropriates for other purposes?

Suppose you would provide in express terms that the expense of the theological department should be paid out of this appropriation. What difference would it make? To ask the question is to show that the proviso is inoperative. Not a dollar of the money appropriated by the Government need be used for that purpose, and yet every dollar that is appropriated is simply that much in addition to the sum to be applied for theological teaching. What difference does it make, practically speaking, then, whether that proviso is inserted or not. If we make the appropriation in any form they will continue to use their other funds for theological purposes. If we do not, they will have less money to use for their departments of law and theology. When the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, who introduced the proviso comes to speak, I ask him, in all fairness, in the name of common honesty, to explain what he meant by the proviso? If he had an honest purpose, it is so skillfully concealed that the average mind is unable to discover it. I repeat, it has no practical effect, and you may as well give the $32,600 without any proviso whatever.

But it may be insisted, Mr. Chairman, that this institution has received other funds with which it supports the theological chair. There is some foundation, I will admit, for that claim. For in their report we find they receive from the Board of American Missions, in addition to the Stone endowment, a total fund for this purpose of $4,475, and that fund is paid, I find, to the officer who lectures in the department of theology. Upon another page of the same report I find the president receives out of this fund, as a part of his salary of $4,000, $2,800, and the Government appropriates the other $1,200 from the amount set apart for the theological department.

In order that the committee and the House may clearly see the method of disbursement, and also the sources of income, I make as part of my remarks extracts from the last annual report of this institution to the Secretary of the Interior:

The amount appropriated by Congress for the coming year, including $8,200 for the law department, is $34,500. The trustees would earnestly request the same amount for the next year, which, with the $1,000 for the library fixtures in the new chapel building, will make $35,500.

The president of the university, who receives $4,000 per year, with the use of a house, was paid from the appropriation	$2,800.00
The secretary, treasurer, and business manager, whose annual salary is $2,000, received from the appropriation	1,800.00
Seven professors in the college, preparatory and normal departments, who receive $1,500 per year each, with use of house, were paid from the appropriation, each, $1,350	9,450.00
Three teachers, who receive $900 per year each, were paid from the appropriation, each, $720	2,160.00
One lady teacher, who is paid $900 per year, received from the appropriation	810.00
One lady teacher, who is paid $1,000 per year, received from the appropriation	900.00
One lady teacher, who receives $600 per year, was paid from the appropriation	480.00
One teacher, who is paid $700 per year, received from the appropriation	630.00
One matron, whose annual salary is $600, was paid from the appropriation	540.00
Four assistant teachers, whose salaries are $500 each per year, were paid from the appropriation an aggregate of	730.00
Four professors in the law department were each paid from the appropriation $800	3,200.00
Total for salaries	23,500.00

The sum of $3,000 appropriated for the manual-training school (industrial department) was expended as follows:

For instruction	$2,420.66
For material	330.59
For fuel	121.75
For janitor and fireman	127.00
Total	3,000.00

The sum of $1,000 appropriated for the repairs of buildings was mostly expended in the repair of tin roofs and decayed woodwork under the same. To this sum there was added $1,564.29, which was used in general repairs where most needed.

The sum of $500 appropriated for the improvement of grounds was used in the construction of a substantial fence along the west side of the campus, on Sixth street.

The sum of $300 appropriated for library books, the $1,000 appropriated for law library, and $200 appropriated for the laboratories of the university, chemicals, apparatus, etc., were used for the purposes indicated.

Gentlemen will bear in mind there are other expenses in the theological department than the pay of the lecturers; for instance, the maintenance of the building, the use of the class room, heating, lighting, repairs, incidental expenses, text-books, and so on, which are all paid out of other funds. Only a few days ago the House, as I said, after a full discussion, ingrafted into the Indian appropriation bill a provision that no money should be paid to any institution in whole or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control. That was adopted after discussion as the deliberate judgment of the House. It was placed in that bill well knowing that the principal society order to be affected by the provision would be Catholic. I ask, in all earnestness, on what possible principle of right could you do that and still appropriate to this institution, which is in part admittedly maintained by the American Missionary Society, a wellk-nown Congregational society, a fact which is stated in the report from which I have already quoted? Is the House prepared to say that they will not make an appropriation for an institution that is controlled in whole or in part by a Catholic society, but will make an appropriation to one that is supported in whole or in part by the Congregational society? Is that the judgment of the members of this body? Is that its sense of fairness and right?

Gentlemen, it is folly and inexcusable cowardice to attempt to evade the issue.

You must meet it fairly and squarely like men. Do not believe for a moment that the generous people of the United States will tolerate any such favoritism as that. When I addressed myself to this proposition in the Indian bill I disclaimed, as I felt in my heart that I had a right to do, any opposition to the Catholic Church as a church. I say to you here now that if there is to be a dollar of appropriation for any sectarian institution, you have no right to withhold like aid to a Catholic institution. Do you say that this institution does good work? I grant it for the sake of argument. Will any man say that excluded Catholic institutions do not also do good work? If he does, he speaks without understanding, for many of them do most excellent work. We voted against aid to Catholic institutions, not because they were not doing good work, but because we recognized it as a fundamental principle of government that we have no right whatever to vote one dollar of money for sectarian purposes.

Ah, gentlemen, I know how easy it is for this insidious process to effect your real purpose. This is truly "the nose of the camel entering the tent." The Catholics, with a craft which excels that of Talleyrand, usually accomplish their purpose by the exercise of brains, and there are not wanting Protestants who, with a lack of perception which is akin to idiocy, allow themselves to be lured by a small bait, as in this instance, to commit themselves to a principle which has in the past taken multiplied millions out of the Treasury of the United States and placed them in the coffers of sectarian institutions.

No, gentlemen, you must place yourselves upon principle. This Howard University was founded about the close of the war. For about sixteen years it prospered. It rested in the bosom and on the heart of the great people of this country, who are quick and zealous to respond to all good work. It prospered until 1880 as it has never prospered since. There had been no thought of Government aid. In 1880, long after the war and after the colored people were already getting on their feet, there came first the appropriation of $10,000. From that small item the appropriation has grown gradually, until this year they receive $34,500. In the aggregate they have received $401,600 since 1880.

I offer as part of my remarks a table furnished me by the president of this university, which gives the details.

Appropriations by Congress for Howard University from July 1, 1879, to June 30, 1896, inclusive.

* Water supply—$3,500 in 1884; $2,000 in 1888. † Fire escapes—$400 in 1889.

From $10,000 it gradually grew until it reached, for the current year, the sum of $34,500, of which over $8,000 went to support a college of the law. Is it claimed, can it be truthfully claimed, there is a pressing necessity for this? What special humanitarian, sentimental need is there in this country for colored lawyers, preachers, doctors, or music teachers? All over this land of ours the schools are as open to the colored boy and the colored girl as they are to the white. In my own town I have seen graduate from our high school and pass on to the university a colored boy by the side of whites in the same class. They can enter any school in all the Northland, and many of the schools of the South. The agricultural colleges are open to them; and only day before yesterday I was informed by one of the trustees of Howard University (Mr. Cook) that his son graduated from the public schools of Washington and entered Yale direct without any further preparation. Do not tell me, then, there has not been fair provision made for the colored boy and the colored girl. Do not tell me that there is any pressing need for high-toned education, free of charge, for these people, when you deny like facilities to your own sisters and your own brothers.

What has been the result of this policy which we have inaugurated? I have in my hand a detailed list of the appropriations by the United States to private sectarian, charitable, and reformatory institutions in the District of Columbia alone, from July 1, 1871, to June 30, 1896. I will make it a part of my remarks.

It illustrates the length to which we have gone in appropriating without authority, and too often without the knowlege, of the people.

* Appropriations for Providence Hospital, 1866 to 1870, and for the Government Hospital for the Insane, 1862 to 1870, are contained in the following table:

	1870-71.	1869-70.	1868-69.	1867-68.	1866-67.	1865-66.	1864-65.	1863-64.	1862-63.

Total for Providence Hospital from 1866 to 1896	$396,000
Total for Government Hospital for the Insane from 1862 to 1896	5,942,706

In this list alone you find $12,122,306, not including the appropriation of $30,000 made to the Little Sisters of the Poor, and not including one cent which has been appropriated to Howard University. It therefore follows that about $13,000,000 has already, in that comparatively brief time, been appropriated in the District of Columbia alone to institutions of the character named. Add the appropriations for sectarian Indian schools, which amount to fully as much, and you have an aggregate of $25,000,000 or $26,000,000 for such purposes. Take the list from year to year and see how they grow, how they swell. There is not a man who ever studied this question for one moment but knows that if you want to dispense that kind of charity you can have all of it that you can pay for. Just say to the people of the United States, "By a considerable use of the teasing process you can obtain money from the public Treasury," and where will you stop? If you say that any person who does good work shall have access to the public Treasury, where will you draw the line? There is absolutely no stopping place. Talk about your sectarian appropriations, you can not draw the line there. There is no real definition of the word sectarian. The word sect applies to a denomination or a school of science, philosophy, politics, or what not. There are a thousand and one different schools. Again, how easy it is, by a skillful use of the incorporation laws, to found societies which, by their charters and by-laws, are absolutely silent on any question of sectarianism. You can do that very easily, and in a roundabout way draw money out of the public Treasury.

Suppose you were to apply that same doctrine to our other public works and were to allow a person or company to light one of these streets in the city of Washington and, if it did good work, appropriate for it, subsidize it. Suppose you allow any person to pave a street, and, if he does a good job of paving, if he suits the people, make him an appropriation to cover the expense of paving. Would you tolerate that for one moment? If you would not tolerate that, tell me what excuse is there for it in any of these educational societies, and especially where they undertake to teach religion. Will anyone say that the president of this institution, who, until he assumed the duties of that office, was a Congregational minister in this city, can teach the Bible as a regular text-book without giving it a Congregational bias?

Here is an institution which is presided over by a lifelong Congregationalist.

The principal professors are Congregationalists. They maintain a theological department, in which the president and principal professors spend a large part of their time.

Special attention is paid to theology.

The institution has for its largest and most liberal patron, excepting only the Government, a Congregational society whose only object is to spread Congregationalism. It is a missionary society.

Missionary work for what? For the Congregational Church. Certainly not for any other church. You may depend on that. It is to the Congregational Church precisely what the Jesuit order is to the Catholic Church. Will any gentleman who values his word deny this? Will you bolt at the name of Jesuit and embrace a Congregational missionary society? If so, what becomes of your opposition to sectarian appropriations? If you oppose aiding an institution in which proselyting is done for a Protestant church, what objection have you to a Catholic priest or the sworn devotee of some Catholic order doing exactly the same thing for that church. There is only one safe ground, and that is to make no appropriations whatever for private institutions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me briefly recount some of the reasons why subsidies should never be tolerated. I think it will be conceded that every objection which can be made to the principle of subsidy as a general one applies with peculiar force wherever religious or political passions or prejudices of the people may be involved. No man can teach politics—should you establish a chair of politics—if he were a Republican, without teaching his pupils Republican doctrines; if he were a Democrat, he would teach the doctrine of the Democracy, and if he were a Populist, he would probably teach that all property, and especially prosperity, is a crime against the laws of God and of man. I oppose subsidies to schools and charitable institutions for many other reasons.

First, because it promotes pauperism by disguising it. Many will go into one of these subsidized institutions and accept aid from the Government, deeming it a matter of right and not a gratuity. They would help themselves rather than accept charity, but will accept a benefit which is offered as a right rather than gain it by work. You should not place a premium upon pauperism. Charity should have a twofold purpose. First, to relieve those who are deserving and really in want; and second, to better the condition of the people and make want less and less in the land. So, I say, whatever disguises pauperism, whatever tends to make it respectable tends as a matter of fact to make people throw themselves prone upon society to take care of them. Whatever teaches the doctrine that the world owes a person a living, owes him an education, owes him medical treatment or care, demoralizes society and works evil. You ought to teach that every man should, by his own unaided force if possible, take care of his own wants. It is true that St. Paul, in one of his epistles, said that each man should bear the burdens of his neighbor, but in the same——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman like some additional time?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Yes; I would like about fifteen minutes.

Mr. EVANS. I have no objection, if the same is granted to the other side.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that debate may be extended to thirty minutes, fifteen minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Nebraska, and fifteen minutes under the control of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time for closing this debate be extended thirty minutes, to be equally divided between the gentleman now on the floor and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I was just stating that St. Paul's doctrine was that we should bear each other's burdens; but side by side with that, and as a part of the same text, he added that each man shall bear his own burden. In that teaching is the true philosophy of all work which is truly charitable. When you place men on their feet and make them do for themselves as much as possible, you elevate them, you make them manly men, you encourage true nobility, you do abiding good. Another bad effect of subsidies is that they produce a duplication of institutions. Once enter upon the policy and it is hard to draw the line. No institution willingly relinquishes it. Suppose you make an appropriation here for this institution, largely because of race; another institution comes up and it claims it on the score of nationality.

We had a heated discussion in this House on the proposition that we should make an appropriation for an institution because it was German. If you make appropriation on that ground, then you will be required to make it in the case of the Scandinavians, in the case of the Italians, and in the case of the Bohemians. There may be among some constituencies voters who may be caught with that kind of chaff, but I trust they are few indeed. I know there are gentlemen in this House who make use of such arguments, and one gentleman who is active in urging this amendment stated in my hearing that in his district there were many colored voters, and this was absolutely necessary for the purpose of cajoling them into his support. I want to say to those gentlemen they place a low estimate upon the colored race, that race which gave to the United States a Frederick Douglass; that race which placed in the halls of this Congress a man during the last session who ought to occupy the same seat now; that race which gave to the present generation a Booker Washington. That race, Mr. Chairman, does not need any cajoling. They do not need coddling. They want their rights, and their rights alone. They want to be treated as men and women, because they are men and women. They ask not the hand of charity. You insult them when you extend it; you depress them when you give it. You seek by that method to retain them in the position in which they were so many years—a servile position; you seek to educate them into barbers, waiters, and bootblacks, a servient instead of a self-asserting people. He is no good friend of the colored race who asks charity at your hands for them.

Another thing. These subsidies should never be tolerated, because in voting against them you are obliged to resist special pressure. If it were proper for me to relate what has occurred in our committee room, I could tell you of men of high position in the United States who, forgetting the places which they occupy, regardless of the duties which they owe to the country, came there as truckling mendicants for the purpose of obtaining little appropriations, because, forsooth, their wives happen to be presidents of some of these institutions, or they themselves happen to be occupying some honorary position with respect to other institutions. It pleases them to occupy the positions, and in turn they use their social and official prestige to secure appropriations. Anything that leads to practices of that kind is vicious and only vicious, and should be cut up by the roots. There ought not to be any favoritism in this House, and when a man comes to a committee, whether it be to the Ways and Means, the Appropriations, or any other, for the purpose of asking a favor at their hands and a discrimination in his own favor, or in favor of some pet institution of his, against the great body of the people, he ought to be shown the door; and I hope the time will come when the American Congress will rise to such a plane as will make such demands upon it impossible.

The habit of appropriating for these institutions does another thing—it dries up the sources of private charity. Take the history of any of these institutions, and you will find that when they are supported by public subsidies private contributions fail. The report from which I have quoted shows that in 1895 this institution which we are considering received but $30 from private sources. An institution which sustained itself prior to 1880 exclusively by private contributions received only $30 in 1895. The same is true in every State and in every community where this practice has prevailed, and in my remarks, with the permission of the House, I will quote from the experience of Pennsylvania and New York on this point.

Mrs. Lowell, prominent in charity work in New York, states that of the 18,900 children supported by charity in New York City 2,700, or one-seventh, are supported in private institutions at private expense (14 per cent of the total expenditure), and that 1,200 are supported at public expense in public institutions. Of the total expenses for all purposes of the 23 institutions caring for the remaining 15,000, 8.8 per cent is contributed by private benevolence. From this it appears that 21 per cent of the expense of caring for dependent children is borne by private benevolence, while 79 per cent is borne by the city.

In Philadelphia, under a different system, the proportion borne by private benevolence is 97 per cent. In New York one institution that received in 1892 $250,000 from the city received from private sources less than $500, and in case of 12 institutions the receipts from private sources were less than 5 per cent of the total expenditure.

Commissioner Bolles, of Pennsylvania, says:

> The State by appropriating so generally is drying up the interest of individuals in organized charities. Our people have acquired great wealth, and their sympathies should be cultivated in every possible manner. The State can never do through its long perfunctory arm acts of mercy with the same degree of kindly interest as individuals who live nearer the scene of relief and who have a more distinct interest in the sufferers.

What is true of these dependents is true of every other branch of charitable relief. It applies with equal force to the support of schools by subsidies. Divided responsibility means no responsibility.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, it destroys usefulness by hampering the institution itself, and reducing it from the high position which every educational and charitable institution ought to maintain, and bringing it down to the low level of partisan politics and traffic with members of legislatures and of Congress for their support.

Every request for subsidy is treated with reference to its probable political effect, or at best as a matter of administrative detail, involving no principle and having no significance as a precedent.

A legislative committee can not investigate; it has no knowledge of the practical workings of the institution. It has neither time nor opportunity to attend to those. It must rely on reports which are largely perfunctory. It is nobody's business to look after or scrutinize the expenditures. Everything is left to those who are interested in a continuance of the appropriations. If we are to appropriate on the score of indigency, then I submit there ought to be some ascertained and certain gauge of indigency and some assurance that the gauge is used. We have nothing.

Mr. Chairman, I see that my time is fast fleeting, and I know of no better way to close my remarks, although I must leave much unsaid which I would gladly say, than to send to the desk and have read an extract from an address made by that splendid man and soldier, General Grant, at a reunion of the Army of the Tennessee, held in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1875.

The extract was read as follows:

> If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, in the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated to their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither the State nor the nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common-school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and the private schools supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the church and the state forever separate.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I shall at the close of this debate ask consent to return to this section and move to strike out the paragraph making this appropriation. If that should meet with objection, I give notice now that I will in the House demand the yeas and nays on the amendment, to the end that the country shall understand exactly by what vote it is sought to reverse the action which has been had in this House on a previous occasion. I feel that I owe that to myself, I owe it to my constituency, I owe it to every gentleman who has participated in the gallant fight that has been made heretofore to place the House of Representatives on the footing of principle and to square our action with our professions.

Public funds should be sacredly devoted to public uses.

We are the trustees of those funds. Let us discharge our duty now as we would require at the hands of one to whom we had confided our private fortunes intended for our own children.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I will say to him that this bill as reported does not carry the item which the sundry civil bill for many years has carried for Howard University. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] moved an amendment yesterday inserting this item with a proviso, which gentlemen will recollect. So that as it stands now, if there can be no reconsideration of this item in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the House as an amendment to the bill with a favoralbe recommendation; and it seems to me that is perhaps as good a shape as the item can be in, because it is a proposition that can be disposed of by the House, or will have to be disposed of by the House, under the rules, and one on which the yeas and nays can be called, and I think perhaps it will be better to have the House deal with it than to try to do something which is not within parliamentary rules.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT], to whom I shall yield fifteen minutes, begins his remarks, I think it well that the amendment should be again reported.

The amendment was again read as above.

Mr. EVANS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], not satisfied with having by his previous course of action defeated one appropriation bill, being mindful of the grave responsibility placed upon him by the people of the United States, and finding that this appropriation for the Howard University had been slipped through during his absence, rushed in yesterday afternoon and obtained, by the indulgence of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, an opportunity to make his speech this morning. It is, sir, somewhat unfortunate that our regular proceedings are interrupted week after week by these discussions of a semireligious character. But as a Democrat, I deem it my duty to raise a voice of protest against the principles enunciated by the gentleman from Nebraska in opposition to education on the one hand and to charity on the other hand.

Let us see what is the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska. That, in the first place, we should make no appropriations for private institutions or in aid of any private institution of learning or of charity; in the second place, that no appropriation should be made by the Congress of the United States in aid of any institution where the Christian religion is taught in any form, or where the inmates are instructed in any of the tenets of Christianity. This is, indeed, sir, a fin de siècle period when we come here not to listen to an apostle of Christianity, but to listen to an advocate for the proscription of every form of the Christian religion. Dominated to a certain extent by his feeling toward the Roman Catholic Church, the gentleman feels bound to-day to attack the cause of the education of that unfortunate race which was liberated and emancipated by the great Lincoln, in whose honor yesterday we appropriated $30,000 for the purchase of the house in which he died. Is that consistency? Is this a consistent theory for the Republican party here, which supported that appropriation which was passed yesterday without a voice of dissent? Having myself objected on the ground of principle to the appropriation of $30,000, I withdrew my objection because I did not want to be placed in an unpatriotic light. Is it consistent, gentlemen, after making that appropriation yesterday, to refuse an appropriation of the sum of $32,000 for the cause of the education of the colored people of this District and the colored people of the United States?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Is it not true that you are personally responsible by your vote for the action of the Appropriations Committee in striking out the appropriation for the Howard University?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Responsible for what?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. By your vote—by your direct affirmative vote?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I make the point that anything which occurred in the committee ought not to be referred to here.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The gentleman from Nebraska has made various statements in regard to what took place in the committee room. He has gone so far as to tell you that gentlemen appeared before that committee who were influenced by improper motives. Now, sir, I have never seen anyone before the Committee on Appropriations whom I should venture to accuse of such an offense. As to my vote at any time in any body, I am responsible for it; but I do not feel that I am at liberty in this Committee of the Whole to reveal the secret deliberations of a committee of the House of which I am a member.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the Roman Catholic Church. I am a Protestant, and in my veins courses no Catholic blood, save that Catholic blood which comes down to all of us, for we must all have been Catholics before the era of the Reformation. So, sir, I am absolutely unbiased. But I plead in behalf of each and every Christian denomination. I do not believe in attacking any Protestant denomination or the Roman Catholic Church, or any Christian creed whatsoever.

Some gentlemen of this House seem to have an idea that no money should be given, that no appropriation should be made to any denominational institution; and they refer vaguely to the Constitution of the United States. Why, sir, the only provision in the Federal Constitution on this subject is that found in the first amendment, which provides—what? Not that you shall not give a dollar of money to an institution because some Christian creed may be taught in it, because some prayer may be offered under the roof of the institution to which the appropriation is made, but that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Now, gentlemen of the committee, in all such speeches as those which have been uttered by the able gentleman from Nebraska what is the dominant spirit? It is against creed; it is against religion; it tends to prohibit the free exercise of religion—to declare that not one dollar shall be given to an institution, however deserving, if any tenet of the Christian religion, be it Protestant or Catholic doctrine, be uttered within the walls of that building. In other words, we are asked here now, at the end of the nineteenth century, to proscribe and denounce Christianity, to couple with each appropriation made a condition precedent that not one dollar of the appropriation shall be available unless Christianity is expelled from the institution. Why, sir, what a terrible doctrine; what a monstrous doctrine for the people of the United States!

But aside from this question, sir, of Christianity and of religion, why should we start out with a proposition that we can give no money to advance the cause of education or the cause of charity? The gentleman from Nebraska takes high ground. He says that in the first place the public money should not be used for a private institution. Let me call the attention of this committee to the fact that day after day, hour after hour, the Congress of the United States appropriates public moneys for private uses—for the benefit of private individuals. Let me call attention, aside from the various pension bills introduced by the gentleman from Nebraska, to the bills introduced by him for the benefit of the militia of Nebraska; that is, a specific appropriation is to be made by the Congress of the United States for the special benefit of the militia of the State—why? Because one of the leaders of our House and the leader of the crusade against religion and education and charity happens to be a distinguished representative here from that State. Let me call attention to this bill.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I hope the gentleman does not mean to misrepresent me.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I never intend to misrepresent anyone; and I do not think the gentleman will accuse me of any such intention. I will allow the gentleman to interrupt me.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The gentleman certainly is mistaken.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In what?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That bill which I introduced was to restore arms and munitions which were destroyed by fire, and which had been used by the National Guard, a part of the militia of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. That is all right. I speak whereof I know—that is, that the same ground of objection applies to the measures you did introduce, and I wish to call attention to some of these bills for the purpose of demonstrating the point. The first is a bill providing for the extension of the dependent pension act of June 27, 1890, to—what? To the militia of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Well, they rendered a public service. They fought against the enemy.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, let us see whether you have not got your bills a little mixed up.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Oh, no. The gentleman from New York, in not observing the Raines law, is doubtless somewhat mixed himself.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, I do not know what the gentleman from Nebraska means by that. If he means to imply by that reference that I have not observed the Raines law, I will be compelled to have his words taken down. I will not allow the gentleman to make such a remark about me, or such an intimation.

Now I ask if the gentleman from Nebraska meant to intimate that I was under the influence of any spiritual intoxicant except the influence of his spiritual speeches? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Well, I did not know what actuated the gentleman. But if he means to ask me the sober question, whether in my judgment he is intoxicated or not, then, of course, I would have to frankly say no.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What, then, did the gentleman mean?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Simply that the gentleman was badly mixed in his statement of facts.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. And that was intended to be humorous, I suppose. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I presume so.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, the first of the bills to which I have referred I will call your attention to, and let us see whether I am accurate or not in that statement. I refer to House bill No. 6722; that is a provision for the extension of the dependent act of 1890 to the officers and privates of the Nebraska militia. In other words, it gives all of them a pension to which they are not entitled under the general law. Is that appropriating the money of the United States for the use of your State? Is that appropriating the money of the United States for a public rather than for a private purpose?

Next we find a bill to reimburse the State of Nebraska for expenses incurred in repelling a threatened invasion by the Sioux Indians in 1890-91. There is a bill that covers some $42,000, to be taken from the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the gentlemen in Nebraska.

Then the next bill is one to reimburse the State of Nebraska for what? Why, for some stores that were destroyed by fire, belonging to the State militia. Is that a Federal purpose? Does that belong to the Congress of the United States?

Of course, Mr. Chairman, I have drawn attention to these several bills; but the bills themselves are now before me on my desk and will verify the correctness of my remarks. The mere titles that I have read indicate their substance. There are many other such bills. I do not know how many of them there are, but the general purpose is to take the public money for private individuals by the gentleman from Nebraska. I am aware, in reference to these matters of appropriation, that he believes in the extension of paternalism and the extension of that form of socialism known as centralization.

He believes we ought to have a national university, I presume, in Washington, but he does not believe in aiding what is practically a national university for the benefit of the colored race, and an institution now existing here. There are special reasons why these people should be treated fairly. They are in a peculiarly helpless condition; the fact that a large number of colored people, amounting to somewhere between 70,000 and 90,000, are in this city should be considered, and the further fact that there is no other institution of knowledge, or university, devoted mainly to the education of the colored race——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask an extension of five minutes longer.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield any of the time allotted to me, as I shall require it all.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask, with great pleasure, that there shall be a further extension of fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to know something as to how that time is going to be divided. I want five or ten minutes myself.

Mr. CANNON. If there is an extension of fifteen minutes on a side there will be no difficulty, I am sure, of the gentleman getting five minutes.

Mr. McRAE. Can I have five minutes of the time if extended?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not control it, but I have no objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he ask an extension of twenty minutes on a side, and the gentleman from Arkansas will then be able to secure five minutes of it.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection. I would like myself to have ten or fifteen minutes on this question.

But I will make the request, Mr. Chairman, and if granted I can accommodate the gentleman with five minutes out of the time, that it be extended for twenty minutes longer on a side, and that I have control of twenty minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] have control of the other twenty minutes.

Mr. EVANS. I have no objection to the extension of the time, but I think the control of it had better be left as the first hour was controlled.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; let it be twenty minutes on a side, to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McRAE. I will not consent unless it is understood that I am to have five minutes.

Mr. EVANS. You may have it. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, and objection has been made to the extension.

Mr. McRAE. With the assurance that the gentleman from Kentucky will give me five minutes I withdraw the objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question which I desire to ask for information?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS. Does the Federal Government own the property of this university?

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] how much time he yields to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. EVANS. I will yield to the gentleman from New York what he asks, five minutes more. That will be all that I can spare.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In answer to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] I will say that I understand that these buildings are now the property of the Federal Government.

Mr. ANDREWS. The Federal Government, then, owns the property of this university?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. So I understand, but I am not a trustee of the institution.

Mr. ANDREWS. Does it have legal control over the university to the extent——

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I do not know; but I will refer the gentleman to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, of course the position of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] is sound, in so far as the proviso is concerned, that this money shall not——

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, my attention has been called to the fact that he was under the impression that the Government owned the buildings of Howard University. I will say that it does not.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Very well. That is neither here nor there.

Mr. Chairman, I was about to remark, when interrupted by the distinguished chairman of the committee, that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] is right in so far as his contention goes that the limitation, that this money shall not be spent by Howard University for any theological instruction, amounts to nothing. All the moneys given to charitable and educational institutions necessarily go into a common fund. They go into a general bank account, and each and every dollar of the money given is appropriated pro rata among all the items of expenditure, in the eye of the law. So of course that proviso is nugatory. It amounts to nothing; but I take the position that it is within our gift and power that we can give the moneys of the United States to any extent and in any form we see fit for the benefit either of education or of charity, and that such are appropriate and wise public uses.

Now, let me direct the attention of the committee to what we did yesterday, and to another item of the sundry civil bill which has escaped the observation of the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] who leads this anti-Christian raid. What is it? In the item for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at the Central Branch at Dayton, Ohio, a specific appropriation is made for the chaplain and for religious instruction. Does that meet with the views of the gentleman from Nebraska? Is not that making a specific appropriation of the moneys of the United States for teaching the tenets of some special Christian denomination? Because you all know that the chaplains of the National Homes belong to one of the Protestant sects and that the religious instruction which they give in the National Homes is the doctrine of the Protestant Church.

Now, I do not object to that. I say that is all right. I say that is a proper use of the public funds; but let us have fair play all around. Let us be just as fair to the Roman Catholic Church as we are to the Protestant Church, and do not let us unanimously pass a bill such as this, making specific appropriations for paying a chaplain and for religious instruction by a Protestant chaplain in the National Home for Soldiers at Dayton, Ohio, and then come in and in the same breath say you must not give one dollar or one penny to any Roman Catholic charitable or educational institution, either within the District of Columbia or anywhere within the United States.

Now, if a proviso were inserted with reference to these institutions to which I now refer, that is, the institutions controlled by Roman Catholic sisterhoods, or by Roman Catholic authorities, a proviso similar to that inserted in reference to the Howard University, that not one dollar should be used for the payment of religious instruction, that would be gladly accepted, because those who teach and those who devote their lives, their time throughout the whole year, to these institutions receive no pay, because they ask no salary. For that reason these Roman Catholic institutions are better able to give the same amount of care, attendance, and maintenance for the least possible sum, and for a lesser sum than that for which it can be given by any other institution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], if he is ready to proceed, or to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], if he is ready to proceed.

Mr. McRAE. Perhaps I ought to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I do not favor the amendment, and it would be more proper for me to accept time from the other side.

Mr. EVANS. All right. I thought the gentleman favored the amendment. If the gentleman from Texas is not ready to proceed, I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee I will try to talk directly to the point in my ten minutes. Howard University was incorporated many years ago. About the year 1880, it being then a full-fledged university and substantially engaged in the education of colored people, situated here in Washington, Congress then, for the first time, under the lead of Representative Monroe of Ohio, appropriated $10,000 to assist that university in its work. From year to year that appropriation has been contributed until the present time, and grown, until this year it is $34,500. It is a complete university, and while white people are not barred out, it is substantially a university for the instruction of colored people. It has a medical, a law, a dental, a literary, a scientific, and a theological chair. When I say university, I mean it is a university in the broad sense.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Has the university a preparatory department?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. It has.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; it has a preparatory department. I had just as well be square—all of us have to be square with each other in this and all other questions. Being a university, it has that which some gentlemen object to (and I may say I would rather it did not have if it has public money to support it), a theological chair, in which theology is taught from the Protestant standpoint.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS. As I understand, the Government does not own any portion of the property of this university; then what legal control, if any, has the Government over the institution?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed in my own way I think I will answer his question. I have only ten minutes' time.

Now, then, it is stated, and I think no doubt truly stated, in the prospectus here that the expense of the theological chair is contributed substantially by the American Missionary Society. That is substantially true. I read from the prospectus and verified it later as to the theological chair. It says it is wholly supported by the funds of a single religious society.

Now, the president of Howard University gets a salary of $4,000 a year. Twenty-eight hundred of that $4,000, he having the supervision over the whole university, is paid from the appropriations made by Congress. A portion of this fund, $6,000, is for repairs of the buildings of the Howard University. So that it may be said in part that the Government appropriates and keeps up the institution, paying the largest part of its funds, although the salaries of those who teach in the theological department are paid from the funds that I spoke of, contributed by the American Missionary Society.

Now, before I speak of the general object of this institution, or of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say that the Committee on Appropriations, by a majority vote, dropped this appropriation, some thinking it was a private institution, and that it ought not to receive Government aid, others objecting from the fact that there was a shadow of aid to the teaching of theology, and thereby joining church and state. Anyhow, the appropriation was not recommended in the bill by the Committee on Appropriations in their report. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] moves an amendment to appropriate thirty-two thousand and some odd hundred dollars, and it is with a proviso that seems to me might well be enlarged, possibly later on in the House, when the House may have a chance to enlarge it, so as to absolutely prohibit the use of any money, in the event the House concurs in the appropriation, for the support of a theological institution or theological instruction. In other words, before the university could utilize the money that might be appropriated they would have to so divorce the theological school that it could not be supported from the public appropriations. It seems to me, if we make this appropriation, that is but just and proper.

Now, then, I am in favor, temporarily, and have been up to this time, and probably shall be for some years, of continuing aid from the national Treasury to Howard University; and for this reason——

Mr. Chairman, there is so much noise around me that I can hardly hear myself talk, and my throat is a little sore.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Gentlemen will cease conversation. Gentlemen in the rear of the seats will retire to the cloakroom or cease conversation.

Mr. CANNON. It is a matter of some importance that we consider.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen in the rear of the seats will please cease conversation.

Mr. CANNON. Our Government is of the people; therefore the people are sovereign and must have both character and knowledge, and therefore we have the common school system, that I believe in.

That is entirely defensible. I will not go further into the argument; gentlemen know upon what ground those institutions stand. In addition to that the new States, when they are organized, receive grants of land for the support of common schools and the founding of universities. I believe in that also. Universities have also been founded in the older States through grants of land made within the last thirty-five years. Now, it has seemed to me that in this capital city of the nation, under the peculiar conditions that prevail here, we might well afford to take this university and assist it from the public Treasury in the education of the colored people of the country. Somebody says, "Why the colored people?"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

On motion of Mr. McMILLIN, by unanimous consent, the time for debate on the pending paragraph was extended twenty minutes; ten minutes on each side.

Mr. CANNON. Gentlemen know the history of the country. A great block of people who are now clothed with sovereign power but a short time ago were slaves, having practically no rights under the law. In the twinkling of an eye their fetters were stricken off, and, without serving a probationary period of a generation or two, they were clothed with full citizenship, with sovereign power. The great mass of them were not competent to its exercise by education, by training, or by practice. They have made progress and they are making progress, and let me say that, in the nature of things, it would be impossible for a servile race suddenly to acquire a full equal status in fact with the race that had dominated it. That must be a matter of growth.

Now, from the standpoint of self-defense on the part of the people who are not colored, when we took in this great block of slaves and made them citizens it was necessary that we should do what we aptly could to make them worthy of citizenship, and the appropriation for this university was originally made to help support this institution, so that the colored people who attended it should receive instruction in the preparatory department, should receive instruction in the law, in the medical, and in the dental departments—should receive a little better instruction than they could get at their homes scattered through the North and the South, where, in many localities, great facilities for instruction do not exist—the appropriation, I say, was made to help this institution, to give those people instruction, so as to enable them to become in their turn instructors. It is the mission of this university to instruct these colored people and make them competent to go out as teachers among the people of their color. It has already, as I understand, borne much good fruit, and I believe that in the future it will bear more good fruit. I do not know whether Booker Washington, of Alabama, ever had training in this university or in any university like unto it, but the function of the university is to train men to do such work as he is doing for his race. One colored man well balanced, well instructed, well intentioned, going out among his fellows, can, by precept, by example, and by association do more to elevate them than 20 white men similarly equipped.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is from that standpoint that I have felt that we ought not to withdraw support from this institution, which has 500 colored people under its guidance and instruction, giving them the training which will make them in turn competent to go out among the 7,000,000 of their race and help to raise them up to the common civilization. But it is said this is a private institution. So it is, and on the broad principle I agree with my friend from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] that the permanent policy of assisting private institutions from the public Treasury ought not to be continued. But here is a private institution already organized which is doing its work well. We have not seen proper here in the capital of the nation to buy the necessary ground and erect a great university and officer it with men employed by the Government. That would be an immensely more expensive way of doing the work, though perhaps it would be the better way; but, pending the determination of that question, in my judgment, the greatest good to the greatest number of the people, black and white, is to be found along the line of letting this university continue its work.

"But," says somebody, "they have got a theological chair, and that is objectionable. You can not sacrifice principle." That is true. They have a theological chair, supported, in fact, by the contributions of the missionary society; but housed in that building which we repair, and presided over, if you please, by Dr. Rankin, the president of the university, whom we, in part, pay. For one, for the reasons I have stated, I am not willing to withhold this appropriation from this institution; but I do stand ready to say that no part of this public money shall be used for the purposes of the theological department of the institution. "But," says somebody, "are you not against religion"? No; I am not against religion; but I am against supporting religion from the public Treasury. That is all; and let me say here, measuring my words, after all the talk about sectarian appropriations out of the public Treasury, after careful examination, so far as I know, this is the only substantially sectarian institution here that has received the public aid. Speaking, in my judgment, advisedly, I make that assertion. So, Mr. Chairman, I believe for the present——

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I understand the gentleman to admit that this is a sectarian institution.

Mr. CANNON. I have admitted broadly that they have a theological chair there; that they teach theology in that university; and I say that, for that and perhaps other reasons, the item was not reported by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill; but when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] comes—and if he had not come somebody else would have come—and moves to restore the appropriation and puts in the proviso that this public money shall not be used directly or indirectly to support in the least degree the theological department of the university, then it is free, in my judgment, from the criticism which is made upon it from that point of view.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Is it not true that even with the proviso to which the gentleman refers this appropriation would simply release other funds from pressure in other directions, and would practically allow the institution more money for theological purposes than it would have without this appropriation? In other words, are we not by the proviso simply beating about the bush?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman's question. I have no objection to any honest religious opinion held or maintained by any Christian that draws the breath of life.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska again rose.

Mr. CANNON. Let me answer your question. I will do so fairly. Mr. Chairman, I have no war—and I know that my friend has not—with any religion (I care not what you call it) that anybody honestly entertains and which makes him better or satisfies his conscience. But I want to be equally frank on another point and say that there is no man anywhere that in his private and his public action has been more consistent than I have in doing whatever was practicable toward keeping apart church and state; and in so far as any support which may be given this institution from the public Treasury can be tortured into support of the theological branch of the institution, I will not vote one cent until by apt provision we have negatived, if you please, the power to apply any part of this money to promoting theological instruction. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] substantially does this; but if there be any doubt on this point I will see that an amendment is moved in the House that will place the matter beyond all possible doubt.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. My friend misapprehended me. If he will notice the statement which he holds in his hand, he will find that the income of this institution is about $57,000——

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Half of which comes from the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Now, as the expenses of the theological department do not amount to $29,000, is it not true that the proviso to which the gentleman refers can cut no figure, can have no practical force whatever, because the appropriation simply relieves the stress upon other funds?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend, so far as that is concerned, that, in my judgment, the withholding of this $32,000 from an income which, with the $32,000, amounts to only $57,000, will practically cripple and destroy the institution.

I have no objection to religion being taught to any of God's creatures. Howard University may teach religion if it wants to. My objection is to the teaching of religion—Protestant or Catholic or pagan—in a theological department at the public expense, and I will see to it before I vote for this appropriation that the amendment is put in such a form that not one cent of the public money thus appropriated can be directly or indirectly used to support a theological school or department in any institution.

Having said that much, I will conclude in a few words. From a standpoint of broad patriotism, in my judgment these 7,000,000 people who are part and parcel of the sovereign power of this country—who were slaves and are now free—many of whom are still ignorant, but who are in process of education, must be helped where help will make them progress. From the standpoint of self-defense for them, and in a far greater degree for the white people of this country, these people are to be encouraged in every effort that leads to industry and true education. I believe that this institution, by thoroughly equipping black men to go forth educated fairly well to instruct other black men in the country who are without instruction and who meet them as social equals, should not be hampered in its work. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS. I had proposed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], whom I do not now see in the Hall. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-five minutes.

Mr. EVANS. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. I do not care to occupy the time.

Mr. EVANS. I yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to take part in this debate, but I have no hesitancy in expressing an opinion as to what the committee should do touching this appropriation. I shall vote for it, coupled with the amendment that will be proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], which is as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used directly or indirectly for the support of the theological department of said university, nor for the support of any sectarian, denominational, or religious instruction therein: And provided further, That no part thereof shall be paid to said university until it shall accord to the Secretary of the Interior, or to his designated agent or agents, authority to visit and inspect such university and to control and supervise the expenditure therein of all moneys paid under this appropriation.

This proviso, Mr. Chairman, will not only entirely and successfully prevent the use of a single dollar of the appropriation for sectarian, denominational, or theological instruction, but it goes further. It puts the instruction under the direct supervision and control, so far as the expenditure of the appropriation is concerned, of the Secretary of the Interior.

Sir, this appropriation has been placed on this bill at each recurring session of Congress since 1880; but to-day and for the first time in its history an objection has been raised against its allowance. Heretofore the appropriation has been in a much more liberal and unrestricted form, but no one—Democrat, Republican, Greenbacker, Populist, or Independent—has ever been heard in the committee room or on this floor, or in the Senate, by speech or by vote, in opposition to it until now. Session after session, for the past sixteen years, this item has appeared, as I have already said, on the sundry civil bill, and it has been read from the Clerk's desk and in the actual presence of members and in the open House, and has been considered in the Committee of the Whole separately and distinctly from every other item in the bill, and has always passed the committees of both Houses, and also both Houses themselves, without a single dissenting voice. And, if I mistake not, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], the leader of the opposition to the appropriation, sat in his seat during both sessions of the last Congress while the item was under consideration and was not heard at any time to raise the slightest objection to its passage. Why this sudden change now? Have members been sitting in their seats all these years with their eyes closed and their ears stopped? Have they—those here at this time, and all of those who have gone out of this House since 1880—been so blind that they could not read this particular item of appropriation, which since that year has always appeared on every sundry civil appropriation bill, and that, too, at the very same place in every bill? Or have they been so deaf that they have not been able to hear the item when read from the Clerk's desk in distinct and audible tones in the Committee of the Whole House as the bill was under consideration? Or have all these Representatives, able, careful, and patriotic as they were, been so dumb that they were not able to make known their objections, if any they had, by voice or by vote? Or, finally, have they been too cowardly to criticise and to denounce such an appropriation, supposing they may have deemed it improper? The RECORD, I repeat, signally fails to show that at any time and on any occasion during sixteen years past any member of either branch of Congress has, until now, in any way criticised or condemned it.

And yet, sir, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], who has suddenly sprung to the front as the strongest and most prominent objector to this particular appropriation, was a member of the last Congress. If it would be wrong to make this provision now, it was quite as wrong to have made it at each regular session of that Congress, for the institution itself has in nowise changed; and yet not a word of objection or of protest was heard to fall from the lips of the gentleman at either session of the last Congress when this item was considered and when he was present, as he is to-day, though certainly in a different frame of mind.

Sir, I do not claim to be the especial champion of the colored people beyond other gentlemen on this floor, but I can fairly claim to possess a somewhat accurate acquaintance with their present condition, and also with their present necessities. I believe that what they most need in the South is good teachers—teachers who possess a thorough knowledge of the elementary and higher branches of education, and who have been so taught as to be able to properly and successfully instruct the children of their race. There are seven millions, or thereabouts, of these people in our country. They are endowed with the rights of citizenship and of suffrage. We appropriate annually large sums of money for the support and maintenance of the military and naval academies, including chaplains therein, to say nothing of the chaplains in the Army and Navy, and the chaplains for the two Houses of Congress; we appropriate also large sums annually for the education of Indian children, for the education of children in Alaska, irrespective of race, and for the higher education in this city of deaf and dumb unfortunates who are to become teachers in deaf and dumb institutions generally throughout the country. Shall we now draw the line on the preparatory education of colored youths which fits them for teaching the children of their own race, simply on the pretext that the rudiments of religion and theology are taught incidentally in connection with the regular branches of scholastic instruction, the funds for the purpose accruing through private contribution? Congress appropriates each year for religious instruction to the Army and to the Navy, and to the two academies and to itself; yet one of the two reasons assigned for the rejection of this item is that the Howard University has a theological chair, which is not in any way, or to any extent, supported by Governmental appropriation, but solely and entirely from private sources and personal contributions. Are not gentlemen straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel? It is no answer to say that our Naval and Military Academies are legally open alike to the white and the colored. Practically they are not, and the whites are the only recipients of instruction in those institutions. Furthermore, we have an agricultural and mechanical college in almost every state, largely endowed through the bounty of the Federal Government, and receiving increasing permanent appropriations every year from the Federal Treasury, in pursuance to the enactment of Congress. These agricultural and mechanical colleges, moreover, are supplied at the Government expense with military instructors detailed from the officers of the Army. Their salaries are paid from appropriations made by Congress. And finally, in addition to these instances of appropriation for education, we annually grant large sums, not only for the education of the Indian, but for the importation and purchase of reindeer for the Alaskan Indians; and this year an appropriation is made, as has been done for several years past, for the physical support and subsistence of the Aleutian Indians on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, in Bering Sea.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, Congress has gone so far as to appropriate largely every year even for the maintenance of a magnificent park in the suburbs of this city for the preservation of the animal species indigenous to this country, and for the indirect education of the people. Congress appropriates likewise every year for the support of the National Museum and for the support of an organized Bureau of Education, all doubtless on the sound philosophy that education in a broad sense is a legitimate object of the concern of a Republic, a proper object of appropriation by the National Legislature, within certain obvious restrictions. With these, and many other educational objects of a kindred character that have received Congressional sanction and support, why should the committee hesitate to adopt this item as heretofore and pass this appropriation? The institution known as Howard University rests upon a corporate existence created by an act of Congress, and it is not under the auspices or control of any religious denomination whatever; and it has practically been for years a part of the school system of the District of Columbia, for whose support annual appropriations are made elsewhere. Since these appropriations began, in 1880, tuition has been free to all who came. Under these circumstances, to my mind, only an extreme and unreasonable hypercriticism can justify or seek to justify an objection to this appropriation of $32,000 toward the maintenance of this institution. Guarded, as the appropriation will be, by the proviso to be submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], the money can not be used for sectarian or church purposes, and, to the extent of the expenditure, it is under complete governmental control. It is open to the colored youth of every State and Territory in the Union; and I am told that there are now twenty students from the State of Texas, though she is among the most distant States from the Federal capital.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like ten minutes longer.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation was inaugurated by the Forty-sixth Congress, by a Democratic House, on the report of a Democratic Committee on Appropriations, of which Gen. J. D. C. Atkins, of Tennessee, was the chairman. This, as I have already said, was in the year 1880, and the appropriation has been continued without interruption or objection from any quarter whatever until this date. I do not think it should be discontinued as long as the institution is properly conducted and no scandal arises in its administration. I have heretofore voted for the appropriation, and during the last Congress, when I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, this bill was in my especial charge. I believed the appropriation to be a proper one then, and I believe it to be a proper one now. It has not been abused in the past, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER] will not urge upon this floor to the contrary. He will not say that a single dollar of the appropriations heretofore made by Congress to assist this institution has been used for the payment of professors for teaching theology. He can not do so. There will be found in the catalogue of the institution a chair of theology——

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I know my friend wants to be entirely fair.

Mr. SAYERS. Entirely so.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The examination of the report of the institution shows that the whole amount of the appropriation is covered into the treasury, and there is no segregation of it at all.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly not.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Then how can the gentleman state that no professor of theology has been paid out of this appropriation?

Mr. SAYERS. But the report shows, as I understand it from the reading by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that the appropriation for the support of the theological chair, or, more properly speaking, the money for its support, comes from an appropriation or donation by some charitable association or society.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I had read to the gentleman already a statement to the effect that there is an equal amount contributed to the college from other sources, and that out of the whole amount there are paid the salaries of the professors of theology. But the gentleman must not forget that the same professors teach other branches.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, that may be, but the amendment which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] will offer will exclude the payment of a single dollar for any theological professor whomsoever, will it not?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Not practically; no. It is covered into their treasury, and a portion of it is used for one purpose and a portion of it for another. We had better be honest about this.

Mr. SAYERS. My understanding is that the gentleman from Nebraska bases his opposition to this appropriation solely upon the fact that it is a private institution?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That includes it all. Of course I base it on the dual fact that it is a private institution, and that it is sectarian. Nobody disputes the proposition that it is sectarian, and that it is private.

Mr. SAYERS. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] prohibits the use of the appropriation for teaching any sectarian doctrine.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The gentleman must know, as a practical man, that he is mistaken about that.

Mr. SAYERS. No; my construction of the amendment is that no portion of the appropriation can be used for the purpose.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. But it releases an equal amount of other moneys and will do it indirectly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is, with other money, which is not public money, they will teach theology.

Mr. SAYERS. If they should wish so to use the money that comes from private sources, let them do so.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas is there any change in the situation now from a few days ago, when the committee, as I understand, by a unanimous vote, excluded this proposition from the bill? Why was it proper, by a unanimous vote in the secrecy of the committee room, to exclude this item, and here in the House now to be so eloquent in its advocacy?

Mr. SAYERS. It was not done by a unanimous vote. It was not done by my vote. I have no hesitancy in saying that. [Applause.] I will not do in the committee room what I hesitate to do in the House. Other gentlemen can speak for themselves as to that matter. As for myself, I voted for the appropriation in the committee room, and it was not stricken out from the sundry civil bill by my vote.

Mr. GROUT. It was by a bare majority that the item was stricken out in the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I stood by the appropriation in the last Congress; and merely because this House is Republican, I shall not now condemn that which I then did, and admit that I did wrong when I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.] If it is wrong to make this appropriation to-day, it was wrong two years ago and one year ago, and it was wrong all the time previous.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TRACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question, and I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRACEY. The question I want to ask is this, and I ask it because I believe the gentleman can give me the information I want——

Mr. SAYERS. I will give it if I can. I will answer the gentleman honestly.

Mr. TRACEY. This being admittedly a private institution in every sense of the word, why should it be singled out for an appropriation of public money in preference to other private institutions doing the same sort of work?

Mr. SAYERS. Well, my friend, I will answer the question.

It is a fair question, and I can answer it at leasats tisfactorily to myself. My answer is, that because of the peculiar condition of the colored people, and their peculiar relation toward the entire country—because they have not the same advantages as the white people [applause], because this institution has been to a great extent, or at least to some extent, supported by the Government ever since 1880, and has become accustomed to rely upon it, and in consequence has opened its doors to all and made its tuition free to all, I do not think it should be stricken down without a moment's warning.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman explain to this House why his reason applies to this institution rather than to the university at Atlanta, which is a colored institution doing the same kind of work and as high grade, or to the Indian schools, which give education to the Indians, who certainly present as equitable considerations as any other class?

Mr. SAYERS. We spend large sums of money for educating the Indians, and is not a colored man as good as an Indian? [Applause.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Certainly; but is it not true that this House has refused appropriations for sectarian schools for the Indians?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman pretends to be the especial friend of the colored race, and I have no doubt, again and again, when he is stumping his district in the State of Nebraska, one of the main points in his argument against the Democratic party was that it did not permit the colored people of the South to have a fair chance. Now let him give them a fair chance here. [Applause.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I want to say to my friend, whatever may be the practice which prevails in Texas, I do not play the demagogue when I am at home, and neither do I here.

Mr. SAYERS. Of course not.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. But I have branded the Democratic party and denounced them because they have robbed the colored man of his rights as a man; and I would be worse than an enemy to them if I undertook to repay by extending charity to them.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I denounce what the gentleman from Nebraska has said in respect to the treatment of the colored people by the South as untrue. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.] Let me inform him as to the manner in which the colored people are treated in my own State. For every dollar that goes out of our State treasury for the education of a white child in our common schools, another dollar goes to a colored child.

Mr. TUCKER. The same in Virginia.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). We have a princely domain set apart in our State for the support of our common free schools, and also a very large investment in interest-bearing bonds. And in addition to these sources of revenue we subject ourselves to an ad valorem tax for the same purpose. To the amount accruing from this tax the colored people contribute but a very small proportion indeed, yet the colored child receives of this fund just as much as the white child—no more and no less.

But this is not all in the matter of education. In very many, if not all, of our incorporated towns and cities we have a system of graded schools, to support which our people subject themselves to an additional tax, and the proceeds of this tax—an ad valorem one—are applied in the fairest possible manner to the education of the children of both races, though the colored people contribute but very little to this tax. For the preparation of young colored men and women for teaching we have a splendid college, supported and maintained by the State. It is true that we do not have mixed schools. To attempt such a policy would be disastrous in the extreme. Sound policy, as well as common humanity, requires that the races, as regards education, should be kept apart; and they will be kept apart, however distasteful that policy may be to those who live elsewhere and know nothing of our peculiar conditions.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to ask one more question.

Mr. SAYERS. I will answer it. But before doing so I wish to say that every charge made here or elsewhere against the people of the South in regard to the manner of their treatment of the colored people—that they do not afford them all the advantages to better their condition in life—is false, in whole or in part.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SAYERS. Not now. I am not yet through with what I desire to say.

Mr. Chairman, in Texas every avocation and trade is open as well to the colored man as to the white man. In the district which I have the honor to represent we have colored ministers and teachers, colored lawyers and physicians; and in the various trades and handicrafts the colored race has its representatives. Colored mechanics find constant and lucrative employment, not only at the hands of their own people, but also by the white people, and in a much larger degree. There is no discrimination whatever against them because of their color. The only question as to a colored workman is, "Can he do, and will he do good work?" If so, he will be employed, and for his labor he will receive good wages. Sir, it is no unusual thing to see the white man and the colored man, side by side, nailing shingles on the same roof or standing together at the same forge. Nowhere in this country does the colored man possess such facilities for intellectual and material advancement as in Texas. Economy, integrity, and industry there, on his part, will insure to him wealth and independence commensurate with his efforts.

Mr. Chairman, the South is the colored man's home; and whatever may be said to the contrary, he knows and feels that the Southern people are his best and his truest friends. If this be not so, why has he not gone elsewhere? Why does he continue to abide among the scenes and memories of his former slavery? He has been free for more than thirty years, and during that time the opportunity for migration to the Western States and Territories has been open to him. Why has he not availed himself of the opportunity? If he has been so robbed by the Southern people as has been alleged by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], why has he continued and remained among his despoilers and oppressors for so many years, when he need travel but a short distance to find a home among those who freed him and who profess to be his best and his truest friends? Why has he not secured for himself a dwelling place in the West or in the Northwest, under the beneficent land system of the General Government? Why has he not hied himself to Nebraska, or to some other new Northwestern State? You, gentlemen, who live in those States, can perhaps answer the question.

Some months before his death, Frederick Douglass was before the Committee on Appropriations of the House asking that provision be made for workshops in Howard University, so that young men might be taught the mechanical arts. He said before the committee that he had but lately returned from Georgia and other Southern States, where he had seen colored carpenters, blacksmiths, and mechanics of every kind doing well whenever they were industrious and economical. He was asked how it was with respect to his race in such avocations in the North. The venerable man bowed his head and replied, in despondent tones, that colored men had but little opportunity to engage in such pursuits in the North. Is this true, gentlemen? Was he, the most famous man of his race on this continent, mistaken, or was he correct? He said that the rules and regulations established and enforced among the trades unions kept the colored man in the background. I know nothing about such matters, and will not assume to speak upon them. Gentlemen who represent Northern constituencies know whether this be true or not. I do not, and therefore do not make the charge.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. SAYERS. Now, the gentleman knows whether that to which I have referred be true or not [laughter]; and if there is a member of this House who will say that it is not true, I would like for him to arise from his seat and deny it.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I do not care to follow you in any excursion in respect to alleged facts as to unions.

Mr. SAYERS. Of course not.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I call your attention to the fact that you based your former argument on the fact that these people had not received fair treatment.

Mr. SAYERS. I say that in the North they do not receive as fair treatment as in the South. We see colored waiters and colored barbers, but not any colored Representatives on this floor from the North.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. You count them out. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he predicated his argument on the fact that the colored people had not been received on an equal footing, that they had been held down, and, therefore, they should have this school. He now makes the argument that in the South, where they live, that they receive equal aid and facilities in acquiring education.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Then, if they do, what is the necessity of giving them this undue advantage, which you do not extend to the whites?

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman call this an undue advantage?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. It is an unequal advantage. I understand you to say that the colored children have the same advantages in your State as the white children have?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; they have exactly the same as to common free schools. Will the gentleman answer this question?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Has a colored boy ever been nominated to the Military or Naval Academy from Nebraska?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Yes, sir; I will. I want to say that in every district in my State appointments to West Point or Annapolis have been determined by competitive examination, where there has been absolutely no distinction made with respect to the color of any competitor. Now, did you ever nominate or appoint a colored boy to one of those institutions?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly not. I never have.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Did you ever know of a Democrat who did?

Mr. SAYERS. I have not done so.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Why not? You claim to be the friend of the colored people.

Mr. SAYERS. I will answer the question; because I believe the white race to be the superior race, and that an appointment to either of the academies would be of no value whatever to a young colored man. Appointments to the Academies should be given only to those who are fitted to accomplish the course successfully and make good officers. So far, whenever attempted, trouble has resulted and no good whatever has accrued to the colored student. It is said that the cadets at these academies would not and did not receive them on equal terms, and therefore their lives there were very unpleasant.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. And yet you say you are the friend of the colored man.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; I claim to be. I am certainly as good a friend to him as is the gentleman from Nebraska. Why should I not be? I have known him and been with him all the years of my life.

Mr. TRACEY. Now, I would like to ask the question I started to ask a few moments ago. Have I the gentleman's permission?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman has.

Mr. TRACEY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information. I do not know very much about this university, having had no opportunity to investigate it. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us of some of the beneficial results that have come to the colored people, as a practical matter, from the operations of the university and the appropriations heretofore made for it?

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman admit that every young man or young woman who is educated at this university and goes out among his or her people to instruct them, and does properly instruct them, is a benefit to the community?

Mr. TRACEY. Certainly; and that is what I want to know about—what the university has done in that way.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, it has instructed many such people and qualified them to go out as teachers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to have a little more time.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is understood that any extension of time that may be given will apply equally to both sides.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended ten minutes.

Mr. EVANS. How will that leave the general question of time, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, this is a request for a special extension of ten minutes for the gentleman from Texas, which would leave the general arrangement for time as it was before.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I hope that fairness will be observed in this matter of extending the time, and that both sides will be treated equally.

Mr. SAYERS (to Mr. HAINER). You can have as much time as you desire. I don't think your cause is advanced by discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy, but if he is correct he ought not to object to my having more time. Mr. Chairman, I desire to modify the request so as to provide that the additional time shall be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no objection to such an arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time for discussion of this question be extended twenty minutes, ten minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas and the other ten by the gentleman from Nebraska. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, much that is irrelevant and somewhat unpleasant has crept into this debate. This I deeply regret. As to the colored race, I have only to say, further, that the section most favorable to their happiness, prosperity, and advancement is the South. He has tried Mexico, and his efforts in that direction have resulted most disastrously to him. He has tried Oklahoma and other portions of the West, and there he has been equally unfortunate. It is in Dixie that he must live and die, and upon the Southern people will devolve the proper solution of this, the greatest problem that confronts the country. The South, and the South alone—if it can be done at all—can and will successfully meet the issue; and this she is attempting to do. Of necessity the process of solution must be slow. But I sincerely believe that, if let alone and uninterfered with by well-meaning but altogether incompetent influences from without, the South will pursue a policy that will be mutually beneficial to the white and colored races.

Speaking for my own State, Mr. Chairman, I can truthfully say that there is not the slightest disposition among her people to do the colored man injustice. They have been willing, and they are now willing, and, in my opinion, they will always be willing, to accord to him every civil right and every political right consistent with his capacity, and at no time will they refuse to him that just recognition which every human being is entitled to have, for every virtue that he may possess. Whenever and wherever and however he may show himself to be economical, industrious, honest, and law abiding, he will be permitted to reap the full reward of such qualities. Every trade, avocation, and profession is open to him in our State under the law, and there is no under-running current of public opinion that will prevent his hopefully entering upon any pursuit which he may desire to follow. In my judgment, safety to both races imperatively demands that the two should, in all matters affecting domestic, educational, and social life, be kept rigidly apart and distinct. This our people are firmly resolved to do. In matters of business the situation should be, and is, different; and along that channel they can and do move together harmoniously and to the mutual benefit of them both. With the right of suffrage equally accorded to both and respected alike by both; in the equal enjoyment of our magnificent common-school system; with the right to adjudicate differences and to redress wrongs upon appeal to the courts equally shared by both, and with the right to sit on juries, when qualified, under a law that is absolutely impartial—under these conditions, I say, the way to further and continued advancement, intellectual, moral, and material, is open and clear to the colored man. Such, Mr. Chairman, is the policy of our State, as determined by her constitution and her laws, sanctioned by the approval of the entire people. Under the operation of such a policy I can not doubt that the colored man can, if he but will, realize the full fruition of his industry, honesty, energy, and economy.

But, Mr. Chairman, returning to the question directly under consideration, I venture to express the opinion that this committee will not be driven by the opposition of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], and of those who concur with him, to refuse this appropriation, which has been annually made with the consent of every Senator and Member present when it has been under consideration in the two Houses of Congress since the year 1880, and thus deprive, without warning, this institution of the customary assistance which has thus far for so many years been given it.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to know whether there are public schools provided for the education of the negro children in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SAYERS. There are such schools.

Mr. BAILEY. But I understand that this is a private institution?

Mr. SAYERS. It may have been a private institution, incorporated as such; but since governmental assistance was first rendered to it in 1880 it has become in a manner public—that is, its tuition has been and now is free to all; and it is required by its act of incorporation to make an annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, exhibiting the several items of expenditure and the objects thereof, and generally the work accomplished by said institution—all of which has heretofore been done, year by year. The effect of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] will be to give to it an additional public character and to make it more responsible to the Government. Whether my contention in this respect be true or not may be seen from the portion of the amendment which I will read:

No part thereof shall be paid to said university until it shall accord to the Secretary of the Interior, or his designated agent or agents, authority to visit and inspect such university, and to control and supervise the expenditure therein of all moneys paid under this appropriation.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with my colleague that it is proper to provide educational facilities for the children of the District; but if educational facilities are already provided at the public schools, then it occurs to me that it may be a valid objection against this appropriation that it goes to a private institution.

Mr. SAYERS. I can only say further, Mr. Chairman, in reply to what has been said by my colleague, that in the city of Washington, and the District of Columbia, and by Congress, this institution has for sixteen years been regarded as a part of the school system of this city and District. It has been regularly appropriated for since 1880, and in consequence of such appropriations its tuition has been made free to the colored youth, not only of this city and District, but also of the States and Territories. By virtue of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], it will be impossible to use a single dollar of the appropriation for sectarian or religious instruction; and further, it will be put under the immediate and direct control of the Secretary of the Interior, to the extent of the aid furnished by the Government. These provisions, it seems to me, should be satisfactory to all who favor appropriations for the education of colored children in the District. I have heard no one object to such appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to consume further time. I am, indeed, obliged to the committee for its indulgence and attention. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I had no desire or intention to participate in this debate until I heard some of the astonishing theories of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. The gentleman from Texas now appears here as a special champion of the colored race. He favors this proposition in order that the colored people may have proper educational advantages. I would like to ask the gentleman if in his own State, in the University of Texas or in the Agricultural College of Texas, colored men born in that State are eligible for membership?

Mr. SAYERS. I will answer that question. I reply frankly no; but the State of Texas supports other institutions for the education of the colored race.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ah, the State of Texas supports other institutions, but institutions of this class, about which the gentleman is so solicitous now, and of which he now appears to assume the championship—such institutions in his own State, as in every other State of the South, exclude colored youth from their benefits. The gentleman tells us here that there is a preeminent necessity for institutions of this kind; that the colored youth receiving higher education should be sent as missionaries among their own people, where one of them would be the equal of many whites in extending the great advantages of education. But in his own State, where he and his party have the power—in other States where they have the power—they refuse to give the colored people these advantages and reserve all efforts of that kind to public debate here, where they can secure the applause of the galleries.

The gentleman indulges in the other extraordinary statement that the people of the South are better friends of the colored people——

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Though it may seem discourteous, I must decline, as I have but ten minutes. The gentleman has forgotten some scenes in this House and some evidences that have been brought before the House bearing on this question—this House, I mean. The people of the South are the better friends of the colored people in securing them their rights! What wrong, then, has been done you if that is true? Let me refer to the proofs in the election cases that have been presented here, where it appeared that you had not only refused education of the better kind to the colored people, but where it was shown that you had robbed them of their civil rights, had refused them the right of suffrage, and, not content with stripping them of their rights, had used the stolen power thus given you here in this House of Representatives. Is it not true that it was shown in an election case here recently that many thousands of the colored people in one of the Alabama districts who had refused to vote, who had refused to be registered, who knew that their power would be rifled from them and prostituted to uses that they did not choose—that those people were registered without their knowledge or consent, that they were seemingly voted without their knowledge and consent, and that those votes were counted in order to give a fraudulent certificate to a man who presented it and added his vote to the political strength of the minority of this House?

Mr. Chairman, I could go on with one proof after another if it were necessary. Sir, another State, illustrating its great solicitude for the colored youth, has recently adopted a constitution—a deliberate act, an act intended not for the day, not for this year, but for time. I find among the provisions of that constitution this:

> Separate schools shall be provided for children of the white and colored races; and no child of either race shall ever be permitted to attend a school of the other race.

There is not, I am told, a single educational institution of the higher class in the South at which the brightest colored youth in all the land is eligible for membership.

Mr. SAYERS, Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina, and others. That is not true.

Mr. HEPBURN. If I am in error I am willing to be corrected.

Mr. OWENS. The State of Kentucky has her normal college for the education of colored youth.

Mr. HEPBURN. With the whites?

Mr. OWENS. No, sir; by themselves.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes; you establish beggarly, "measly" institutions, to which you send persons of the colored race, but your institutions of the better class close their doors to them.

Mr. SAYERS. That is not so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. HEPBURN. In the North, at Harvard, at Yale, at the Michigan University, at the Iowa University, and other institutions, all the doors are thrown wide open and colored people are invited to enter. Yet you tell us that you are the friends of the colored people; that you are their peculiar champions; that you of all men are those who best know what is for their good and are most solicitous to accomplish it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. HEPBURN. I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I call the gentleman's attention to Clark University, Georgia, for colored people——

Mr. HEPBURN. For colored people!

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Sustained equally, by taxation on the whole people, with the State university for the whites. There is no better institution of learning in the United States than the Clark University, supported under the legislation of the State by the common taxes of the people of Georgia. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OWENS. The gentleman from Iowa will allow me to say that Berea College, in Kentucky, is open to both whites and blacks.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it sustained by the State?

Mr. OWENS. No, sir; there are only two institutions sustained by the State, one for the whites and one for the colored people.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Was not Berea College founded by the abolitionists? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word."

Mr. OWENS. What was the gentleman's remark? I did not catch it.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is the first time that I have ever seen gentlemen on the other side assuming to be the champions of the colored race or the champions of Howard University. I commend them, however, for this new departure. I am glad to see that at last their eyes are beginning to be opened and that they see it is necessary for them to do something for this race. Gentlemen tell us that they have, by taxation——

Mr. OWENS. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HEPBURN. I must decline respectfully to be interrupted now.

Mr. OWENS. I am only trying to get on your side of the question, if I can find out what side you are on.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I am not seeking support in that direction, at the expense of my time. [Laughter,]

Gentlemen tell us that they are entitled to special credit because in these Southern States, especially Texas, the white people pay nine-tenths of the taxes. Why, they do not pay it. Your taxation is levied on the property. The property pays it, and you have seen to it that the colored people have not very much chance of getting rich.

Mr. SAYERS. That is not true; not a word of truth in it. You have not been down there. I dispute the statement. What do you know of Texas? [Laughter.] Why such people as my friend do not live in Texas——

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, "I appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober." A little while ago we were told by the gentleman that the white people of the State paid nine-tenths of the taxes——

Mr. SAYERS. Now, if the gentleman will allow me——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remind gentlemen that the speaker can not be interrupted without his permission and consent. I am sure that the members here who are experienced in parliamentary affairs will appreciate the importance of adhering to that rule.

Mr. SAYERS. Just a moment, if the gentleman will permit me. If the gentleman will confine himself exactly within the limits of parliamentary debate of course he will not be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair trusts that gentlemen will observe the rule and not interrupt without consent.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly not.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is the gentleman from Texas through? [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Go on.

Mr. HEPBURN. If I indulged in error it was because of the statement of the gentleman himself. I learned from him this morning that the whites of Texas paid nine-tenths of the taxes, and I assume that that taxation is based on the property in the State as it is everywhere else. But, Mr. Chairman, when it comes to the head tax, the poll tax, the per capita tax, I ask if the colored man does not pay just as much as my friend from Texas—just the same amount?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly, and he should do it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Undoubtedly; I am not quarreling with that; I am only seeking for information. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. The objection I have to my friend is this: That all he wants with the colored man is to get his vote and have him attend political conventions.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, the objection I have to the gentleman from Texas is that he insists on occupying all of my time. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, Oliver Wendell Holmes, the poet of Massachusetts, told the people that they could order up their ascension robes and prepare for the millennium when certain things would occur. I am of the opinion now that every man, woman, and child in the United States of America, particularly those of the colored race, can order up their ascension robes for use on the day of the millennium, which is certainly near at hand. [Laughter.]

According to the statement of my learned friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], the only decent place, the only paradise for the colored people is in the South. It is their paradise; it is their home; the only friends they have in the United States are the Southern people; the only advocates that they have on the floor of this House are the Southern Representatives, elected as Democrats and unjustly accused of depriving black men of their votes. In view of these statements, so earnestly and apparently sincerely made, I am convinced now that the end of the world is near at hand, and we all ought to be ready to put off things earthly and take upon us things spiritual in the unknown land beyond the dark river of death. The day has come when the lion and the lamb shall lie down, nay, have laid down, together in the South, although, privately, I may say I am confident if we had the X rays turned onto the lion we would find that the lamb was inside of the lion, and not pleasantly sleeping by his side. [Loud laughter.]

But what has it to do with the question now before the committee whether or not the Southern people make a "little tin god" of the colored man, or whether or not it is a passport to society in the South or a sure ticket of admission to the best Southern institutions of learning to be a colored man. Why, sir, I had no doubt when listening to the eloquent efforts and the rhetorical periods of my friend from Texas, so fervently were they pressed upon us, that all I needed to-day to obtain entry into the most fashionable and exclusive society of the South, especially in Texas, was to black my face, go down there, and say, "I am Sambo Johnson, from the plantation fields of old Virginia," and all doors would fly open to receive a colored man. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman misapprehended me. He would not be likely to get into the most exclusive society in Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I have not been very well for some time past, and am filled up with medicine, and so did not hear what the gentleman from Texas said, but no doubt it was a good thing, for everything that he says is good.

I have no doubt that from now on when the colored man comes to a Representative here or elsewhere and asks for a home for himself and for his family, and when he in addition says that he seeks education for himself or for his children; when he says, as many of them have said and many more will say, "I was a slave, I have felt upon my back the lash of my master, I feel now the degradation of my position, but, thanks to God, to Lincoln, and the American people, I am free, and I want my children to taste the blessings of that freedom I received so late in life and to obtain that education which every child upon this continent has a right to enjoy"—I have no doubt that we will all unite in one grand acclaim in singing the old plantation song and advising him to leave the cold and snowy fields of the North and go into the rich cotton fields of the South, where only he can find true friends of his race. Then we will further tell him that, thanks to the gentleman from Texas, you and your children will be educated in the best colleges the State of Georgia or the State of Texas can afford. [Applause and laughter.]

Does any one of us believe that? Does the gentleman from Texas or any other gentleman from the South believe that? If they do, then the day of the millennium has come and gone, and we are now living in a different atmosphere from that of humanity or even that of spirits. [Laughter.] No man has any right to expect us to believe it or to accept the roseate-hued picture painted by the gentleman from Texas of the kind and loving care taken of the colored man and his education by the Southern States as being as lovely as it is painted. No man has any right to expect us to believe anything except the facts as we know them, and from a study of them we feel constrained to differ from the verbal sketch of Southern white and black man that has been presented to us. But what has this to do really with the question before us? The question before us is, Shall we appropriate money for a sectarian institution? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to get to the question.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the time of the gentleman from Texas has been repeatedly extended, and I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended five minutes.

Mr. WOODMAN. I should like to know how long this discussion is to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. That is entirely under the control of the committee. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. WOODMAN. I want to call the attention of the House to one thing——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this request for unanimous consent is not in order.

Mr. WOODMAN. It is to explain my position.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the time of the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] be extended five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The question before the House, as I understand it, is whether we shall vote money for sectarian institutions or not, and that is all the question.

I understand, and such was my understanding of his remarks, that my genial friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has admitted squarely and frankly, as he always does when he admits anything, that this is a sectarian institution, and that we therefore are appropriating money for a sectarian institution when we pass this amendment. Hence there is no escape from the sole and only issue of whether we shall appropriate money for the support of a sectarian institution.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish to correct the gentleman in this. I was not present when the chairman of the committee made the admission, if he made it, but as a member of that committee, and having some knowledge of this institution, I do not admit that it is a sectarian institution.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am taking the statement of the chairman of the committee, and I am taking in addition a very little of my own knowledge of the matter, and therefore I reiterate that when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations makes such an admission we must face the matter squarely as being a sectarian appropriation. It looks to me as though we were getting aside entirely from the question when we discuss, as we have been doing for some time, the relations of the South and North to the colored race and spend many minutes in friendly rivalry as to who is and has been their best friend. Let us reserve that for other days and other subjects. I will go as far as any man—I will take my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], who during the twelve years that he has been a member of this House has been known to be always liberal, even to prodigality, with the people's money [laughter]—and I will go as far as he will in spending the money of the people to take care of the colored race, but I will not vote one dollar for any sectarian institution, I do not care what denomination it is, whether it is this, that, or the other. [Applause.] I voted with the majority of this House, some weeks ago, in favor of striking out sectarian appropriations, not because I was opposed to any particular religion, for I am not, nor because I belong to any political society, for I do not, but because I believe in the complete divorcement of church and state. I regard an appropriation to one religious association as equally wrong with any other, and shall and will consistently so vote.

I am opposed to all sectarian appropriations now, just as I was then. The question before us is not whether the colored race are entitled to support at our hands, nor whether the North or the South takes the better care of the colored people, or is more entitled to their support and friendship; but the question is, Shall we appropriate money to carry on a sectarian institution and excuse ourselves for so doing because it is one designed to better the condition by increasing the educational facilities of the colored race? If the question was squarely presented as to whether we should appropriate money to take care of a Government institution for the colored people alone, wherein they could acquire a higher education, I believe it would be carried unanimously. We would all like to favor this amendment; but you ought to take the religious question out of it. You ought not to appropriate money for a colored people's university and permit it to be used for sectarian purposes. The color of the students does not cure the sectarian character of the college.

The proviso in the amendment does not in my judgment cure the evil. It still leaves it a sectarian institution. It still leaves the money liable to be expended for sectarian purposes. It indirectly at least appropriates the money for sectarian purposes. It simply puts it into one fund to be used in one manner; but the character of the university is not changed by the verbiage of the amendment creating the fund.

I care not what religion is taught, I am unalterably opposed to the appropriation of any public money to any sectarian institution.

I do not follow those who make war on only one religion and except all others. They are not true to the noble American doctrine that church and state must be forever divorced in our country; they are mischief makers. The only salutary rule is to oppose giving public money to any and all sectarian institutions. I believe in the doctrine laid down in the constitution of my own State of California, that no public money shall be appropriated for sectarian institutions.

Section 22 of Article IV, constitution of California, contains these words, namely:

And no money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the State treasury for the use or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution not under the exclusive management and control of the State as a State institution, nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the State. * * *

And section 30 of the same Article IV of the constitution of California contains the following words, namely:

Neither the legislature nor any county, city, and county township, school district, or other municipal corporation, shall ever make an appropriation or pay from any public fund whatever, or grant anything to or in aid of any religious sect, church, creed, or sectarian purpose, or help to support or sustain any school, college, university, hospital, or other institution controlled by any religious creed, church, or sectarian denomination whatever; nor shall any grant or donation of personal property or real estate ever be made by the State, or any city, city and county, town, or other municipal corporation for any religious creed, church, or sectarian purpose whatever. * * *

The State reserves the right to grant aid to institutions "for the support and maintenance of minor orphans or half orphans, or abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances," with the condition that the State has the right to inquire at any time into the management of such institutions and that reports shall be made to the legislature and published with the laws at each session.

These are noble words; they express the true doctrine; they voice the sentiment of the people of California. They should be adopted by the people of every State in the Union. They act as a safeguard to the Treasury and a protection from religious zeal, which often runs to bigotry.

We had a long and a hard fight to get that incorporated into our constitution. We carried it by a large majority. We are in favor of it now, and I believe I echo the voice of the people of my State when I say, regardless of the question whether the people of the North employ colored carpenters and the people of the South do not, or vice versa, or whether there is a good school for the colored people in the South or a good school for the colored people in the North—regardless of any and all such facts, I voice the feeling of Californians when I say that they are opposed to sectarian appropriations, and that it makes no difference to them whether you say it is a colored man's religion or a white man's religion you are encouraging, they are both amenable to the objection. [Applause.] It may be that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] thinks this university is like Parson Brownlow said his paper was. I heard Parson Brownlow say that before the war he published the only religious journal that was published south of Mason and Dixon's line, "and God knows," he said, "that it was not pious enough to hurt." [Laughter.] So it may be with the religion of this institution, that it is not enough to hurt; but if it is sectarian at all I am opposed to it, and opposed to the appropriation upon that ground. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

[Mr. MCRAE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a petition signed by every prominent colored pastor and elder in this city, asking Congress to investigate the disbursements of the funds appropriated for Howard University, and charging not only irregularity, but grave offenses against the management of that institution.

Now, if an appropriation for that university is to be made in this bill, I trust that it will not be made available until after this investigation shall have been concluded, so that Congress may have an opportunity to know whether these charges are true or false. I ask that the Clerk read the petition.

The petition was read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 24, 1896.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, citizens of the United States and residents of the District of Columbia, very respectfully represent to your honorable body:

That in view of the frequent statements and charges made to the public to the effect that the administration of affairs at Howard University has been marked in recent years by unjust discriminations, irregularities, and questionable methods in using the funds of said university, to wit:

By unjust methods in dismissing earnest, efficient, and honest members of the faculty for personal reasons;

By improper use of the student's aid fund to debase so-called beneficiaries;

By unwarrantable and extravagant use of university funds in building an additional and unnecessary residence for the president thereof, at a cost of $22,000;

By building an additional and unnecessary chapel at a cost of several thousand dollars at a time when buildings of the university already constructed were in need of repairs, and at a time when the funds for the university demanded the strictest economy in their use;

By the defective methods of instructing and graduating students of the normal and college departments; and

Whereas all these statements and charges were presented in writing to the board of trustees of said university at their semiannual meeting held on January 29, 1896, with a respectful request to them to make an immediate investigation and remedy of the same, all of which they have failed in doing; and the presiding officer, through the public press of January 30, has declared such investigation to be impossible:

Therefore the undersigned most respectfully petition your honorable body to appoint a committee to investigate the present administration of Howard University as to those statements and charges and to recommend such changes in the same, to improve the present conduct of its affairs, and restore to this institution the moral and educational facilities and the material interests and purposes for the benefit of those for whom this institution was originally established, and your petitioners will ever pray.

Eugene A. Johnson, Lincoln Memorial Congregational Church; John H. Collett, presiding elder of the Potomac district African Methodist Episcopal Church; Collin B. Curson, 2150 B street northwest; H. Feb. Doyle, Israel Metropolitan Church, corner First and B streets southwest; J. J. W. Navin, pastor of Saint Paul African Methodist Episcopal Church; James E. Hunt, 2013 Vermont avenue; D. P. Seaton, pastor of Ebenezer African Methodist Episcopal Church, O street; W. H. Chambers, pastor Galbraith African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church; S. A. Lewis, pastor Mount Zion Methodist Episcopal Church, 1412 Twenty-eighth street northwest; R. A. Fisher, pastor; John Wesley, residence 719 Second street northwest; F. G. Barbadoes, 1824 Eleventh street northwest; W. C. Payne, 1521 Twenty-seventh street northwest, secretary E. R. Council; W. Bishop Johnson, pastor Second Baptist Church; J. A. Taylor, pastor Shiloh Baptist Church; George W. Lee, pastor Vermont Avenue Baptist Church; I. V. Bryant, pastor Walker Memorial Baptist Church; James H. Lee, pastor of the Third Baptist Church, northwest; Guy H. Berkley, pastor Mount Bethel Baptist Church of Howardtown, D. C.; Sandy Alexander, pastor First Baptist Church, West Washington, D. C.; William P. Gibbons, pastor Mount Carmel Baptist Church; Rev. Junius I. Loving, 1511 Fourth street northwest; Rev. Edward Hillis, Liberty Baptist Church.

During the reading of the petition the following took place:

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, how does this come before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. It is sent up by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], who desires to have it read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether this comes from the Committee on Appropriations or from the gentleman from Georgia as an individual?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I introduced the petition into the House by request, and I am now having it read as a part of my remarks.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. It does not come from the committee, then?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No; I am responsible for it.

The CHAIRMAN (before the reading of the names attached to the petition had been concluded). The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has expired.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask that my time be extended until those names can be read. That paper is signed by the pastors of twenty different churches of this city, including a number of presiding elders. Among the signers are Baptist ministers, Congregational ministers, and many other ministers of this city.

Mr. SAYERS. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Why did he not submit that paper to the Committee on Appropriations when we had this matter under consideration?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will answer the gentleman. This petition was only handed to me yesterday afternoon. I was asked to introduce it, and I did so, by request. I had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. There has been no meeting of the committee since. I will see that the gentleman has ample opportunity to correct any of those statements, if he wants to do so, in the committee room.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent that the names attached to that petition be read for the information of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, let them be read.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask consent that the names be all printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I withdraw my objection to the reading. I prefer that the names should be read rather than that they should be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the names attached to the petition as already given.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, the sectarian bias given to these discussions should not detract our attention from the central point in the problem. No question which has come before us in connection with this appropriation bill has appealed to my sympathies more strongly and distinctly than the proposition now under consideration. Believing as I do that this modern civilization of ours is very largely the result of Christian culture and higher education, I would turn with pleasure to the support of any constitutional measure that would enlarge the influences that have brought about the benefits that we now realize from the operation of these forces during the centuries of the past. But this is not a question of sentiment. While the proposition appeals to me on the ground of high morals, while it appeals to me on the ground of high intellectual development, I come face to face with the question of public duty and responsibility: Should public funds be appropriated and expended otherwise than for public purposes and through public channels?

It has been conceded in these debates that this institution is distinctively a private institution so far as the Government is concerned. It has been conceded by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the Government does not own any part of the property of the institution. It is also conceded that the Government does not exercise any direct legal control over the institution. Then we are called to pass upon the question of appropriating money out of the public Treasury for an institution which, so far as the Government is concerned, is a private institution. Believing firmly as I do that we are not justified in making appropriations of public money for private purposes, after those funds have been secured by public taxation upon all the people of this country, I do not see my way clear to support this amendment, however strongly it appeals to my sympathies. I gladly note the fact that higher education has always inspired the intellectual activity of the race and has borne the torch of knowledge from Greece to Italy, from Italy to the Continent, from the Continent to the British Island, and from the British Island to the land of American freedom, where it completed the splendid work of the intellectual emancipation of the people.

I also recognize the equally significant fact that Christianity has been the polar star of conscience during the heroic voyage of the race from realms of monarchy and intolerance across the storm-tossed ocean of human passion into the joyful harbor of American freedom.

Together they waged the warfare of popular rights and crowned their victories with civil and religious liberty. Neither could have won without the aid of the other. But, united, they laid here in this, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," the foundation of the American Constitution, reared upon it the best type of civil government the world has ever known. Of course such themes should appeal not simply to our sympathies but also to our highest admiration, to the highest and noblest manhood.

Nevertheless, the proposed appropriation involves merely the question of sworn duty and official responsibility. Then, dismissing the questions of education and religion and their sectarian bearings, and bidding godspeed to every denomination that is unfolding good influences for the elevation of our people in all the different walks and stations of life, are we justified as the representatives of the American people in voting public funds to an institution over which the Government has no control, in which it has no ownership, and for which funds we have no legal right to demand a clear accounting under the shadow of the law and the control of the officers of the Government?

Hence, Mr. Chairman, unless it shall be made plain by those who shall follow in support of this amendment that we are realizing some public benefit which the people who pay the public taxes will admit as a public benefit, I can not support this measure, however strongly I may sympathize with the enterprise, and however commendable the work may be that this institution or like institutions are doing in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the residue of the time to my colleague [Mr. HAINER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has three minutes remaining.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I would like to have the other side exhaust at least a portion of their time.

Mr. EVANS. As I expect to use all the remaining time on this side, I would rather that gentlemen on the other side should get through before I begin.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I think, Mr. Chairman, I have the right to close the debate.

Mr. EVANS. It is my amendment that is under discussion.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. We are not discussing the amendment.

Mr. EVANS. Oh, yes; nothing else. I admit that some gentlemen have not done so. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. In the present status, who has the right to close the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The impression of the Chair is that the gentleman from Nebraska, who opened the debate, has the right to close it.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Then I ask that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] now proceed.

Mr. SAYERS. Before the gentleman from Kentucky begins, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I entered into the debate without any previous expectation of doing so.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask that other gentlemen who have addressed the House may have the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that all gentlemen who have addressed the Committee of the Whole on this subject may have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Before the gentleman from Kentucky proceeds, while I have no doubt he is thoroughly familiar with the whole subject and will very likely call attention to the point I have in view, yet I beg to ask the attention of the committee and his attention to the statement, in the remarks of the gentleman who recently addressed the House, that this institution is not of a public character. I hope he will direct the attention of the committee to the fact that the president of this institution is recognized as the president of a public institution, in so far as the printing of his reports by the Government is concerned—the report he makes to the Secretary of the Interior—and further, in regard to its being a matter of common knowledge on the part of the House that as to the appropriations for this institution the report submitted shows that he is required to make and does make specific statements of the expenditure of the funds appropriated by the Government.

Mr. ANDREWS. Let me ask the gentleman how the president of this institution is appointed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Kentucky will undoubtedly call attention to the official reports of the establishment, and at the same time answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, had I dreamed that the very innocent amendment—as I supposed it to be—which I had the honor—and I esteem it an honor—to submit to the House on yesterday to the pending bill would have raised such a breeze, I do not know but that I should have sought the assistance of some of the older and abler members rather than to have taken upon myself the burden of its support. I had no idea that the hubbub which has been created would have arisen in connection with the amendment. But I am here to defend every word of it, and I may further say that I do not fear the call of the yeas and nays, threatened by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER], because I for one would have insisted, if the opportunity offered, that every member of the House should put himself on record upon the question, and state fairly, fully, and distinctly whether or not he is willing for this House, with its hundred and odd Republican majority, to strike down an appropriation which the Fifty-second and the Fifty-third Congresses, and indeed many previous Congresses, made without hesitation for this institution. [Applause.]

So far from the yeas and nays having any terrors for me, I tell the gentleman that if I can get the requisite assistance of one-fifth of the members of the House, there shall be no escape from the yea-and-nay vote on the question, for I want to know if this appropriation is to be stricken down in the House on a false clamor that it is the extension of Government aid to a sectarian institution. For, Mr. Chairman, that clamor and that statement have no foundation in fact, and I want also to speak in the most emphatic manner on another proposition before I go further into the argument.

There is not a man within the sound of my voice who more earnestly condemns, or who would more earnestly condemn, an appropriation of the public money for sectarian purposes than would myself. I have never voted for such an appropriation, although I understand that some of those who are now opposing the amendment have heretofore done so. For one, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I have never voted for the appropriation of a single dollar of the public money to a sectarian purpose, and so long as I have the right to vote here or elsewhere I shall never do it. Furthermore, I wish to say that I am willing to go still further on that line, and am prepared to vote—if I can not secure it in any other way—for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that will forever forbid such a use of the public funds by Congress; and will go still further and settle the question by forbidding that right to any State or Territory.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Do I understand the gentleman to claim that this university is not under sectarian control?

Mr. EVANS. I do most emphatically. I claim that it is not a sectarian institution in any just sense of the word, so far as this appropriation goes or can go.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. EVANS. Undoubtedly it is right. The opposition to this appropriation, under all the circumstances, is the exaggeration of sensitiveness upon the subject. We ought to discriminate justly and fairly in such cases and not jump to indefensible conclusions.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that no man can be more opposed to the appropriation of moneys for sectarian purposes than I am, and I will state the history of the introduction of this amendment. I have no connection whatever with the Committee on Appropriations. If I were asked to do so, I could not probably name five members of this House who are members of that committee. I know nothing of its business or proceedings except as they are developed in their reports to the House and in the discussions on this floor. But I happened to see in a newspaper that the appropriation for the Howard University was left out of the bill. I at once went, while the bill was under discussion, and got the twenty-eighth volume of the Statutes at Large to see in what part of the bill this appropriation had ordinarily been placed, and I found it just after the clause providing for the Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.

I prepared an amendment specifically appropriating, and in nearly the same terms as was usual, the amount now in the bill, and I went to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and told him of my purpose, and up to the time that the amendment was offered no other member had the slightest idea or knowledge that it was to be offered or that there was any suggestion of such an amendment excepting the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House. I had not time or perhaps inclination to call attention to it. There was no special reason why I should do so, or why I should not have done so; but, at all events, nobody knew it; and when the time came and we had read the bill up to the proper point the amendment was offered and read.

A little manifestation of objection was made, not amounting to a great deal, but evidently there was no need to discuss it—and I never wish to detain the House in discussion if I can help it—and when the time came for a vote it was carried, and I supposed it was satisfactory to everybody. But it did chance that in passing one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations I incidentally said to him, without his having the slightest idea of my object, "Why did you leave out the appropriation for Howard University?" He said, "Oh, there was some objection to it on account of religion," and I at once went and prepared the proviso which appears in the amendment adopted, which I thought was ample to protect the fund appropriated against use by any sort of sectarian or religious agency or for any sort of sectarian or religious purpose.

But if that proviso is not sufficient, if it is inadequate for that purpose, I want it strengthened, so there can be no doubt about its being certain that no part of this money can be devoted in any way, directly or indirectly, to sectarian purposes. With the permission of the House, when an amendment shall be in order, I shall propose this substitute for the proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used, directly or indirectly, for the support of the theological department of said university, nor for the support of any sectarian, denominational, or religious instruction therein: And provided further, That no part thereof shall be paid to said university until it shall accord to the Secretary of the Interior, or to his designated agent or agents, authority to visit and inspect such university, and to control and supervise the expenditure therein of all moneys paid under this appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not detect, and do not now detect, anything sectarian that can possibly be supported or encouraged by this appropriation. So far from that, permit me to say that I looked entirely to other objects and purposes when I was considering this amendment. I considered alone the colored people. If I may so state, the chords of memory, stretching back to the playgrounds of my earliest years and back to the time when, departing from the playground, I, too, much to my benefit in many ways, had to work in the field with 25 or 30 of them, I learned to be an abolitionist, learned then to hate and abhor slavery and all its concomitants so much that the first time I had the right to vote I voted for Abraham Lincoln, although living as I did in the heart of the slave region on the southern border of Kentucky. [Applause.] The second time I had the opportunity to vote I did not prate about my friendship for the colored man and do nothing for him, but I went to the polls and voted to give him the inestimable right of freedom, so far as by my vote I could do it. [Applause.] I say my memory went back to those days when I, living in a slaveholding family as I did, became an abolitionist. And it has always been my idea, not merely to talk on one side or the other, but to endeavor to do something for the colored man.

I remember, too, that this race has been a useful one, that though servile, though once enslaved, it has been most useful in a humble way and place in the development of this country. I remember that it has worked our fields for centuries. I remember that, though humble, it performs a most important function today. I remember that in the time of rebellion the slave, with his patient disposition, the counterpart of which has never been seen in this or any other age, found an army fighting to keep him in bondage, and actually labored peacefully at home to support that army; and I have thought when the Southern people were talking of pensioning anybody in the South that they should at least have granted a form of pension certificate to the colored people in their midst, which would have given to them the free right to vote, and entire exemption from Kuklux or anything of that sort. [Applause.]

I am not saying here that the South mistreats the colored man to-day. I hope his rights are accorded to him. Nor do I say with some of our friends from the South that we are doing everything for the colored man there, but will not do anything for him in the nation at large. I am not here to speak from the political standpoint or to twit the South with this, that, or the other thing in reference to the colored race, and still get up and say that I am afraid to vote away a little public money for the benefit of this race. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a remarkable and exceptional case in every point of view. Hundreds of years ago the slave, against his will, was brought to this country from Africa. By brute force he was compelled for centuries to labor for his master. In the moment of rebellion he was made free. He had labored for centuries; and let me call the attention of my oversensitive friends who fear to make a little appropriation for this school to the fact that, notwithstanding the enthrallment of the colored man, when he came from Africa, notwithstanding his years of lowly useful toil without recompense, when he was made free you turned him loose; and now this little appropriation, doled out from year to year by Congress to this little university, is the only thing that this Government has ever given, as a Government, to the colored race as such for its hundreds of years of unrequited toil. [Applause.]

It is an exceptional instance, and I say if there were nothing else in this case the people of this country owe to the 7,000,000 of the colored race at least this much—that they shall not take from that race the only place, the only thing whereby they get the smallest amount of sustenance from the Federal Government for a most useful public purpose. If expenditures of public money for educational purposes; if the $75,000,000 or more which are annually spent in this country for public schools is justifiable, then there can be no just cause of objection to this, because it all rests on the same principle.

Is there any other 7,000,000 of people belonging to any other class of our community who get and who demand so little from the public Treasury as the colored race? Is there any other race who asks so little, even those who have only gotten here from abroad within a few months and want education or other advantages?

If you take the foreigners who come and who are gladly welcomed to this country, within a few months after that class of men reach here they get more from the Government of the United States than the whole negro population of this country. [Applause.] I say it would be an outrage, in my judgment, if this Republican House in this exceptional instance should strike down this little institution, which can not live without this appropriation, and which has done great good as a means of education for the colored race. I have here a letter from one of the professors of the university addressed to another member of the House, from which I will read only one sentence:

Howard University was established thirty years ago by the National Government especially for the education of colored youth. It is a national institution, 42 States being represented by the students now in attendance. Thirteen hundred have been graduated from all departments; between 500 and 600 students attend annually, and they represent all shades of belief and denominations.

Now, it is for this House to decide. You have as much interest in it as I have. It is not the act of a politician with me; but I speak from the heart when I say that so long as I have known the colored man so long have I known him to be a fairly good citizen with the best lights before him. I am willing that the Government of the United States should dole out this little appropriation of some $30,000 for the benefit, not of any church or creed, but of 7,000,000 of our population whom we held in bondage for a hundred years or more, and to whom we have given as a nation very little return for what benefit they did this country as laborers during that period, and who now, at least, should be accorded this much educational opportunity. It is something unexampled in history for 7,000,000 of negro slaves to be set free without education, helpless as babes politically, to be turned loose, and then to be refused this little appropriation upon the miserable pretext that it is for sectarian advancement, and upon that ground gentlemen would take away from these people that little pittance. If I thought this House would do that, I would go home a sadder man than I expect to be when we adjourn. If I thought this House would do such an injustice, or would be misled into supposing that a principle with the abstract justice of which I fully agree applied to this institution, I say I should be greatly shocked.

What is this amendment? I find that for sixteen years appropriations in some form or another have been made for this institution. The items making up the aggregate sum are separated. The first is:

For maintenance of the Howard University, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other employees of the university, the balance of which will be paid from the donations and other sources, $27,500.

For tools, materials, wages of instructors, and other necessary expenses of industrial department, $3,000.

And yet I am afraid some gentlemen may find something sectarian in that item!

For books for library, law library, bookcases, shelving, and fixtures, $900.

There is nothing sectarian in that. And then, after the other items, comes the proviso:

That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any teacher or professor of theology or religion or to any chaplain in said university.

I believe the proviso is in apt language to prevent any perversion of this fund to sectarian uses. If it is not, I am willing to make it stronger. I am willing that this House shall make it as strong as the most strenuous opponent of sectarian appropriations (and I am one) could desire. Let us not reject the amendment upon the misconception that it is sectarian; but let us leave it for the purpose we have in view, of doing something for this institution. It has been assisted in this way for sixteen years, upon the faith that this would continue. Nearly 500 pupils are now there. If we think the time is approaching to stop the custom of making this appropriation, let us give timely notice a few years in advance, and see if by extraordinary exertions the benevolently inclined can supply the deficit. [Loud applause].

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this question has taken a wide range. The advocates of this appropriation have ingeniously sought an appeal to sentiment rather than principle. The practical facts involved have almost, I am afraid, been lost sight of. I wish, therefore, in closing to recall the attention of the committee to them. Thus far no person has disputed any proposition of fact which I laid down. This is a private institution. Its property is owned exclusively by the corporation, which was founded more than thirty years ago. The Government has absolutely no right to determine who shall enter that institution, how long a student or professor shall remain there, or when he shall be dismissed. The Government has absolutely no right whatever to control that institution in its operations. Its entire control is vested in the faculty and the board of trustees.

It is, therefore, a private institution. In fact, it was admitted by the president of the institution itself, in the hearing before the committee, that the Government has absolutely nothing to do with it except to make this appropriation. It is also a sectarian institution, for reasons which I have explained, and that is not denied. Even the chairman of the committee practically admits it. It is absolutely impossible for any person belonging to a particular church to teach theology without teaching the doctrines of that particular church. It is not worth while to mince matters. The facts are as they are. If this is not a sectarian institution none can be found. The gentleman who has just concluded urges this as an exceptional case; that we should give exceptional benefits to this class because they have so long been downtrodden. No other reason has been suggested. These people do not need any exceptional treatment; and they ought not to have it. They have no right to insist upon it. What they need, what justice demands, and what the cause of education demands, is that in all parts of this Union, North and South, and East and West, they shall be put upon the same platform and the same standing as any others. They are human beings, brothers and sisters of the gentleman from Texas and myself, and they should be treated as such. Give to them the same advantages and the same benefits that you ask for yourselves and your children, and then all will be well. But do not deal out charity to them instead of justice.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, from the beginning of the consideration of this bill until its conclusion the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at every step has felt bound to oppose appropriations for useful, beneficial, and proper objects, for the sole reason that there was no money in the Treasury out of which to pay such appropriations. Let gentlemen who propose to vote for this appropriation go home and say to their constituents, "We could not have those things which are legitimately demanded by the public interest; we could not take care of the maimed soldier; we could not establish a national university for all the people; we had no money for that; but we could vote an appropriation for the higher education, as it is technically called, of a favored few in the District of Columbia."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LEWIS. The question I wanted to ask the gentleman from Nebraska was whether he would be willing to go into slavery for two hundred years and then take his chance afterward of catching up and getting even?

The CHAIRMAN. The time limited for this debate has expired.

Mr. CANNON. As the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] was adopted by the Committee of the Whole, there will be, of course, a vote on it in the House in a few minutes. But before I move that the committee rise I wish to ask unanimous con——

Mr. SAYERS. Before that is done allow me a single word. During this debate a paper was read, which will appear in the RECORD, reflecting upon the character of the institution which has been under discussion. This is the first time I ever heard of that paper. One of the pages has just brought me a communication on the subject, which I ask to have read, so that it may appear in the RECORD along with the statement already read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks the privilege of having read a communication which he sends to the desk. Is there objection?

Mr. SAYERS. I have just received it. I know nothing about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

GOVERNOR SAYERS:

The paper presented by Mr. LIVINGSTON of Georgia was inspired by one Prof. James M. Gregory, who was dismissed from the university for borrowing money from the students and others and refusing to pay the same. The same individual was several years ago appointed a trustee of the public schools of the District of Columbia, and was dismissed by the District Commissioners for selling teacherships in the public colored schools. I myself aided in bringing this dishonest practice to the attention of the Commissioners.

DANIEL MURRAY.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 67 of the bill for the purpose of offering the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the amendment offered by Mr. HYDE, insert, after line 19, page 67, as a separate paragraph, the following:

"For beginning the construction of permanent buildings, providing for sewerage, water supply, roads, and other means of communication and other necessary improvements, at the military post at Spokane, Wash., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $50,000.

"To continue construction of buildings at the Fort Riley (Kans.) military post, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the amendment just read be adopted in lieu of the amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HYDE] and adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TERRY. What is the total amount which this amendment proposes to give to the Secretary of War for these purposes?

Mr. CANNON. This leaves the amount for general purposes the same as in the bill—$300,000 for the construction of buildings and enlarging military posts.

Mr. TERRY. Do you take $100,000 off that and give it to the two places named?

Mr. CANNON. No. I think the $300,000 should not be disturbed. But yesterday an amendment was adopted taking $75,000 of that amount for the construction of a new post at Spokane.

Mr. TERRY. This does not break in on the $300,000?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir. This inserts the two $50,000 items, and it leaves the general appropriation intact.

There being no objection, the amendment offered by Mr. CANNON was adopted.

Mr. CANNON. There is one other matter in connection with this bill which has been left undisposed of—the paragraphs relating to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], I believe, desires to move an amendment to those provisions.

Mr. BINGHAM. If I am in order, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Revised Statutes," line 13, page 17, insert:

"Provided, That on and after the 1st day of January, 1897, no postage stamps shall be manufactured or furnished by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; but said stamps shall be procured by the Post-Office Department as formerly, under the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring such work to be given out upon competitive bidding, after public advertisement for proposals."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment. It is new legislation; and were it not, that it should appear on the Post-Office appropriation instead of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order?

Mr. SAYERS. I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether we had better settle the point of order now or does he prefer to have it reserved?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am perfectly willing that it shall be reserved until I have made a statement to the committee in connection with the amendment, to which I wish to call their special attention.

Mr. SAYERS I shall agree, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order be allowed to stand until the gentleman from Pennsylvania gets through with his remarks.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in October, 1893, when the then pending contract for the supply of adhesive postage stamps was about to expire, the Postmaster-General, in compliance with law (section 3709, Revised Statutes of the United States), published an advertisement inviting sealed proposals for furnishing stamps, such proposals to be received on or before November 15, 1893, and upon the receipt and opening of the proposals the bidders and the amounts of their respective bids, based upon the actual issue of postage stamps for the year ended June 30, 1893, were found to be as follows:

First. The Hamilton Bank Note Company, of New York, $179,-294.

Second. The American Bank Note Company, of New York, $162,401.51.

Third. Charles F. Steele, of Philadelphia, Pa., $146,454.71.

On the 20th of November, 1893, five days after the receipt and public opening of the foregoing bids, submitted in compliance with law, the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing submitted to the Postmaster-General an offer to furnish the stamps called for by the advertisement for the sum of $139,487.52. The bid of the Bureau, it will be observed, was at only a comparatively small figure below that of Mr. Steele, of Philadelphia, who is my constituent.

Protests were made by the other bidders against the acceptance of the Bureau bid, on the ground that it was in violation of law; that it was unjust to private bidders, who had already exposed their figures; that it was contrary to the established policy of the Government to do work which could be as well if not better done by private enterprise, and that it would be found that the stamps, if produced by the Government, would cost much more than if furnished under the offers of the private bidders. These protests were disregarded upon no higher authority, upon the legal question involved, than that of the Solicitor of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury having refused the request of the private bidders to have the question appealed to the Attorney-General of the United States for opinion, and the contract was awarded to the Bureau by the Postmaster-General.

The claim of the Bureau was that its offer would fully cover the entire cost of producing the stamps, and that it would entail no additional expense upon the Government for furnishing the same. The Bureau also claimed to have abundant facilities for doing the work, and to be able to do it as well as it was then being done under existing contract.

The offer of the Bureau to undertake this additional work was made, as above stated, on the 20th of November, 1893, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, submitted under date of November 1, 1893, twenty days previous to the date of the Bureau bid for postage stamps, made the following statement with regard to the inability of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to comply with the requirements of the Internal Revenue Bureau, namely:

STOCK OF STAMPS IN VAULT.

The present stock of stamps in the vaults of this Bureau does not come up to the requirements of the statute, and is inadequate to meet the demands of the service. It is estimated that the three months' supply which the statute requires to be in the vault should be 263,208,000 stamps of the various classes and denominations. The stock on hand in the vault at the present time is only 108,704,844 stamps of all denominations. The inability to maintain the stock at the statutory requirement is due to the failure of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to fill the orders from this Bureau as called for. There are now due from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing on past orders 106,370,100 stamps, and orders for the November delivery amount to 78,940,000 stamps.

It may be well to add here that statements similar to the foregoing were made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his subsequent reports for the fiscal years 1894 and 1895. Thus it would appear that the Bureau at the time of bidding for the contract for furnishing postage stamps was not able to do the work without detriment to its regular business, and that it has continued up to the present time to furnish the stamps at the expense of its regular work.

The prices to be paid to the Bureau by the Post-Office Department for furnishing the stamps were as follows:

First. For ordinary postage stamps, 5 cents per 1,000.
Second. Newspaper and periodical stamps, 11.40 cents per 1,000.
Third. Postage due stamps, 6.05 cents per 1,000.
Fourth. Special-delivery stamps, 11.40 cents per 1,000.

In his report for 1894 the Chief of the Bureau in referring to the manufacture by his Bureau of postage stamps stated that—

As the estimates of this (his) Bureau for the first year of this contract included the cost of new machinery amounting to something over $40,000, an item of expense connected with the work which will not appear in subsequent years, it is safe to predict an annual saving to the Government of over $50,000.

How absurd this claim was will appear hereafter in the light of actual results for the first year of the contract.

The Bureau contract was to begin on the 1st of July, 1894, but not being ready at that time to comply with its agreement about 650,000,000 stamps, equal to about three months' supply, were purchased by the Post-Office Department from the old contractors and paid for out of the appropriation for the year ended June 30, 1894. These stamps were turned over to the Bureau for issue to postmasters on and after July 1, 1894.

The following statistics, compiled from the official records, will show how far the Chief of the Bureau has failed to carry out his agreement to produce postage stamps at the price at which he agreed to furnish them to the Post-Office Department.

EXHIBITS OF BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING FOR 1894 AND 1895.

At the last session of the Fifty-third Congress the Chief of the Bureau was called upon to show the results of his work in connection with the production of postage stamps up to and inclusive of December 31, 1894. The exhibits made were in short as follows (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 25, 1895, pages 1505 to 1517), namely:

1. Number of stamps originally printed to December 31, 1894	1,488,886,200
2. Number of stamps originally printed but unfit for use	733,615,037
Balance acceptable stamps produced	755,271,163
	Per cent.
Proportion of spoiled work	42.5
Proportion of acceptable work	57.5
Cost of above as given by Chief of Bureau, namely:
Wetting	$1,070.62
Plate printing	35,318.24
Examining	4,404.82
Gumming and perforating	22,865.94
Packing and issuing	4,860.20
Running machinery	2,877.18
Miscellaneous expenses	1,213.72
Total cost	72,610.72

This amount is equal to about 9¼ cents per thousand for the 755,271,163 acceptable stamps produced to December 31, 1894. The foregoing statement, it will be observed, does not include the cost of the plant nor of the material entering into the manufacture of the stamps. It also allows nothing for the use of the building, heat, light, etc. The price paid by the Post-Office Department for the stamps was 5 cents per thousand for the acceptable stamps and nothing for the spoiled stamps.

The so-called acceptable stamps were really not fit for use, and they were used only under the spur of necessity. Their bad quality was freely commented upon by the public press throughout the entire country, and generally by people who were compelled to purchase and use them in payment of postages.

In face of the foregoing exhibits the Chief of the Bureau, in December, 1894, insisted over and over again before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations (see pages 35 to 42 of Hearings before subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations in charge of sundry civil appropriation bill for 1896) that the money to be received from the Post-Office Department for the stamps to be furnished during the year ended June 30, 1895, would fully cover not only the cost of manufacturing the same, but also the cost of the plant to produce stamps, then estimated at about $50,000.

STAMPS FURNISHED BY BUREAU, YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1895.

Total number of stamps of Bureau manufacture delivered to Post-Office Department, year ended June 30, 1895, as shown by report of Chief of Bureau for that year (Tables Nos. 4 and 5, page 13, Report of Chief of Bureau of Engraving and Printing for fiscal year ended June 30, 1895)	2,180,229,948
Number of acceptable stamps produced to December 31, 1894, as previously shown	755,271,163
Balance to complete deliveries from January 1 to June 30, 1895	1,424,958,785
Amount finally received from Post-Office Department for 2,180,229,948 stamps delivered year ended June 30, 1895	$107,699.78
Expended to December 31, 1894, for 755,271,163 acceptable stamps produced to that date	72,610.72
Balance remaining to cover cost of manufacture of 1,414,958,755 stamps required from January 1 to June 30, 1895, and to pay cost of plant, finally given by Chief of Bureau at $56,243	35,089.06

What an absurd claim to make to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives in the light of such results!

The Chief of the Bureau was called upon early in January, 1896, by letter from myself, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures of the Post-Office Department, to furnish a statement of the number and cost of the stamps produced for the year ended June 30, 1895, in detail of items as above; but up to the present time he has made no reply to that letter, although requested by me to do so, both orally and in writing.

It is only proper to call attention here to the fact that there is a very serious discrepancy between the number of postage stamps issued during the year ended June 30, 1895, as reported by the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and as reported by the Post-Office Department, the number shown in the Bureau report being considerably larger than that shown by the report of the Post-Office Department. Under a proper system of accountability there should not be a difference of so much as a single stamp between the reports of the two Departments.

The utter absurdity of the claim of the Bureau as above, and the fact that its annual appropriations were very largely drawn upon to cover the cost of producing the stamps over and above the price paid for the same by the Post-Office Department, will be readily apparent from an examination of the figures of the Bureau with regard to its work chargeable to annual appropriations.

First, as to—

ESTIMATES AND RESULTS FOR THE YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1895, COMPARED.

See Table No. 1, herewith.

Number of sheets of work to be produced, year ended June 30, 1895, payable out of annual appropriations (see letter of Chief of Bureau, dated October 16, 1893, page 323, Book of Estimates for 1895, Executive Document No. 5, Fifty-third Congress, second session)	52,340,285
Number of sheets actually produced during 1895, chargeable to annual appropriations, as shown by report of Chief of Bureau for that year (see Table No. 2, herewith)	44,711,351
Deficiency in number of sheets produced from number called for by estimates	7,628,834
Or 14.6 per cent.

ESTIMATED COST OF ABOVE.

Estimated cost of 52,340,285 sheets for 1895, for which appropriations were asked by the Chief of the Bureau in Book of Estimates, as above, namely:

1. Compensation of employees		$419,800.00
2. Plate printing		495,400.00
3. Materials and miscellaneous expenses		196,200.00
		1,111,400.00
4. Add salaries estimated for in legislative bill		17,450.00
Total estimates		1,128,850.00
Average cost per 1,000 sheets		21.57

Appropriations were made in pursuance of the foregoing estimates as follows:

1. Compensation of employees:
Sundry civil act August 18, 1894	$378,000
Deficiency act March 2, 1895	41,800
		$419,800.00
2. Plate printing:
Sundry civil act August 18, 1894	469,000
Deficiency act March 2, 1895	26,400
		495,400.00
3. Materials and miscellaneous expenses:
Sundry civil act August 18, 1894	181,000
Deficiency act March 2, 1895	15,200
		196,200.00
		1,111,400.00
4. Add salaries appropriated for in legislative act		17,450.00
Total appropriations as finally made, agreeing with original estimates of the Chief of Bureau in Book of Estimates above referred to		1,128,850.00
Amount expended out of foregoing appropriations for production of 44,711,351 sheets, as shown by Chief of Bureau was		1,127,946.12
Leaving unexpended balance of		903.88
Average cost per 1,000 sheets of the 44,711,351 sheets actually produced		25.23
Estimated cost per 1,000 sheets of work to be produced in 1895, as shown above, was		21.57
Excess per 1,000 sheets of actual overestimated cost, therefore, was		3.66
Amounting on the 44,711,351 sheets actually produced in 1895 to		163,643.54

On the 11th of February, 1895, the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations in charge of the general deficiency bill for 1895 and prior years (see pages 72–74 of Hearings before Subcommittee, etc.) to explain his reasons for asking for deficiency appropriations sufficient to meet the amount of the reduction of his estimates as made by the sundry civil act of August 18, 1894, for the service of the year 1895. He then stated that his original "estimates were made carefully and down to the lowest figure at which they could be made," and that "the cost of the work is just what the estimates are." In his letter to the subcommittee of the same date he stated that "the number of impressions estimated to be produced in 1895 is substantially the same as was produced in 1894."

Estimated when? In his original estimates of October 16, 1893, for the year 1895, or at the time he wrote the subcommittee on appropriations, on the 11th of February, 1895?

Now, it has already been stated that the number of sheets produced out of annual appropriations in 1895 was 44,711,351, and it will be shown presently that this was 7,894,610, or 15 per cent, less than the number (52,605,961 sheets) produced out of annual appropriations in 1894, as shown by the reports of the Chief of the Bureau. Was the Chief of the Bureau intentionally deceiving the committee, or was he in ignorance of the fact, when nearly two-thirds of the fiscal year 1895 had gone by, that the year's product would show a falling off of 15 per cent, or about one-seventh, from the number produced in 1894? Either horn of the dilemma is bad enough.

Be that as it may, by his urgent appeals to the committee on the deficiency appropriation bill the Chief of the Bureau got all the money for the year 1895 he originally asked for, and he spent it all except the insignificant sum of less than $1,000. He represented to the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill that he was making economies in various directions; that he had reduced the wages of printers engaged on internal-revenue stamps at the rate of about $23,000 per annum, amounting from the date of the reduction to the close of the fiscal year 1895 to about $11,000, and that the cost of material was much less than it had been during the previous year. The undeniable fact was that he was obliged to skin his annual appropriations in every direction to meet the extra expenditure involved in the production of postage stamps over and above the amount which he was paid for the same by the Post-Office Department, and even then he came out barely ahead.

The Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing having claimed before the subcommittee on the deficiency bill for 1895, as already mentioned, that the number of sheets of work payable out of annual appropriations for 1895 would be as great as that produced out of the corresponding appropriations for 1894, let us now examine the actual results for both of said years, as shown by his reports, to see how far his claim was sustained. The figures in detail for both years, as taken from his annual reports for the same, will be found in table marked No. 2, herewith, compiled from the Bureau reports, to which attention is invited. The exhibits are as follows:

NUMBER OF SHEETS OF WORK PRODUCED OUT OF ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS IN 1894 AND 1895 COMPARED.

Total number of sheets produced year ended June 30, 1894, payable out of annual appropriations	52,605,961
Total number of sheets produced year ended June 30, 1895, payable out of annual appropriations	44,711,351
Decrease for 1895 as compared to 1894	7,894,610
Or 15 per cent.

These results are not open to the allegation that the work produced in 1895 was generally of a more expensive character than that produced in 1894, but the fact is that the work of 1895 was as a whole of a cheaper grade than that of 1894, as an analysis of the figures will prove. Aside from United States and other bonds, the most expensive work involved was that under the head of "United States notes and certificates," together with that on "national currency," the cost of which several kinds would average about the same for like quantities.

Number of sheets of United States notes of 1890, silver certificates of 1891, currency certificates of 1875, and national currency produced in 1894	13,776,124
Number of sheets of United States notes of 1890, silver certificates of 1891, currency certificates of 1875, and national currency produced in 1895	11,721,158
Decrease for 1895 as compared to 1894	2,054,966
Or 14.2 per cent.

So much for the foregoing, and now for all the remaining work (except United States and other bonds), which is generally of the same character, namely:

Number of sheets of United States internal-revenue stamps, custom stamps, checks, drafts, certificates, etc., and certificates of indebtedness for Cherokee Indians produced in 1894	38,736,251
Number of sheets of United States internal-revenue stamps, custom stamps, checks, drafts, certificates, etc., and certificates of indebtedness for Cherokee Indians produced in 1895	32,803,043
Decrease for 1895 as compared to 1894	5,933,208
Or 15.3 per cent.
Number of sheets of United States bonds, District of Columbia bonds, and Pacific Railroad bonds produced in 1894	93,586
Number of sheets of United States bonds, District of Columbia bonds, and Pacific Railroad bonds produced in 1895	187,150
Increase for 1895 as compared to 1894	93,564
Or nearly 100 per cent.

INTERNAL-REVENUE STAMPS PRODUCED IN 1894 AND 1895 SEPARATELY COMPARED.

By far the largest number of sheets of any single class of work done, very nearly three-fourths of the whole, is that of internal-revenue stamps, and these stamps are accordingly worthy of par, ticular notice, especially as the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has not been able during the past two years or more to meet the demand of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, or to enable it to comply with the law governing the supply of stamps to be kept on hand. The exhibit for the years 1894 and 1895, as appearing from the reports of the Chief of the Bureau for said years, is as follows:

Number of sheets of internal-revenue stamps produced year ended June 30, 1894	37,097,706
Number of sheets of internal-revenue stamps produced year ended June 30, 1895	31,545,838
Decrease for 1895 as compared to 1894	5,551,868
Or 15 per cent.
	Per cent.
Proportionate number of sheets to total number of sheets produced out of annual appropriations in 1894	70.5
Proportionate number of sheets to total number of sheets produced out of annual appropriations in 1895	70.6

Upon a close examination of the product of 1894 and 1895 by classes it will be found that the proportion of the more expensive stamps to the whole number was greater in 1894 than it was in 1895. Thus the total number of stamps produced in 1894 was 1,060,270,374, and this was an average of 28.58 stamps per sheet.

The total number of stamps produced in 1895 was 1,016,550,112, and this was an average of 32.22 stamps per sheet. The average number of stamps per sheet was, therefore, 3.64 greater in 1895 than in 1894.

The larger and more expensive stamps—those containing from one to five stamps per sheet—are put up in volumes, making an additional expense for this work. The number of volumes in 1894 was 90,818, containing 5,057,800 stamps, and the number of volumes in 1895 was only 64,728, containing 3,741,480 stamps. This was a decrease for 1895 as compared to 1894 of 26,090, or 29.8 per cent, in the number of volumes, and of 1,316,320, or 26 per cent, in the number of stamps put up in volumes. The decrease in the total number of sheets of internal-revenue stamps, in volumes and not in volumes, it will be remembered, was at the rate of 15.3 per cent.

Thus it is conclusively proved that an unduly large share of the falling off in the total number of sheets for 1895 consisted of the larger sized and more costly stamps, and consequently that the work on internal-revenue stamps was less expensive in 1895 than it was in 1894 for like quantities.

Here it may be well to quote what the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had to say in his report, dated November 1, 1895, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, concerning the failure of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to furnish an adequate supply of internal-revenue stamps up to that time, namely:

STOCK OF STAMPS IN VAULT.

The stock of stamps on hand in the vault October 1, 1895, of the various classes and denominations is 126,722,664, and the value of the same is $57,266,359.29.

This is very much below the estimated three months' supply which the statute requires to be kept in the vault; but the inability to maintain the stock at statutory requirement is due entirely to the failure of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to deliver the stamps ordered by this Bureau, and not to any official neglect on the part of this office. The statement of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of October 1, 1895, shows a balance due on past orders of 154,690,100 stamps, and the orders for October delivery amount to 102,462,000.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing was a delinquent to the Treasury Department, the very Department for whose sole use it was created, when it voluntarily and with much self-contention assumed the work of making postage stamps for the Post-Office Department in 1893, and it was still a worse delinquent to the Treasury Department in 1895 as a consequence of making postage stamps. The Bureau would have been guilty of a much greater delinquency to the Post-Office Department, one entailing the most serious consequences to the public convenience and to the postal revenue, if the Post-Office Department, at the very outset of the Bureau contract, had not purchased about 650,000,000 postage stamps, or a supply for nearly three months, from the old contractors, to enable the Bureau to finally get ready to keep its agreement. Even then the Bureau imposed upon the public postage stamps whose bad quality was a disgrace to the Government and the nation. And the question occurs, how much of the delinquency of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the Treasury Department in 1895 was due to the necessity on the part of the Bureau of diverting its regular appropriations from the purposes for which they were provided to enable it to keep up the supply of postage stamps?

GOVERNMENT AND OTHER BONDS IN 1894 AND 1895.

The only item in the list of work payable out of annual appropriations which shows an increase for 1895 over 1894 is that of Government bonds; but this item constitutes too small a proportion of the total work to appreciably affect the totals of work and cost. In neither year did this item constitute as much as one-half of 1 per cent of the total number of sheets produced. In 1894 the number of sheets of Government bonds produced was 90,646, and in 1895 it was 186,150, or a little more than double the number produced during the previous year. So far as the cost is concerned, there should not have been a corresponding increase, as it is to be presumed that the expense of engraving the designs and of preparing the plates for printing was in the main paid out of the appropriations for 1894. In the matter of material alone the increase must have been insignificant, as the paper, like that of all securities for the Treasury Department, was paid out of separate and independent appropriations not under control of the Bureau.

Before comparing the aggregate cost of the work for 1894 and 1895 it may be well to make some contrast in the items of expenditure for the said years.

COST OF WORK FOR 1894 AND 1895 COMPARED BY ITEMS.

The increase of expenditure for 1895 over 1894 for like quantities of work payable out of annual appropriations, by items, as shown by the reports of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, is as follows, namely:

1. Salaries:
Expenditure for 1894	$17,397.35
Expenditure for 1895	17,290.35
Decrease for 1895	107.00
Or 6 per cent.
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1894	.33
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1895	.39
Excess per 1,000 sheets for 1895 over 1894	.06
Amount of excess on 44,711,351 sheets for 1895	2,683.00
2. Compensation of employees:
Expenditure for 1894	440,507.12
Expenditure for 1895	419,775.28
Decrease for 1895	20,731.84
Or 4.7 per cent.
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1894	8.37
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1895	9.39
Excess per 1,000 sheets for 1895 over 1894	1.02
Amount of excess on 44,711,351 sheets for 1895	45,605.58
3. Plate printing:
Expenditure for 1894	537,455.27
Expenditure for 1895	495,034.62
Increase for 1895	42,420.65
Or 7.9 per cent.
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1894	10.22
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1895	11.07
Excess per 1,000 sheets 1895 over 1894	.85
Amount of excess on 44,711,351 sheets for 1895 over 1894	38,004.65
4. Material and miscellaneous expenses:
Expenditure for 1894	186,413.16
Expenditure for 1895	195,845.87
Increase for 1895	9,432.71
Or 5.1 per cent.
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1894	3.54
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1895	4.38
Excess per 1,000 sheets for 1895 over 1894	.84
Amount of excess on 44,711,351 sheets for 1895 over 1894	37,557.53

Totals of (1) Salaries; (2) Compensation of employees; (3) Plate printing; and (4) Material and miscellaneous expenses for 1894 and 1895, compared:

Expenditure for 1894	$1,181,772.90
Expenditure for 1895	1,127,946.12
Decrease for 1895	53,826.78
Or 4.5 per cent.
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1894	22.46
Average cost per 1,000 sheets for 1895	25.23
Excess per 1,000 sheets for 1895 over 1894	2.77
Amount excess on 44,711,351 sheets for 1895 over 1894	123,850.44

A closer analysis of the foregoing will show the following results (see Table No. 3, compiled from the reports of the Chief of the Bureau for 1894 and 1895, herewith), namely:

First. As to compensation of employees: Notwithstanding that there was a falling off of 15 per cent in the number of sheets of work produced out of annual appropriations in 1895 as compared to 1894, there was a decrease of only 4.7 per cent in the expenditure for compensation to employees. The rate of expenditure was, therefore, 10.3 per cent greater in 1895 than it was in 1894 for like quantities, in spite of the fact that there was an admitted saving of $11,000 for 1895 caused by a reduction of wages.

The number of employees engaged on each of the several classes of work is not given by the Chief of the Bureau, but the total average number of employees engaged on all classes is stated in his reports at 1,380 for 1894 and 1,427 for 1895. The number of employees engaged on postage-stamp work alone in 1895 was given by the Chief of Bureau in his testimony before the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill in December, 1894, at "less than 100; possibly 90 or 95." Allowing 95 for this class of work would leave a balance of 1,332 to perform all the other classes of work, namely, work payable out of annual and permanent appropriations. The total number of sheets of these two classes produced in 1894 was 55,516,961, and in 1895 it was 49,012,351. This was an average of 40,230 sheets to each employee in 1894, and of only 36,796 sheets in 1895. There was consequently a decrease of 3,434 sheets or 8.5 per cent per employee for 1895 as compared to 1894.

But it is not at all reasonable to suppose that the employees of the Bureau suffered such a decrease of efficiency for 1895 as compared to 1894 as would appear from this exhibit of decreased production. It is more reasonable to suppose, indeed it is susceptible of demonstration, that the number of employees actually required to do the work on postage stamps was more than double the number stated by the Chief of the Bureau. Thus, allowing 1 employee for each 40,230 sheets of work, being the average rate for 1894, would make 1,218 as the number of employees engaged in producing the 49,012,351 sheets of work payable out of annual and permanent appropriations in 1895; and this would leave 209 employees, out of the total force of 1,427, to do the work of producing postage stamps in 1895. The Chief of the Bureau stated in his testimony before the Committee on Appropriations in December, 1894, that the employees of the Bureau were engaged indiscriminately on the regular work and on postage stamps, no separate roll being kept for the different classes of work; and it is reasonable, therefore, that the work on postage stamps would require the exclusive services of at least 209 employees, especially since it has been claimed that the number of employees engaged on this work under the last contractor in New York was nearly 200. It is well also to remember that the employees of the Bureau work only eight hours per day and are allowed thirty days leave of absence with pay, while the employees of private establishments work ten hours per day and, as a rule, get no leave of absence with pay. Now, the Chief of the Bureau, in accounting for the $107,699.78 received from the Post-Office Department in payment for postage stamps, charged only $29,167.84 to the item of compensation to employees. Two hundred and seven employees for, say, three hundred working days in the year would make a total of sixty two thousand one hundred and eighty days' service for a single employee, affording a compensation, out of the $29,167.84 alleged to have been expended for employees on postage-stamp work, of about 47 cents each per day. What a ridiculous compensation that would be, and how absurd to suppose that $29,167.84 covered the cost of employees for doing the work on postage stamps in 1895. The real fact is that in the matter of compensation to employees, as in all other items of expenditure connected with the production of postage stamps, the regular appropriations of the Bureau were drawn upon to supply the deficiencies in the amounts received from the Post-Office Department to pay for the stamps.

What a pity that the employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were assessed a portion of their hard-earned wages in order that the Chief of the Bureau might be enabled to cover up his mistake in undertaking to furnish the Post-Office Department with postage stamps at about one-half the actual cost of producing the stamps.

SECOND—PLATE PRINTING.

The decrease in the number of sheets of work produced out of annual appropriations in 1895 as compared to 1894, it will be remembered, was at the rate of 15 per cent, while the decrease in the rate of expenditure for plate printing was only 7.9 per cent. The increased rate of expenditure for 1895 over 1894 was, therefore, 7.1 per cent for like quantities, and this increase was in spite of the fact that there was, as already shown, a reduction of $11,000 in the wages of plate printers for 1895.

Of the $107,699.78 paid by the Post-Office Department, outside of the annual appropriation in payment for postage stamps produced during 1895, the sum of $17,622.03 was charged by the Chief of the Bureau to the item of plate printing, and this amount was to cover the expense of plate printing for a total of 2,180,229,948 stamps produced during the year. In the detailed statement of expenditure in the letter of the Chief of the Bureau of January 11, 1895, the cost of plate printing the 755,271,163 stamps produced to December 31, 1894, was given at $35,318.24. That is to say, the cost of printing the stamps produced to December 31, 1894, was stated by the Chief of the Bureau in his letter of January 11, 1895, at more than twice the amount given in his annual report for printing nearly three times as many stamps, constituting the entire product of the year. Further comment on the subject of plate printing is unnecessary.

THIRD—AS TO MATERIALS AND MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

This item is the only one which shows an absolute increase in the amount of expenditure for 1895 over 1894, in face of the largely decreased quantity of work produced during the latter year. The decrease in the quantity of work for 1895, it will be remembered, was at the rate of 15 per cent, while the increase in the aggregate cost of materials was at the rate of 5.1 per cent, making a total increase of over 20 per cent of expense for 1895 as against 1894 for like quantities. And yet the Chief of the Bureau stated in his testimony before the subcommittee of Appropriations on the sundry civil bill, in December, 1894, that "we are buying material for a good deal less than we bought in the past."

The average cost of material for work payable out of annual appropriations, as already shown, was $3.54 per thousand sheets in 1894, and $4.38 per thousand sheets in 1895, being a difference against 1895 of 84 cents per 1,000 sheets, amounting on the 44,711,351 sheets produced in 1895 to $37,557.53.

The amount charged by the Chief of the Bureau for materials and miscellaneous expenses against the funds received from the Post-Office Department in payment of the stamps was $60,909.91, which, added to the $37,557.53 taken out of the annual appropriations, would make the cost of material used for postage stamps in 1895, $98,467.44, or only $9,232.34 less than the entire alleged cost of producing the stamps. Now, the Chief of the Bureau stated, as already mentioned, that he was "buying material for a good deal less" in 1895 than in 1894, and therefore, except for this reduction, the aggregate cost of material would have been much greater in 1895 than it actually was. What is a "good deal less"?

Let us ascertain the amount from his own figures. For the year ending June 30, 1894, the cost per thousand sheets for work payable out of annual appropriations was $3.54. In his estimates submitted to Congress in 1895 for the service of the year ending June 30, 1897, he allowed for a total production of 56,830,437 sheets of work payable out of annual appropriations, and as a part of the cost of producing this work he asked for an appropriation of only $166,650 for the item of materials and miscellaneous expenses. This amount on the 56,830,437 sheets to be produced would be equal to $2.93 per thousand sheets, being a reduction of 61 cents, or a little over 17.2 per cent, in the cost of materials for 1897 as compared to that of 1894 for like quantities. Allowing for a reduction of only 15 per cent in the cost of material for 1895 as compared to 1894—and let us remember that the Chief of the Bureau testified before the subcommittee on Appropriations that he was buying material for a good deal less in 1895 than in 1894—would make the saving for materials used in 1895, as compared to the prices of 1894, $34,561.03, as will appear from the following statement, namely:

Actual cost of materials for the 44,711,351 sheets of work payable out of annual appropriations produced in 1895	$195,845.87
Amount of which $195,845.87 is 85 per cent, to represent cost of work for 1895 as compared to that of 1894 for like quantities	230,406.90
Gives balance to represent the amount of savings in materials payable out of annual appropriations for 1895	34,561.03

The saving of $34,561.03 in the cost of material payable out of annual appropriations in 1895 was swallowed up by the extra cost of producing postage stamps over and above the amount paid for the same by the Post-Office Department, and it is therefore properly chargeable to the actual cost of the stamps for that year.

So much for materials, and now for other items of expense to the Government occasioned by the manufacture of postage stamps.

RENT OF POSTAGE-STAMP AGENCY.

The specifications in the contract for postage stamps required the contractor to furnish suitable office room for the use of the agent and clerical force of the Post-Office Department to supervise the manufacture and distribution of the stamps without extra cost to the Government. The space available in the Bureau building did not admit of these office rooms, and accordingly outside rooms for the use of the agent and his clerical force were rented in a building on F street northwest, more than 1 mile from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in Washington. How well the agent could perform his duties of inspection at this distance from the place of manufacture can readily be surmised. Be that as it may, the rental of these outside office rooms constituted an additional charge upon the work of producing postage stamps. The amount of annual rental was $600, and the amount expended during the year ended June 30, 1895, for this purpose was $566.67, and it was paid, not out of the funds of the Bureau, nor out of the amount reimbursable by the Post-Office Department, but out of specific appropriations by Congress.

THE RENTAL OF OUTSIDE QUARTERS FOR OTHER WORK.

The occupancy in the Bureau building of a large quantity of space, given by the Chief of the Bureau at nearly 10,000 square feet, necessitated the rental of outside quarters for doing some special work on World's Fair business, and the "act (Public—No. 29) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes," contains an item of $860 for the rental of outside quarters from April 20, 1895, to June 30, 1896, at $60 per month. Of the $860 thus appropriated $140 is due to the fiscal year 1895 and $720 to the fiscal year 1896, and both amounts are properly chargeable to the extra cost of producing postage stamps in both of said years.

ACTUAL COST OF PRODUCING POSTAGE STAMPS IN 1895.

Having considered the various known elements of expense involved in the manufacture of postage stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing during the year ended June 30, 1895, the approximate, if not actual, cost of the work may now be ascertained. There is of course an omission of one element of expense not ascertainable in amount through the failure to include a proper allowance for the use and care of the building in which the work is done, and for heat and light of the same, payable out of permanent appropriations for the Treasury Department and not charged to the cost of work produced by the Bureau.

The recapitulation by items of the cost of producing postage stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in 1895, as far as known, is as follows:

1. Amount reimbursed at contract price by the Post-Office Department for postage stamps produced	$107,699.78
2. Amount expended on production of postage stamps over and above the foregoing and taken out of annual appropriations, as ascertained by the excess of cost for 1895 over 1894 for like quantities of work payable out of said appropriations	123,850.44
3. Amount of admitted savings by reduction of wages of employees in 1895 absorbed in the cost of producing postage stamps	11,000.00
4. Amount of savings by reduction in cost of materials as shown for 1895 and absorbed in the cost of producing postage stamps.	34,561.03
5. Amount paid for rental of postage-stamp agency for 1895 under special appropriation by Congress, and not included in the foregoing statement of cost	566.67
6. Amount paid from April 20 to June 30, 1895, for rental of outside quarters for World's Fair work, necessitated by use of space in Bureau building for producing postage stamps and supplied by urgent deficiency appropriation by Congress	120.00
Total cost of producing postage stamps for 1895, as far as ascertainable	277,797.92

Number of stamps furnished by Bureau of Engraving and Printing, year ended June 30, 1895, 2,180,229,948.
Average cost per 1,000 stamps, 12.79 cents.

The price paid by the Post-Office Department for the foregoing stamps was $107,699.78, as above. The excess of cost over and above this amount payable out of the general Treasury was therefore $170,098, and this amount represented only a little more than three-fourths of the amount of stamps required by the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, nearly one quarter's supply having been purchased from the old contractors by reason of the inability of the Bureau to begin the work at the time at which it stipulated to do it. If, therefore, the Bureau had manufactured all the postage stamps required by the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, the extra cost of their production payable out of the general Treasury over and above the amount reimbursable by the Post-Office Department would have amounted to about $225,000.

The foregoing computation of course includes the cost of the plant—that is, of the additional machinery required to manufacture postage stamps. The cost of this additional machinery, originally estimated at $40,000 or $50,000, was finally given in exact figures in the text of the report of the Chief of the Bureau for the year ended June 30, 1895, at $56,243. This amount nowhere appears in the detailed statement of expenditures out of the various items of appropriations, but it is of course divided up and covered up among the various items of expenditure.

It is only fair to say, however, that this machinery having already been purchased and paid for, while an element of actual cost of the stamps for 1895, will not appear as a part of the cost of the stamps for subsequent years.

Let us ascertain the actual cost of stamps, exclusive of the cost of the plant, for the year 1895, namely:

COST OF STAMPS FURNISHED IN 1895, EXCLUSIVE OF COST OF PLANT.

Total cost of stamps and plant for 1895, as previously shown	$277,797.92
Deduct cost of plant, as above given	56,243.00
Leaves balance to represent cost of stamps exclusive of cost of plant	221,554.92
Number of stamps furnished by Bureau June 30, 1895, as above.	2,180,229,948
Average cost per thousand stamps exclusive of cost of plant for 1895	10.11+ cts.

These figures include nothing for the use and care of the building in which the stamps were manufactured, and nothing for heating and lighting the same payable out of permanent appropriations and not chargeable to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Aside from this latter expense, and from the cost of the additional machinery, it will be seen that the cost of the stamps was more than double the price paid for them by the Post-Office Department, and consequently that nearly one-half the cost of the same was borne out of the general Treasury.

Number of stamps furnished by Bureau of Engraving and Printing, year ended June 30, 1895, as above	2,180,229,948
Cost to the Government for production of the same, including cost of plant, as above	$277,797.92
Amount paid by Post-Office Department for same, as above	107,699.78
Excess of actual cost to the Government over amount paid by the Post-Office Department, as above	170,098.14
Cost to the Government at prices in the bid of Charles F. Steele, the lowest bidder, under the advertisement for the contract	115,120.42
Excess of cost to the Government through production of the stamps over amount in bid of Charles F. Steele	162,677.50
Cost of the foregoing stamps at the price in the bid of the American Bank Note Company, of New York, the next lowest bidder for the contract, uniform at 5.85 cents per 1,000 stamps	127,543.45
Excess of cost to the Government through production of stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in lieu of the American Bank Note Company, inclusive of $56,243 paid for additional machinery by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing	150,254.47

To recapitulate: First, if the postage stamps furnished to the Post-Office Department by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing during about three-quarters of the year ended June 30, 1895, at a cost of production to the Government of $277,797.92, had been obtained from Charles F. Steele, at the prices in his bid, the Government would have saved $162,677.50; and, second, if an equal number of stamps had been obtained from the American Bank Note Company, the next lowest bidder and the old contractor, at the price in the bid of the said company, the Government would have saved $150,254.47 and, besides, have gotten very much better stamps.

STOCK ON HAND AT CLOSE OF 1895.

In the table (No. 12) in his report for the year ended June 30, 1895, "showing the annual production of securities in sheets," etc., the Chief of the Bureau gives only the number of sheets of stamps delivered to the Post-Office Department, making no allowance for any stamps remaining on hand at the close of the year, but in the text of his report (page 3, report for 1895) he says that the Bureau had "accumulated in its finished vaults a stock of finished stamps of the value of $27,754." He must have had some stamps on hand, because he could not be expected to deliver stamps fresh from the presses, but it is not likely that he had in stock any considerable quantity of stamps that were fit for issue.

In his letter of January 11, 1895, to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House (pages 1511 to 1513 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 25, 1895), he admitted that he had a large quantity of damaged stamps in his vaults, a part of which had been condemned as unfit for use, and a very large part of which had been returned from the post-offices as unserviceable. Some of these stamps he thought might be worked over so that they would go, the public expectation having been greatly lowered by the quality of the stamps furnished by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Did not the $27,752 worth of stamps reported on hand on the 30th of June last consist mainly of the bad work referred to above?

QUALITY OF STAMPS FURNISHED.

The bad quality of the stamps furnished has just been referred to, and there is need of saying very little more on the subject. The Chief of the Bureau professes to be satisfied with the quality of the work, but that is very much more than the public was. The public prints have been filled with complaints touching nearly every detail of manufacture, the color, the quality of printing, the perforation, and, above all, the gumming.

Will the Chief of the Bureau urge, in extenuation of the excessive cost and bad quality of the work produced, a lack of experience, technical skill, and expertness during the first year of his contract term? If so, he will be met with his own published assurances to the contrary, to be found on page 4927 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 25, 1894, namely:

> The Bureau is amply able to do the work on postage stamps. There is no kind of work on these stamps that the Bureau is not now doing on the stamps for the Internal Revenue Bureau, and surely if it has, without interruption, successfully executed these for the past sixteen years, it can execute the work on postage stamps. The number of sheets of internal-revenue stamps executed annually is five times as great as the number of sheets of postage stamps that will be required.

THEFT OF POSTAGE STAMPS FROM BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

One of the principal reasons urged by the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for having the work on postage stamps done by his Bureau was that it might be surrounded with greater security than was possible when done under private contract. On this point, as well as on the question of cost, he made the following statement, to be found on the same page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD just referred to, namely:

> Mr. Carlisle has reported to the House that this work can be done by the Bureau of Engraving without any expense whatever, except within the amount appropriated in the pending Post-Office bill. All the securities of the Government are now made by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing with absolute safety against robbery or peculation of any kind that surrounds that establishment. It is certainly safer for the Government to do this work than to place it in the hands of any private individual. While no robberies are known to have occurred, and probably none have ever occurred in the establishment of private contractors who have made the stamps, yet they are liable to occur, and may have occurred in the past without the knowledge of any one except the perpetrators.

How did the vaunted security of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing turn out? The Bureau had hardly commenced its work before the public prints were filled with the story of thefts by employees, under most disgraceful circumstances, of postage stamps from its vaults, and these thefts were only revealed to the Bureau after they had been discovered by outside detectives, who found the thieves publicly disposing of the stamps in large quantities. One or more of the thieves are now in the penitentiary. There is pretty good reason also to believe that these are not the only thefts of postage stamps from the Bureau since it undertook the work of making the stamps.

An equally striking commentary on the boasted security of the Bureau, through its alleged system of checks and balances to insure a proper accountability for its product, is to be found in the very large discrepancy, already referred to, between the accounts of the Bureau and the Post-Office Department as to the number of stamps furnished to postmasters. The accounts between the Post-Office Department and its old contractors never varied so much as a single postage stamp.

LIABILITY TO THE USE OF WASHED STAMPS.

A great source of danger to the postal revenue is through the liability to the use of washed stamps caused by the bad standards furnished to postmasters by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The worst effort at cleansing stamps for reuse is liable to escape detection when compared with the wretched standards of the Government, and in this way many washed stamps will be passed by postmasters because of the inability to detect the difference between them and the Bureau stamps which have not been previously used.

COUNTERFEITING STAMPS.

Another source of danger to the postal revenue from the bad standards set up was through the counterfeiting of stamps, and this danger materialized by the discovery in the summer of 1895 of a large number of spurious stamps in actual circulation. It was said in official quarters, and not in an ironical way, that the discovery of the bogus stamps was due to the superiority in their workmanship over that of the stamps produced by the Government.

Having disposed of the work of 1894 and 1895, let us now turn to the estimated cost of postage stamps for the year ending June 30, 1896, the present fiscal year, namely:

ESTIMATED COST OF POSTAGE STAMPS FOR 1896.

Number of postage stamps of the various kinds to be required during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, as estimated by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General (page 25, pamphlet edition, Report of Third Assistant Postmaster-General for year ended June 30, 1894)	3,180,124,000
Estimated cost to the Government for production of the same by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at — cents per thousand, being the rate of cost shown for stamps produced in 1895, exclusive of cost of plant	$321,510.53
Estimated amount to be paid to Bureau of Engraving and Printing for furnishing the above stamps at Bureau prices	159,943.00
Excess of actual cost to the Government over amount to be paid by the Post-Office Department for the stamps	161,567.53
Cost to the Government of the foregoing stamps at the prices in the bid of Charles F. Steele, the lowest bidder under the advertisement for the contract	167,829.77
Excess of cost to Government over amount of bid of Charles F. Steele
Excess of cost to the Government through production of stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in lieu of Charles F. Steele	153,680.76
Cost of the foregoing stamps at the price in the bid of the American Bank Note Company, of New York, the next lowest bidder for the contract, uniform at 5.85 cents per 1,000 stamps	186,037.25
Excess of cost to the Government through production of stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in lieu of the American Bank Note Company	135,473.28

To recapitulate for the year ending June 30, 1896: First, if the postage stamps estimated to be required during the above year at a cost of production to the Government of $321,510.53 could have been obtained from Charles F. Steele at the prices in his bid, the Government would have saved $153,680.76 by giving the contract to Mr. Steele instead of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and second, if an equal number of stamps had been obtained from the American Bank Note Company, at the price in the bid of said company, the Government would have saved $135,473.28 for the year 1896 alone by giving the contract to the said Bank Note Company instead of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The American Bank Note Company was the existing contractor at the time the various bids were submitted in November, 1893, and it had for years acceptably and faithfully carried out its contract obligations. To repeat, the Government would have saved $135,473.28 during the year ended June 30, 1896, if the contract had been awarded to the American Bank Note Company in lieu of Charles F. Steele and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which, with all its facilities, proved to be no better than an untried bidder. Will the Congress of the United States further permit the Bureau to do the work at such a greatly increased cost to the Government? The Post-Office Department may claim a trifling saving, as it did, by giving the work to the Bureau, but it was largely at the expense of the Government as a whole.

FURTHER EXTRA EXPENSE TO BE INCURRED.

That the Government may be put to still further expense by the voluntary assumption by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the work of producing postage stamps appears from the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual estimates for 1897 (Executive Document No. 12, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, page 175) called for an appropriation of $92,000 for the erection of additional buildings for the use of the said Bureau. Could not this proposed outlay for new buildings have been avoided if such a large quantity of space had not been appropriated by the Bureau for the work of producing postage stamps? Will Congress give its sanction to the enterprise (?) of the Bureau by making the appropriation asked for the new building?

CONCLUSION.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have gone over this case pretty exhaustively, and think I have shown conclusively that the Government has indulged in a very costly experiment in transferring this work of making postage stamps to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I opposed this transfer originally, and I have been persistent in trying, whenever suitable opportunity occurred, to remedy the evil. An injustice was done to all the bidders for the contract, who, in good faith, submitted their offers in pursuance of the advertisement published in compliance with law. It was little short of an outrage for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, after all the bids had been submitted and opened, to come in and make an offer which was just a shade below the prices named by the lawful bidders, and without any regard to the expense to which the Government would be put in producing the stamps. What mattered it to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, so that it magnified its own importance, if the stamps should cost the Government, as they have done, twice the amount at which it agreed to furnish them? The private bidders would suffer financially if the work should prove to be undertaken at a loss; but the Chief of the Bureau could lose nothing in a pecuniary way if he failed to produce the stamps at the price at which he offered them to the Post-Office Department. Unlike the private bidders, he had the Treasury of the United States back of him to supply any deficiency.

The award to the Bureau was especially unjust to Mr. Steele, of Philadelphia, my constituent, who was the lowest bidder for the work. He should have been given the opportunity to do the work, and if he failed the Post-Office Department could have fallen back upon the next lowest bidder, the American Bank Note Company of New York, whose bid was a reasonable one, and concerning whose ability to carry out the contract there was no question of doubt.

The rejection of all the private bids by the Postmaster-General was not only unfair to all the private bidders but it was calculated to cause great injury to all the engraving and printing interests of the country. This view of the case was presented to me in the strongest light within the past few days by the president of the Western Bank Note Company of Chicago, a most reputable concern, who was not even a bidder for the contract, but who, in common with others in the same line of business, has come to me in the name of the guild to urge me to use my efforts to right the wrong which was committed by the Government in the matter of this award. The Government works its employees but eight hours a day, and gives them thirty days' leave of absence with pay; and, as a preference is always given to employment under the Government, outside concerns are compelled to pay higher salaries, and to take the chances of having their employees leave them under more tempting offers by the Government. Incidentally, the withdrawal of work from the private engraving and printing establishments to the Government has the result of causing the loss to the private establishments of much work which has come here from abroad, notably the South American countries, by reason of the superiority of the engraving and printing talent of our workmen. In this way the country suffers as a whole when the Government by its action depreciates the standards of private enterprise.

It is in direct contravention of our institutions for the Government to undertake the production of work which can be done as well, if not much better, by private enterprise.

The postage stamps of the United States have heretofore taken high rank among the nations of the world for excellence of design and superiority of workmanship. Postage stamps are used by everybody and go everywhere; and by many people they are accepted as a criterion of the artistic tastes of the people of the country which produces them. How far we have suffered in this respect through the circulation of the bad work produced by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is simply incalculable. The work of the Bureau has met with the derision of the stamp-collecting fraternity, whose names are legion throughout the entire world.

In the name, therefore, of fair play, which has been outraged; in the name of my constituents, whose rights were trampled upon; in the name of the engraving and printing interests of the United States, which suffer as a class; in the name of the Government, which is being put to a large and wholly unjustifiable expense; and, above all, in the name and for the sake of the majesty of the law, which was violated in giving this contract to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, I ask that this House in Committee of the Whole will sustain the amendment which I have offered, depriving the Bureau of a further continuance of the work.

Appendixes to speech of Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department and member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, on the subject of manufacturing and issuing adhesive postage stamps for the Post-Office Department by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department.

EXTRACT FROM TESTIMONY OF MR. CLAUDE M. JOHNSON, CHIEF OF BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING, ON THE 18TH OF DECEMBER, 1894, BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL FOR 1896. SEE PAGES 35 TO 42 OF PRINTED COPY OF "HEARINGS BEFORE SUBCOMMITTEE OF HOUSE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS, CONSISTING OF MESSRS. SAYERS, O'NEIL OF MASSACHUSETTS, BROOKSHIRE, COGSWELL, AND CANNON OF ILLINOIS, IN CHARGE OF SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL FOR 1896."

Mr. CANNON. Right at that point. How much is your estimate for postage stamps?

Mr. JOHNSON. The Post-Office Department has estimated they will require 8,088,575 sheets, which, according to our estimates, will cost $159,798.50. That, of course, comes in the Post-Office appropriation. It is repaid to the Bureau by them on bills rendered for a certain number of postage stamps which are delivered.

Mr. CANNON. Have you a deficiency in that matter this year?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if any inquiries are to be made about that expenditure, they would have to be made upon this bill; that is, the Post-Office bill carries the item for printing for the postage stamps, and you are reimbursed from that appropriation, but as to the Treasury notes, that is a permanent appropriation by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Your next item is "for wages of plate printers." You ask for $547,700 for this item. How is it that the estimate is so large this year as compared with previous years? Now, for 1895 you had an estimate for $495,400. It is $52,000 more this year than last year.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, the same answer applies to that; that nearly 5,000,000 more sheets are to be printed. The same answer applies to each one of these items of appropriations. It is the increase of the number of sheets to be produced by the Bureau; each department of the service every year increases estimates and uses more. The Government is growing.

Mr. CANNON. What is this I notice in the public prints about reduction of the wages of plate printers?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, it is a fact that the rates have been reduced 10 per cent on the internal-revenue work only; not on bank-note, or faces, or miscellaneous work, but internal-revenue work only.

The CHAIRMAN. Why is this?

Mr. JOHNSON. Because it is a cheaper grade of work. The internal-revenue stamp is made up principally of lathe work and lettering and printed on green paper, and it does not require the same care which it does to print the bank notes, which are pictures and portraits, and printed on white paper, and they have to be printed very carefully, and the men who were printing internal-revenue work were making more money than the men who were printing the faces on the bank notes under the rates which prevailed in the Bureau, and it looks to me like it was a gratuity of twenty-odd thousand dollars a year for the men doing the cheapest work, and I explained that to the Secretary, and it was reduced 10 per cent.

Mr. O'NEIL. What pay do they make at the reduced rates?

Mr. JOHNSON. They make on an average of from $4 to $5 a day under the new arrangement.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask a question right there. You say between $4 and $5 would be their average wages. What is that for, a day of eight hours?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. How does that pay compare with wages for similar employees in private establishments?

Mr. O'NEIL. Say the American Bank Note Company?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, the rates of the American Bank Note Company, in some instances, possibly, are a little higher than in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving; but what they call jobs are small. For instance, they will have two or three kinds of securities a day to print, whereas the printers in the Bureau have continuous work on one class of work.

Mr. CANNON. Do they have thirty days' leave of absence under you?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; and in a private establishment they do not.

Mr. CANNON. Do you take that into consideration?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. You mean the wages here and the wages of a private establishment which gives thirty days' leave?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; but I was going to say the printers of the Bureau make more money than the printers in private establishments in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Without regard to the thirty days?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is counted in, as they get pay for the thirty days' leave of absence.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CANNON. What are the hours of work for private establishments?

Mr. JOHNSON. My impression is, it is ten hours.

Mr. CANNON. Do you mean a little more pay, hour for hour, or a little more pay for the printers in the Government office for eight hours than for the printer in the private office for ten hours? Do you reckon that by hours or by the year?

Mr. JOHNSON. By days. My information is that printers in the Bureau make a little more than in private establishments day by day.

Mr. CANNON. Notwithstanding they work two hours less?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And have thirty days' leave of absence?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. O'NEIL. These are highly skilled men?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; they are skilled men.
Mr. O'NEIL. You only select the best men you can get, and if they are not good you let them go?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. "For engravers', printers', and other materials, etc.," you ask $200,000. That is about as much as you asked last year?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir. Well, we have a great many more sheets to print, nearly 5,000,000, as we say; but we have not asked for much more, because we are buying material for a good deal less than we bought it in the past.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BINGHAM. You have simply taken an exception to the fact that you are or are not the contractor; but as to this agent, his line of work is the verification of stamp delivery to the Post-Office Department, etc., and he represents the Post-Office Department?
Mr. JOHNSON. That is true.
The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would explain the method you have adopted in order to prevent them from being stolen or lost, and also the method which you have also adopted for distribution.
Mr. JOHNSON. Well, in the first place all paper that we receive for the purpose on which postage stamps are printed is delivered to us and we are charged with that by the Treasury. The division of loans and currency receives all the paper; therefore we have to account for every sheet. Then it goes into what is known as the "wetting division," and they are charged with this. They wet and distribute it among the printers, and it is returned at night to the examining division, and from the examining division it goes to the gumming division, and from that division to the perforating division, and finally, after being completed, to the finish vault. Now, each one of the various branches of the Bureau is charged with every sheet of paper, and they have to account for them or put up the money themselves for it; and even if it is a blank sheet and it is lost the money has to be put up for it.
Every impression that is made by a press is registered by automatic registering machines, and we have register clerks who watch every revolution of that press, so it is impossible for a revolution to be made and an impression to be taken from these plates without a full record of it. After being delivered to the finish vault, then they are counted out by the vault keeper to the packing branch, and they are packed under the inspection of the man who is supposed to be the representative of the Post-Office Department, and is the representative of that Department, and delivered to the city post-office. They never go into the Post-Office Department at all, and we have the complete handling of them.
The CHAIRMAN. Is this agent there the person who has supervision of the distribution of these stamps?
Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; he has a clerk who stays over there, and he comes there once in awhile, but very seldom.
The CHAIRMAN. So the clerk does the work?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Postage stamps, manufacture of:

The CHAIRMAN. General BINGHAM, you may now ask Mr. Johnson any questions you desire in regard to the manufacture of stamps.
Mr. BINGHAM. What was the price bid per 1,000 by the Bureau for those stamps?
Mr. JOHNSON. Five cents for the ordinary stamps.
Mr. BINGHAM. That is, for the great body of stamps, 5 cents per 1,000. Now, what was bid by the Bureau in 1885?
Mr. JOHNSON. Really, I can not say.
Mr. BINGHAM. Was it not 7¼ cents per 1,000?
Mr. JOHNSON. I can not say, as I can not recollect now.
Mr. BINGHAM. Was not that estimate made by Mr. Sullivan?
Mr. SULLIVAN. No, sir; that was not made by me; it was made by the accountants.
Mr. BINGHAM. The bid of the Bureau in 1893 was 5 cents per 1,000 and in 1885 it was 7¼ cents per 1,000, and I am simply asking if you made that bid, Mr. Sullivan.
Mr. SULLIVAN. No, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. My purpose in making that inquiry was to ask you why that difference between 1885 and 1893—a difference of 2¼ cents per 1,000; but that you do not know?
Mr. SULLIVAN. I did not make the estimate.
Mr. BINGHAM. What is the cost of manufacturing and issuing stamps per 1,000, as shown by your work, actually, up to date?
Mr. JOHNSON. Well, sir, it is less than our estimate.
Mr. BINGHAM. Can you give a detailed statement of how you make up that cost in your estimate?
Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; we could not do it now, but I could furnish it.
Mr. BINGHAM. You can furnish it. Mr. Chairman, can Mr. Johnson furnish that statement?
The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. Mr. Johnson, will you furnish that statement?
Mr. BINGHAM. Is an account kept of the cost of postage stamps in your department apart from the other work?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. Has there been a recent reduction of wages of employees in the department with reference to that kind of work?
Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. What has been the general quality of the work you have done?
Mr. JOHNSON. You mean what we have done or what we are doing?
Mr. BINGHAM. I mean of what you have done since taking the contract.
Mr. JOHNSON. The first shipments of stamps were not satisfactory. The haste in making them was too great, and we went too fast at first; but the Post-Office Department insisted upon so many being produced each day, and the Bureau was not fully equipped at that time to do that many. We did not think it was necessary, but they insisted upon it, and there were a great many stamps which went out which were not properly gummed. They thinned the gum and ran them through the machines too fast, and it sunk into the paper and did not stay on the surface.
Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, there was a defect in the gumming. Was there any defect in the engraving or printing?
Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. Was it not criticised?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; the color was somewhat weak at first, but the stamps are now absolutely satisfactory in every respect.
Mr. BINGHAM. Well, what about the perforating? Have there been any complaints heretofore?
Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. Just give us your explanation covering what is called a stamp, the engraving, printing, gumming, perforating, etc. You know better than I do what a stamp means.
Mr. JOHNSON. The stamps now being produced are absolutely satisfactory in every particular as to the printing, gumming, and perforating. The stamps previously, as I stated before, issued in the first shipments were not satisfactory.
Mr. BINGHAM. You have submitted in your statement to the committee as to the careful preservation and records kept of each sheet of paper furnished. What number of stamps have been spoiled in the course of manufacture and destroyed up to December 1, and what proportion was this of the total number originally printed? That, of course, you can not give from memory, but you can give it in the statement.
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. Because each sheet will be a sheet of record, and that will show whether the work is good or poor.
The CHAIRMAN. Right here, now, I want you to append to that statement a note of explanation whenever it becomes necessary to explain anything, as we have no technical knowledge of this subject.
Mr. CANNON. That is, you want all the facts?
Mr. JOHNSON. I will give you all the facts.
Mr. BINGHAM. In the same connection you can give me the number of stamps manufactured by the Bureau furnished to postmasters upon requisitions of the Post-Office Department up to December last. That is matter, of course, of record?
Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

* * * * * * *

Mr. O'NEIL. When you give this information just asked for by General BINGHAM about the return of unfit stamps, I wish you would also give the dates. In other words, you admit in the beginning of the manufacture of these stamps they were faulty, but you claim that to-day they are all right; so we want the date of these returns so as to bear out that statement.
Mr. CANNON. Now, I want a little information about another matter, and when you go to answer those questions put this down. Does your estimate of the cost of stamps include the plant? I mean by plant the house, heating, lighting, presses, and everything that is necessary to make stamps.
Mr. JOHNSON. It includes presses and all machinery that has been bought. We will pay for the plant, what we call the plant, out of the appropriation for this year which we will receive from the Post-Office Department. Of course next year we will not have any plant to buy. We do not include house and light and heat, because those expenses are permanent and on the Government before.
Mr. CANNON. And they are not increased?
Mr. JOHNSON. Well, yes; to some extent, but not to any material extent.
The CHAIRMAN. How many employees are there engaged in printing these stamps?
Mr. JOHNSON. Less than 100; possibly 90 or 95.
The CHAIRMAN. Are they not paid out of the Post-Office appropriation?
Mr. JOHNSON. They are paid out of our appropriation, of course, but we get reimbursed from the Post-Office Department.
Mr. CANNON. One further question. The expense of the presses of which you spoke, is that an independent expense—I mean independent of the 5 cents a thousand?
Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; it is included in our estimate.
Mr. CANNON. Your estimate was 5 cents a thousand for the production of stamps. Now, does that 5 cents a thousand include the cost of presses?
Mr. JOHNSON. It does.
Mr. CANNON. So that the first year you will print at 5 cents a thousand, and out of that 5 cents a thousand you buy the plant?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. CANNON. Without any increased cost?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask you another question. Will that 5 cents a thousand also compensate you for whatever losses may be incurred in the way of paper by imperfect manufacture, etc.?
Mr. JOHNSON. It will. We expect to come out even on the postage stamps this year.
The CHAIRMAN. Will the expenses be reduced the next year?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; $50,000.
The CHAIRMAN. And they will be $50,000 under those of the present year?
Mr. JOHNSON. I do not want to make too extreme a statement.
The CHAIRMAN. How much will they be under the expenses of the present year?
Mr. JOHNSON. Our plant will cost nearly $50,000, and we will pay for it this year. That will be our profit this year substantially, and next year we do not have to pay for a plant.
The CHAIRMAN. Then it will be $50,000 under the present year?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; fully $50,000. The printing of stamps at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will save this Government at least $50,000 a year. I do not hesitate to state that.
Mr. BINGHAM. In one year or four years?
Mr. JOHNSON. In one year.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BINGHAM. Have you any figures there which indicate the amount of stock transferred for issue of stamps from the old contractor on the 1st of July last; how many millions?
Mr. JOHNSON. My impression is it was about 600,000,000.
Mr. BINGHAM. That was enough to run you for two months or three months?
Mr. JOHNSON. Four months; well, three at any rate.
Mr. BINGHAM. Therefore you had three months after the commencement of your contract to get ready for the contract?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.
Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wish to show that they had ample time to do the work, because they had an amount of stock on hand for three months.
Mr. JOHNSON. Let me say right here we did not have ample time. When we made the estimate for the printing of the postage stamps in October, the Post-Office Department did not accept it until the last of February, nearly the 1st of March, leaving us only four months to the 1st of July, when our work began, instead of seven, as we anticipated; when we had calculated, we had that seven and the three in addition, on account of turning over this stock from the American Bank Note Company. It was quite an undertaking to prepare. We had to make new machinery. We had to make new presses, new gumming machines, and new perforators. We had to invent our gumming machine. There were none for sale in this country—no manufactory established in this country, that I could find, that could furnish those gumming machines.
Mr. BINGHAM. Right in that connection I want to ask, did not you make your estimates after the proposals had been duly advertised and bids opened by the Post-Office Department? Did not you submit your estimate to the Post-Office Department after all the other bidders had submitted their bids, and therefore you were at no disadvantage?
Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. Your estimate came in after all the bids had been opened and after all the other contractors had submitted their bids?
Mr. JOHNSON. We did not bid.
Mr. BINGHAM. Well, you estimated, then?
Mr. JOHNSON. We made an estimate and submitted it to the Department for their consideration, that we could do this work at a certain figure, and that we have done.

Mr. BINGHAM. What number of stamps were there in the stock of Bureau manufacture on the 1st of December fit for issue, and what were the number of finished stamps in the vaults or in stock on the 1st of December which were regarded as unfit for issue? I wish to ascertain your failures in connection with your work. State also what safeguards are used to prevent thefts by employees while the stamps are in course of manufacture or in stock. Also, give the system of checks and balances in detail, and that is for the reason there has been a defalcation in the Bureau. There are a great many other questions I will submit to you without bringing them in to consume time. What is your daily supply to the Post-Office Department?

Mr. JOHNSON. The daily consumption is about 8,000,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does that run the Department?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. How do you employ your subordinate force in connection with this Post-Office work?

Mr. JOHNSON. They are employed as all the other employees.

Mr. BINGHAM. How are they paid?

Mr. JOHNSON. As all the other employees.

Mr. BINGHAM. On the same roll; in the same way?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do you keep a distinct roll for this work?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; not a distinct roll.

Mr. BINGHAM. How do you make up the estimate of cost, then?

Mr. JOHNSON. We know exactly the employees who are engaged on this particular work.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask a question right there. Do we make an appropriation upon this bill for these employees who manufacture postage stamps?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; but the reimbursement comes from the Post-Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, why is it necessary to make an appropriation upon this bill, if you get it from the Post-Office Department?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no; you misunderstand me. You do not appropriate for that at all, except we pay, you understand, right along, and we get reimbursed from the Post-Office Department from time to time as we render bills for so many stamps.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I understand you to say in these estimates, while they have been increased over those for the present fiscal year, they do not result from the fact that you are engaged in the manufacture of postage stamps?

Mr. JOHNSON. None in the least. They have no bearing whatever on the manufacture of postage stamps.

Mr. BINGHAM. Right in that connection, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask what disposition is made of the money appropriated for the Post-Office Department for procuring the stamps?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is paid the Bureau of Printing and Engraving just as it was paid to the American Bank Note Company—on its bills.

Mr. BINGHAM. The $160,000 that will be appropriated in the bill for the next fiscal year for the Post-Office Department for the manufacture of adhesive postage stamps is paid to your Bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. To whom in your Bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is deposited to the credit of the appropriations for the Bureau.

Extract from testimony of Mr. Claude M. Johnson, Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, on February 11, 1895, before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, in charge of deficiency appropriations for 1895 and prior years. (See pages 72 to 74 of printed copy of "Hearings before subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations," consisting of Messrs. Breckinridge of Kentucky, SAYERS, LIVINGSTON, CANNON of Illinois, and HENDERSON of Iowa, in charge of deficiency appropriations for 1895 and prior years.)

The CHAIRMAN. Your Bureau asks for $41,800 for salaries of clerks and employees other than plate printers and plate printers' assistants, $26,400 for wages of plate printers, and $15,200 for various materials for engraving and printing other than distinctive paper. Will you please give us briefly your reasons for there being a deficiency, and an explanation of why these amounts are necessary for your Bureau?

Mr. JOHNSON. The reason for there being a deficiency is the fact that the committee cut down the appropriation that much below the estimates submitted for the cost of the work for this year, and those estimates were made carefully and down to the closest figure at which they could be made. The cost of the work is just what the estimates are.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Are the wages of plate printers for which you ask fixed by law?

Mr. JOHNSON. They are fixed by the Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. As these are the two items for which you ask a deficiency, I will ask you if it was not within the power of the Secretary or yourself, by reducing salaries, to come within the sum fixed by legislative enactment?

Mr. JOHNSON. It was probably technically within the power of the Secretary to do it, but whether it could have been done successfully is the question. The rates for plate printing are fixed, I might say, by agreement with the plate printers.

Mr. HENDERSON. Between them and the Secretary?

Mr. JOHNSON. Not exactly an agreement; but in case of a reduction in the rates the plate printers would be liable to strike and cause an interruption of the operation of the Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. Were not the wages of the plate printers recently reduced?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How much?

Mr. JOHNSON. Ten per cent on a certain class of work.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the aggregate saving by that reduction?

Mr. JOHNSON. My recollection is that it was $23,000. The saving for this year would be about half of that, or $11,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that $11,000 taken into account when you made your estimate for this year?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Has that been taken into account in making these estimates for this deficiency?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir; we must get this amount to come out even. We have been endeavoring to economize on our estimates to keep down the deficiency.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then your estimates were too low?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think they were a little bit too low.

The CHAIRMAN. If you can save that, and if you did not take into account the $11,000, your estimates must have been at least $11,000 too low.

Mr. JOHNSON. In making these estimates I anticipated a saving. I saw various places where I could save.

The CHAIRMAN. In the second item you asked this year for $495,400, and we gave you $469,000, which was the amount you spent last year minus $17,000 deficiency; and this year you ask $26,400 deficiency, which is $9,000 more than you spent last year. Why do you estimate for this increase?

Mr. JOHNSON. This year we are printing bonds, as you know, and that is very expensive printing Then the work on postage stamps has added to that. We have had to increase expenses in plate printing on account of making the postage stamps. It is taking it off one and putting it on another item.

Mr. CANNON. The matter of postage stamps is reimbursable.

Mr. JOHNSON. We have to pay the money out. I think you will see that we ask for less money this year than we did last.

The CHAIRMAN. Not on this item. Will you send a statement so that we can get it to-morrow, explaining this matter?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is for rental of office by the agent of the Post-Office Department. What office is that?

Mr. JOHNSON. The Post-Office Department has an agent and we have rented an office for that officer in the new building on F street, the Insurance Building. There is no suitable place in the Bureau for him.

Mr. SAYERS. What does that agent do, now that your Bureau has undertaken the printing of postage stamps?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not see that he has anything to do, if you ask me the direct question.

Mr. SAYERS. Why does your Department have to rent a room for him?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is a part of the agreement between the Treasury and the Post-Office Department, that we should provide office room for the agent of the Post-Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. This agency was established when the printing of stamps was done by private contract, and then the Government was compelled to have some one to represent it in receiving and distributing these stamps; but now that the printing of stamps is done by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, is it your judgment that there is any necessity whatever for this expenditure?

Mr. CANNON. I should think that it would be entirely proper that these stamps, which are to be distributed through the country, ought to be looked after by the Post-Office Department. That Department ought to attend to it and know where they go, or otherwise the Department should do the distributing; that is to say, the Post-Office Department takes the stamps and becomes responsible for them in their distribution to the 65,000 post-offices.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; the Post-Office Department never sees the stamps.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Bureau of Engraving and Printing, February 11, 1895.

SIR: In answer to your interrogatory as to why the appropriation for the plate printing for the fiscal year 1895, including the deficiency asked, should exceed the appropriation for the year 1894 by something over $9,000. I beg to say that such is not the case, which will be shown by the following table:

For fiscal year 1894:
Act of March 1, 1893	$469,000.00
Act of April 21, 1894	72,665.92
		$541,665.92
For fiscal year 1895:
Act of August 18, 1894	469,000.00
Deficiency asked	26,400.00
		495,400.00
Decrease in amount for 1895		46,265.92

The appropriations for compensation of employees for the year 1894 were $440,549.47. The deficiency asked will make this appropriation for 1895 $419,800, showing a decrease in 1895 under the amount appropriated for 1894 of $20,749.47. The appropriations for materials and miscellaneous expenses are substantially the same for the two years. Notwithstanding the reductions which are thus shown, the number of impressions estimated to be produced in 1895 is substantially the same as was produced in 1894.

Very respectfully,

CLAUDE M. JOHNSON,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Chairman Subcommittee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, United States.

Supplemental hearings before subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations, consisting of Messrs. Sayers, O'Neil of Massachusetts, Brookshire, Cogswell, and Cannon of Illinois, in charge of sundry civil appropriation bill for 1896, concerning printing of postage stamps.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Bureau of Engraving and Printing, January 11, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st ultimo, inclosing interrogatories suggested by Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, relative to the manufacture of adhesive postage stamps by this Bureau, and to submit answers thereto.

I desire to say, in connection with said answers, and in accordance with your instruction to submit any additional information pertaining to this subject, that this Bureau submitted estimates to the Post-Office Department November 20, 1893, of the cost of printing adhesive postage stamps for the sole purpose of saving the Government unnecessary expenditure of money and of giving to the manufacture of about $50,000,000 worth of these stamps the additional security of the system of checks employed in the handling of the bank notes, bonds, and other securities of the country without additional cost.

These estimates were accepted and notice of the acceptance was given this Bureau about March 1, 1894, thus allowing but four months for preparation for this work, whereas the Bureau had expected at least seven months. The machines used in the manufacture of postage stamps in this Bureau are entirely new, of new pattern, and in several instances were invented by employees of the Bureau. The work of manufacturing the stamps was begun July 1, 1894, with, as before stated, an entire new outfit of machinery and without a single operative skilled in this particular work on the rolls of the Bureau. Therefore it devolved upon this office to educate a great number of people in this work and at the same time accomplish the manufacture of postage stamps in immense quantities to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department and of the people. It would therefore be unreasonable to expect that during the first six months of this great undertaking the same good results should be attained as would be shown at the end of the fiscal year in the annual report on the operations of the Bureau. In fact, it seems very unfair that under these conditions the Bureau should be required to make a statement upon which judgment of any kind is to be passed so soon after undertaking this work.

The advantage that would be gained in a statement of the cost of this work at a later period of the year is shown by the fact that from July 1 to November 30, 1894, the spoilage in printing, etc., was 21½ per cent, while during the month of December alone it was but 14.8 per cent. I anticipate that the spoilage in the next few months will be reduced to about 5 per cent, which will make considerable difference in the general cost of the work. There is no doubt that the more familiar the operatives become with the machinery and the more experience they have in the processes, the less will be the amount of spoiled work and the fewer the number of people required to do the work, which must result in a reduction of cost. The estimate submitted by this Bureau of the cost of printing the 1 and 2 cent ordinary postage stamps, which represent about 90 per cent of the whole amount of these stamps required, was 5 cents per 1,000 stamps, or $20 per 1,000 sheets. From a careful summary of the cost of producing these stamps to-day in this Bureau I find the total cost per 1,000 sheets to be $18.0178.

With certain contemplated improvements to the Bureau's machinery, some of which are now in course of construction, I can safely predict that the present cost will be reduced to a considerable extent, and while the experience of the past six months will show that this Bureau has spent more than the amount estimated for that period, I am gratified to say that said experience justifies the estimates made, and that the future will produce the full amount of saving promised when the estimates were submitted. It should be remembered that the difficulties have been so great at the commencement of this work that it has not been a question of cost so much as a question of supplying, from day to day, the stamps necessary for the business of the country, and that a great deal of the work has been done in over hours and at night, which is less productive of good results for the same proportion of expenditure than work done in the ordinary business hours. This condition, now that our operatives are trained to the work, will not exist longer than the present month, and after that time I am confident that the cost of this work will be reduced even below that of the present time.

The answers to the interrogatories submitted by General BINGHAM are as follows:

(1) The estimates submitted in 1885 by this Bureau for the manufacture of postage stamps was $0.0775 per 1,000 stamps. The estimate submitted in 1893 was as follows: Ordinary stamps, $0.05 per 1,000; postage due stamps, $0.0605 per 1,000; special delivery stamps, $0.114 per 1,000. The estimate of 1893 was submitted after the bids received by the Postmaster-General were opened.

(2) The estimate submitted in 1885 included a pro rata of the cost of superintendence and other items that would not be increased by the addition of the postage stamps to the work of the Bureau, while the estimate of 1893 covered only the cost of the additional labor and material required to execute the stamps.

(3) The cost of the additional labor and material required for manufacturing and issuing the stamps, as shown by the work actually done to December 31, 1894, is:

Wetting	$1,070.62
Plate printing	35,318.24
Examining	4,404.82
Gumming and perforating	22,865.94
Packing and issuing	4,860.20
Running machinery	2,877.18
Miscellaneous expenses	1,213.72
Total	72,610.72

No account is kept of the cost of the postage stamps apart from that of other work, but the additional expense on account of their manufacture can be ascertained from the accounts as kept.

(4) The general quality of the work done has been good, and there have been no special defects in the printing, perforating, or general workmanship. A few of the 2-cent stamps first issued were light in color, but this defect was at once remedied. The officials of the Post-Office Department made complaint as to the gumming of the stamps first sent to postmasters, and investigation showed that the gum applied was too thin and was absorbed by the paper to such an extent that sufficient deposit of it was not left on the surface of the stamps to adhere properly when applied to mailing matter. This condition of affairs was the result, in my opinion, of undue haste in the gumming of the stamps, caused by apprehension on the part of the postage-stamp agent of the Post-Office Department that the stock of stamps transferred from New York would be exhausted before those prepared by this Bureau would be ready for delivery.

Although I assured the Post-Office Department that the Bureau would be able to supply all demands for postage stamps, an order was issued that this Bureau should finish 10,000,000 stamps a day, which was a greater amount than the capacity of the Bureau at that time warranted. To accomplish this the operatives employed in gumming the stamps thinned the gum, with the result above indicated. The assignment to this work of inexperienced examiners who were entirely unfamiliar with the requirements and passed the thinly gummed sheets was another result of the undue haste referred to. The defect was not discovered until the stamps were issued to the postmasters and used to a certain extent by the people, but when brought to the attention of the Bureau was at once corrected. Since the 25th of October the stamps have been gummed to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department, and there is now no complaint as to any of the work on the stamps, except some imperfect perforation of the stamps, caused by the dies of the perforating machines being too much worn, and as the urgency of this work has required the operation of these machines day and night, there has not, until recently, been any opportunity to make the necessary repairs. The machines are now being furnished with new dies and no cause for complaint on this ground will any longer exist.

(5) The number of stamps spoiled in the course of manufacture up to December 31 was 291,821,700, and this is 19.6 per cent of the total number originally printed.

(6) The number of stamps of Bureau manufacture furnished to postmasters upon requisition of the Post-Office Department up to December 31 was 683,830,666. Of these 30,298,183 stamps were returned by the Post-Office Department upon complaint of postmasters as to their unfitness for use. The unfitness was due to the gumming only.

(7) The number of stamps of Bureau manufacture in the vault on December 31 was 395,466,589. Of this amount, 293,727,909 stamps were of the stock gummed prior to October 25 and were not being issued on requisitions, but it is believed that a very considerable portion of them are fit for issue, and it is the intention to have them examined and assorted when opportunity permits.

(8) The system of checks and balances in operation in this Bureau to prevent the abstraction of sheets by employees is the same that has been in operation here with regard to all the securities of the United States. The paper is required to be carefully counted and put up in packages of 1,000 sheets each at the mill where manufactured; is then shipped in cases to the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury; is then counted in that office and held for issue to this Bureau upon proper orders and requisitions. On the proper order being issued by the Post-Office Department, the amount of paper authorized is placed to the credit of this Bureau for each denomination, and, as it is needed, requisitions are made daily, specifying the number of sheets, the size, and the denomination for which intended. It is charged to this Bureau on the basis of the number of stamps of the denomination called for which can be printed upon the sheet specified, and this Bureau is liable for the face value of each of these blank sheets delivered to it.

On receipt of the paper by this Bureau it is carefully counted, prepared for printing, and held subject to the requisition of the printing division. Each day a specified quantity of paper is delivered to the printing division for each printer employed on the stamps. It is counted by the printing division and issued to the printer. On each press there is a mechanical device known as a register for recording every impression which is made by the press. Every impression so recorded is charged to the printer, and at the close of the day the number of impressions recorded by the register, the number of blank sheets delivered, and the number of printed sheets returned by the printer are compared, and, if they tally, he is relieved from further responsibility.

As each 200 impressions are printed they are taken from the press and sent to the examining division, where they are counted and entered to the credit of the printer on his pass book and on the entry book of that division. They are then spread on racks to dry. When dry they are counted and examined, and the perfect impressions are put up in packages of 100 sheets each, and these packages are combined into larger packages of 1,000 sheets each. The imperfect impressions are put up into packages in the same manner, and, after being canceled, are delivered to the division of loans and currency, office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and final receipt taken therefor.

The perfect impressions are pressed and again counted. They are then sent to the gumming room, gummed, straightened, pressed, and counted, and the day's work balanced. They are then examined, and those fit for perforation are put up in packages of 1,000 sheets each and sent to the perforating room. The imperfect sheets are canceled and sent to the Treasury Department, as above indicated. Those sent to the perforating room are perforated, separated into sheets containing 100 stamps each, and are taken from the machines directly to the counters, who count them. The perfect sheets are made up into packages of 500 sheets, or 50,000 stamps each, each hundred sheets being separated by a printed marker. Each of these packages is counted by two counters, each of whom acts as a check upon the other.

The perfect sheets are tied up between boards in bundles of four packages each and are delivered to the finished vault. The imperfect sheets are canceled and delivered to the division of loans and currency, as above indicated. Each day a requisition is received from the Post-Office Department and the stamps necessary to fill it are counted out of the stock in the finished vault and are sent to the packing room. In this room the counters lay out the stamps necessary to supply each postmaster named in the requisition. The odd sheets in these separate orders are counted by the Bureau counters and verified by a counter representing the Post-Office Department. The stamps for each of these separate orders are placed in envelopes where the order is for 5,000 stamps or less, and when over 5,000 stamps, are put up in packages inclosed in strong manila wrappers. The envelopes are gummed and closed with a paper seal. The packages are closed with sealing wax and a paper seal is placed on each end. These envelopes and packages are then sent to the Washington City post-office and registered.

During the entire progress of this work, from the blank paper to the finished stamp, there is constant supervision and watchfulness to prevent inaccuracies, serious errors, or loss from theft. It is, however, impossible to guard against the dishonesty of a trusted employee at certain points.

(9) Some time after this Bureau had commenced to issue the stamps transferred to it from the former contractor claims were made by postmasters of shortages in the shipments of stamps made to them. At first it was supposed that these shortages were the result of errors, and efforts were made to trace the errors and rectify them.

On October 8, 1894, the most serious case was reported—that of the postmaster at Ionia, Mich.—who claimed to be 50,000 2-cent stamps short, the value of which was $1,000. Upon an examination of the original package returned by the postmaster, it became evident that his claim was correct, as the wrapper would not hold the full amount of 100,000 stamps which should have been sent to him. It was even then thought this was the result of a misshipment, and that some postmaster who should have received 50,000 stamps had, by an error in packing, received 100,000 stamps. In accordance with this theory the Third Assistant Postmaster-General sent out tracers to all postmasters who had been supplied on the same order with the postmaster at Ionia, Mich. These tracers had hardly been sent when information was received which led to the suspicion that an employee of this Bureau, William B. Smith, was abstracting stamps.

The circumstances, as they came to the knowledge of the officers of this Bureau, were immediately submitted the Secretary of the Treasury, with a request that the Secret Service Division of that Department be authorized to make full investigation. The case was placed in the hands of that division, and within a few hours facts were developed which warranted the arrest of Smith. It was found that he had offered for sale postage stamps at a very large discount, and that some of the stamps so offered were of the Bureau manufacture, which had not been issued to postmasters or placed on sale, and which therefore could not have come into his hands except by theft. Smith was at once arrested.

William B. Smith, the principal, was appointed a laborer and assigned to duty in this Bureau June 20, 1894. He was at first assigned to packing stamps in the packing room, and subsequently was transferred as a helper in the vault. It was his duty to put in their proper places the stamps delivered to the finished vault and to take out for delivery the stamps required to fill the daily requisition from the Post-Office Department. It was also his duty to keep a memorandum account of the stamps that were deposited in and taken from the finished vault. His compensation was at the rate of $470 a year for eight hours a day, with an allowance for such extra time as he actually made. His compensation averaged, during the time that he was employed in the Bureau, $40.43 a month. He was recommended by Hon. John T. Dunn, of New Jersey; Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL, of Virginia, and Mr. L. Cabell Williamson. His statement when he reported for duty was that he accepted the small place only as a temporary matter and until such time as he should be given a better one.

(10) The number of stamps stolen is as follows:

	Stamps.
Bank-note manufacture	52,100
Bureau manufacture	40,000

The stamps were missed from this Bureau before their loss was discovered by outside detectives, but no circumstance had transpired to throw suspicion upon any employee of this Bureau or to lead to the belief that stamps were being stolen until the information was received as above stated. The detective who first discovered that stamps were being offered for sale failed to communicate the fact to the officers of this Bureau, and thus some time was lost. It is difficult to determine the precise dates when the thefts occurred.

(1) The stamps could not have been missed sooner by this Bureau under any system of checks and balances that could be devised. These thefts were the result of dishonesty on the part of an employee who was supposed to be fully trustworthy, and who was therefore in a position to purloin the stamps, as he did, from packages which had been finally prepared ready for shipment to postmasters. The thieves were sent to jail pending action of the grand jury.

(12) The money appropriated to the Post-Office Department for the manufacture of adhesive postage stamps is used by that Department to pay the bills of this Bureau for the number of stamps completed and delivered by it, and the amounts of these bills are carried by warrant to the credit of the appropriations for this Bureau, and thus become available by it to pay the expenses of manufacturing and furnishing the stamps. This is done in accordance with the uniform practice of the Treasury Department for years. The internal-revenue stamps were formerly furnished by this Bureau under this system, and the Treasury notes of 1890 are now being furnished by it in the same way.

(13) The total floor space in use in the building of this Bureau for the manufacture, storage, and issue of the postage stamps is, as far as it can be separated from the other work, 9,537 square feet. This, however, includes the gumming room and the examining and straightening rooms connected with that process, in which about one-fifth of the work performed is internal-revenue stamps. This work is not all done in one room, not on the same floor, but in the different rooms of the building devoted to the processes involved in the work of the Bureau. The manufacture of postage stamps is, in fact, treated as a part of the regular work of the Bureau, and is performed in the same manner and in the same rooms as the internal-revenue stamps, United States notes and certificates, drafts, warrants, and other work for the different Departments of the Government.

(14) The estimate for outbuilding submitted last year was omitted from the estimates for this year by an oversight, and the attention of the Department was called to the matter prior to the submission of these interrogatories.

(15) The agreement between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General under which the work of preparing and delivering the postage stamps is now being done requires that the stamps shall be manufactured and issued under the supervision of an agent of the Post-Office Department, and that he shall be furnished suitable rooms for himself and his assistants. In accordance with this agreement, rooms were furnished the agent of the Post-Office Department in this Bureau, but, being located so near the space in which the stamps were being packed for shipment, they were not deemed suitable by the agent, and, at his request and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General, rooms were procured for him in the National Union Building, on F street, near Ninth street, this city. The rental of these rooms was authorized by Congress for a period of four months, and an appropriation was made for the expense thus incurred. These rooms were selected by the postage-stamp agent, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, which is sufficient to indicate that they are properly located for the purpose intended.

As an evidence of the fact that the work of manufacturing the stamps is progressing to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department, I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of a letter received from the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Very respectfully,

CLAUDE M. JOHNSON,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives United States.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1895.

DEAR SIR: After a careful inspection of the manufacture of postage stamps at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, I am convinced that there is no longer any doubt of the ability of the Bureau to furnish stamps in sufficient quantities to meet the demands of the Post-Office Department. I think, however, a reserve of several hundred millions should be accumulated as soon as possible, to provide against any contingency.

It affords me pleasure to state that much progress and improvement have been made in the manufacture of stamps. The printing, gumming, and coloring show a decided improvement. The perforation is still objectionable. The perforated line not infrequently runs into the engraved surface, and when torn apart presents a ragged edge. This defect should be remedied. I feel confident that in a short time you will be able to produce a finished stamp which will be beyond criticism.

Yours, very respectfully,

KERR CRAIGE,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. CLAUDE M. JOHNSON,
Chief of Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Washington, D. C.

I.

Copy of blank form of proposal and specifications issued to bidders in pursuance of public advertisement of the Postmaster-General, dated October 16, 1893, for contract for furnishing the Post-Office Department with adhesive postage stamps for and during a period of four years, beginning on the 1st day of July, 1894, said advertisement having been issued in compliance with the requirements of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Specifications submitted to bidders competing for the contract and showing the requirements for doing the work. Special attention should be given to the covenant and agreement on the part of the contractor and his sureties that on failure to do or perform any or all of the stipulations he shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $200,000, as well as the guaranty requirement of $25,000 in case of failure to enter into contract.

PROPOSALS FOR ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS.

The undersigned, —— ——, doing business as ——, in the city of ——, submit to the Post-Office Department, in conformity to the terms of an advertisement and specifications dated October 16, 1893, a printed copy of which is hereto attached and made part hereof, the following proposal for furnishing adhesive stamps during a period of four years beginning on the 1st day of July, 1894, the work to be done in apartments containing —— square feet of available space in the fireproof building known and designated as ——, on —— street, in the city of ——, and State of ——, to wit:

PROPOSALS FOR FURNISHING ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS.

[Advertisement.]

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 16, 1893.

Sealed proposals are invited from parties carrying on the business of steel-plate engraving and plate printing, or who have had experience in conducting that business, and will be received at this Department until 12 o'clock noon, on Wednesday, the 15th of November, 1893, for furnishing adhesive postage stamps of the following-named classes, in such quantities as may be called for by the Department during a period of four years, beginning on the 1st day of July, 1894, viz:

Ordinary postage stamps for the use of the public.
Newspaper and periodical stamps.
Postage-due stamps.
Special-delivery stamps.

Proposals must be made on the blank forms provided by the Department, securely enveloped and sealed, indorsed "Proposals for furnishing adhesive postage stamps," and addressed to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C. Bids delivered in person must be handed in at or before the hour above specified for the receipt thereof; otherwise, they will not be considered.

Blank forms of proposal, with full specifications, will be furnished upon application to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

WILSON S. BISSELL,
Postmaster-General.

Specifications—Furnishing adhesive postage stamps.

KIND OF STAMPS.

Bids are invited for each of the several kinds of stamps, as follows:
Ordinary stamps for use of the public.
Newspaper and periodical stamps.
Postage-due stamps.
Special-delivery stamps.

SIZES OF STAMPS.

The sizes of the stamps shall be the same as those of the corresponding kinds now in use, namely:

Ordinary stamps, three-fourths by seven-eighths ($\frac{3}{4}$ by $\frac{7}{8}$) of an inch for the engraving, exclusive of blank margin.

Newspaper and periodical stamps, a little over fifteen-sixteenths of an inch by one inch and three-eighths ($\frac{15}{16}$ by $1\frac{3}{8}$) for the engraving, exclusive of blank margin.

Postage-due stamps, a little over twelve-sixteenths of an inch by one inch ($\frac{12}{16}$ by 1) for the engraving, exclusive of blank margin.

Special-delivery stamps, a little over thirteen-sixteenths of an inch by one inch and seven-sixteenths ($\frac{13}{16}$ by $1\frac{7}{16}$) for the engraving, exclusive of blank margin.

To admit of proper perforation, the blank space or margin between the different stamps on a sheet shall be of equal width to that on the corresponding kinds now issued.

DIES, ROLLS, AND PLATES.

The dies and rolls now in use for furnishing postage stamps, being the property of the Government, will be turned over to the successful bidder as soon after the execution and approval of the contract as he may require them; and from such dies and rolls he must produce the necessary working plates with which to provide a sufficient supply of stamps of the several kinds and denominations to make deliveries promptly as called for from the beginning of the contract term. The working plates from which stamps are now being furnished will also, if found by the Department to be necessary, be turned over to the new contractor as soon as their use can be dispensed with under the present contract, either before or after the beginning of the new contract term.

The contractor will be required to keep in repair all dies, rolls, and plates from which the stamps are produced, and to renew them whenever required.

The several series of stamps comprehended in these specifications are now made up—

The ordinary stamps, of 11 denominations.
The newspaper and periodical stamps, of 24 denominations.
The postage-due stamps, of 7 denominations.
The special-delivery stamps, of 1 denomination.

It is not likely that any of the designs of the newspaper and periodical, the postage-due, or the special-delivery stamps will be changed during the existence of the contract. As to changes in the series of ordinary stamps, nothing

*When the bidder is a partnership or firm, the names of all the persons composing it must be signed to the proposal or embodied therein.

†To be signed by a district or circuit judge of the United States, or by a United States district attorney.

positive can be now stated, except that the present 30 and 90 cent denominations will probably be at once abandoned, and four new denominations—50 cents, $1, $2, and $5—adopted. In this event the contractor will be required to get up drawings of appropriate designs, subject to the approval of the Department, and to have the necessary dies, rolls, and plates made in time for printing when the contract term begins.

It is to be distinctly understood that the Postmaster-General reserves the right to change the designs of any of the stamps whenever he may deem it proper, or to add new denominations, and in any such case the contractor shall prepare the necessary drawings, dies, rolls, and working plates without cost to the Department.

All the work in connection with the preparation, renewal, and repair of the dies, rolls, and plates shall be done under the immediate supervision of the contractor and of the Government agent, and in accordance with such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

The contractor shall not manufacture or permit to be manufactured by any person in his employ any dies, rolls, or plates for producing postage stamps, except such as may be required for his use in carrying out the contract, and he shall be liable in damages for the unauthorized manufacture of such dies, rolls, and plates, and for the production of stamps therefrom. He shall be responsible for the safe-keeping of the dies, rolls, and plates while in his use or custody; when not in use they shall be safely stored and kept in such manner and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

All dies, rolls, and plates made or used at any time in filling the contract shall immediately become the absolute property of the United States, and, together with those that may be turned over to the contractor, shall be delivered in good working order to the Postmaster-General, or his authorized agent, whenever demanded.

Worn-out or discontinued plates may be required to be canceled or destroyed at the discretion of the Postmaster-General, under such regulations as he may prescribe.

COLORS OF STAMPS.

The colors of the stamps at the outset shall be the same as those of the corresponding kinds now used; but the Postmaster-General shall have the right to change the colors whenever he may think proper, to do so, provided that in any such changes the contractor shall be compensated for any extra expense thereby involved; and also provided that if less expensive colors be selected, the Department shall be credited with the reduction in cost, the amount of such increase or reduction to be determined by the Postmaster-General. Aniline colors shall not be used.

New denominations, when introduced, shall be of such colors as the Postmaster-General may select.

MODE AND QUALITY OF PRINTING.

Proposals should comprehend the furnishing of stamps printed on both hand-roller and steam-power presses, as follows:

No. 1. For stamps printed on hand-roller presses.

No. 2. For stamps printed by steam-power presses which require a portion of the work, such as wiping and polishing, to be done by hand.

No. 3. For stamps printed by presses upon which all the work is done by steam power.

After the proposals shall have been received and opened, the Postmaster-General will determine under which of these items he will award the contract.

The printing shall be done from hardened steel plates, engraved in the highest style of the art of steel engraving, and shall be subject in every respect to the approval of the Postmaster-General or his duly authorized agent.

PAPER, GUMMING, PERFORATIONS, ETC.

The paper from which the stamps are to be printed must be run and calendered to a uniform thickness, each sheet to be fair, perfect, and free from creases and folds, and it shall be equal in quality, sizing, finish, and tensile strength to that of the samples attached to these specifications. The paper may be required to be watermarked, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, with such design of watermark as he shall approve. The stamps shall be well gummed with the best quality of adhesive gum uniformly laid on. The stamps shall be perforated in the best manner, so that every stamp may be readily detached for use. The sheets shall be well pressed and suitably packed or put up, so as to prevent them from adhering together—each sheet of the finished work to contain not more than 100 stamps. The stamps shall be subject in every respect to the approval of the Postmaster-General or his duly authorized agent, and his right of rejection shall be absolute. All spoiled and rejected stamps shall be effectually canceled by and at the expense of the contractor, in such manner as the Postmaster-General may direct, and shall then be turned over to the Postmaster-General or his duly authorized agent for destruction.

BUILDING, PLACE OF MANUFACTURE, ETC.

The stamps will be required to be manufactured in a fireproof building and in apartments distinct from those in which any other work is done, and the premises shall be fitted up with a fire and burglar proof safe or vault, to be specially provided for storing the finished stamps: the said building, apartments, and safe or vault to be subject to the approval of the Postmaster-General. Suitable provision will also be made by the contractor for the safe-keeping on the premises of the stamps while in course of preparation, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General or his duly authorized agent, and subject to his approval. The building must at all hours of the day and night be policed or guarded in such manner as the Postmaster-General shall require; and the contractor, his employees, and agents shall conform to such regulations as the Department may from time to time adopt for the security of the Government. Each bidder will be required to designate in his proposal the building in which he proposes to manufacture the stamps, and the quantity of space to be devoted to the purpose.

AGENT—OFFICE ROOMS—INSPECTION.

A resident agent and inspector of the Department will have supervision of the manufacture, storage, and issue of the stamps, and he shall at all times have full and free access to the apartments, safes, and vaults where the stamps are manufactured and stored, for the purpose of inspecting them. The Postmaster-General shall also have the right at any time to cause an inspection to be made, by any agent or agents whom he may specially designate for the purpose, of the apartments, safes, and vaults used for the manufacture and storage of stamps, and of the stamps in course of manufacture or in stock.

The contractor shall furnish the resident agent of the Department and his clerks suitable and properly furnished office rooms connected with the premises on which the stamps are made, for the transaction of the business of the agency, without cost to the Government.

STOCK ON HAND.

The contractor will be required to have at the beginning of the contract term a sufficient stock of the several kinds and denominations of stamps to meet the requirements of the Department, and thereafter he shall at all times keep on hand such a quantity of finished stamps as will suffice to promptly meet the orders of the Department, and to provide against any and all contingencies that may be likely to occur during the existence of the contract; the stamps to be held subject to the control of the Postmaster-General or his duly authorized agent or agents. The Postmaster-General, moreover, shall have the right to require the contractor, at any time or times during the existence of the contract, to provide an extra quantity of stamps, not exceeding a supply for three months. The contractor may be required to continue the issue after the close of the contract term of all stamps ordered by the Department during its existence.

The contractor shall faithfully account to the Postmaster-General, or his duly authorized agent, for all stamps printed or produced by him, and he shall be liable in damages for the theft, misappropriation, or loss, before they leave his custody, of any stamps that may be manufactured by him or come into his hands as contractor.

The Postmaster-General reserves the right to impose a fine upon the contractor, in such sum as he may deem proper, to be deducted in the settlement of accounts, for the failure to have on hand at any time a sufficient supply of stamps to promptly meet the demands of the Department.

The Postmaster-General also reserves the right to impose a fine, in such sum as he may see proper, for errors made by the contractor in the count of stamps when issued to postmasters, whereby either a greater or less number or a greater or less value shall be sent than the orders of the Department call for.

In the event that the exigencies of the public service shall require the acceptance by the Department of any stamps which, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General or of his duly authorized agent, are not fully up to contract requirements, the right is reserved to the Postmaster-General absolutely to fix such price therefor, less than the regular price, as may seem to him just and reasonable under all the circumstances; and payment at this rate shall be a complete discharge of all liability on the part of the Government for such stamps.

On failure to promptly furnish, when called for, any of the stamps covered by the contract, the Postmaster-General reserves the right to cause them to be manufactured and furnished by such parties as he may select: and if a greater price be paid than that fixed by the contract for like articles, the difference shall be charged to the contractor in the settlement of accounts. Failure to furnish stamps promptly after they shall have been ordered may be regarded by the Postmaster-General as a sufficient cause for the annulment of the contract.

Should the contractor, in the performance of work under the contract, make unauthorized use of any machinery, or material, or other thing on which a patent has been granted by the United States, the Government is to be made free of all liability for such infringement.

PACKING—BLANKS.

When fifty or more sheets of stamps are required to be sent to any address, they must be packed in strong binders' board boxes, bound on the edges and corners with muslin, and enveloped in two thicknesses of strong manila paper; but when less than that number are required to fill an order they shall be inclosed in strong manila envelopes equal to those now in use for the same purpose; such envelopes, as well as blank labels of directions for the wrapped packages, to be furnished by the contractor and addressed by the agent. All the wrapped packages and the envelopes inclosing stamps shall be securely sealed with wax and impressed with a stamp of special device, or securely fastened with a paper seal of special design, subject to the approval of the Postmaster-General or his duly authorized agent. The contractor shall also furnish all blanks required to be inclosed with the stamps.

DELIVERY.

Delivery of the stamps will begin on the 1st of July, 1894, and thereafter they shall be furnished in such quantities as may be ordered by the Department, daily or otherwise, to fill the requisitions of postmasters, every lot to be put up separately for mailing.

The stamps may be required to be delivered by the contractor in separate packages, as above provided for, at the post-office in the place where they are manufactured, or at such other post-office in the immediate vicinity of the place of manufacture as the Postmaster-General may direct, and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

STOCK ON HAND AT EXPIRATION OF CONTRACT.

The Department will, after satisfactory inspection, accept and pay for, at the regular contract prices, the stock of stamps that may remain on hand at the close of the contract term; and the contractor may be required, at the discretion of the Postmaster-General, to continue the issue of such stamps until they shall be exhausted, subject to all conditions of the contract; but provided that such stock shall not exceed in quantity the average requirements of the Department for a period of one-half of one-quarter of a year. Any surplus over that quantity may be destroyed, at the discretion of the Postmaster-General, without any compensation therefor. The right is also reserved to the Postmaster-General to authorize the issue by the present contractors of such stamps as may remain in their hands at the close of their contract, and the new contractor shall not be entitled to damages on account of such issue.

REPORTS.

The contractor will be required to report weekly or otherwise, under oath, and in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, the number, denomination, and kind of stamps manufactured (finished, unfinished, and spoiled), the number issued, and the number available for issue.

AWARD—FORM OF BIDS.

The contract will be awarded, as a whole, to the lowest responsible bidder, on the basis of the number of the several kinds of stamps issued during the year ending June 30, 1893, as follows:

Ordinary stamps for use of the public	2,750,293,090
Newspaper and periodical stamps	4,171,091
Postage-due stamps	18,101,960
Special-delivery stamps	3,528,070

The amount of a bid will be ascertained by multiplying these figures by the prices bid respectively for the several kinds of stamps under each item comprehended in the blank form of proposal herewith, and then severally aggregating the results. It must be understood, however, that the above-stated issues are given merely as a basis for making the award, and that the contractor will be required to furnish all the stamps of the several kinds and denominations that may be called for by the Department during the contract term. Should the use of any kind or denomination be discontinued, the contractor will not be entitled to compensation on account of such discontinuance.

Each bidder must submit a proposal for furnishing stamps of all the above kinds; and his proposal should comprehend also the furnishing of stamps printed by one or more of the several modes of printing hereinbefore set forth, and described in the form of proposal. The prices named in the proposal shall include everything required to be done and furnished as set forth in these specifications. In determining upon the award, the Postmaster-General reserves the right to make a selection from among the several classes of bids specified. Preliminary to an award, the bidder will be required to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General, within ten days from the date of notice given him to do so, that he either has in his possession or is able to procure within a reasonable period all suitable and necessary facilities with which to properly commence and carry on the contract. If the Postmaster-General shall be satisfied of the inability of a bidder to perform the contract, he may, in his discretion, decline to accept the bid, without notice,

In case it should be decided by the Secretary of the Treasury to submit bids or estimates for doing the work and furnishing the stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the Postmaster-General reserves the right to make award under said bids or estimates, if they should be found to be lower or more advantageous to the Government than the bids submitted by private bidders, the work to be performed in such event in general conformity to these specifications, under such regulations as may be adopted by the Postmaster-General with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury.

PROPOSALS—AGREEMENT—BOND.

Each proposal must be signed by the individual or partnership making it, and when made by a partnership the name of each partner thereof must be disclosed; and it must be accompanied with a guaranty, signed by at least two responsible guarantors, that the bidder shall, within ten days after being called upon to do so, execute a contract, with at least two good and sufficient sureties of the character and to be certified as hereinafter required, to furnish promptly and in quantities as ordered the article or articles to be furnished by him, and faithfully and diligently to keep, perform, and abide by each and every of the requirements, provisions, and terms of such contract, and these specifications to be thereto annexed, the responsibility and sufficiency of the signers to such guaranty to be certified to by a district or circuit judge or a district attorney of the United States; and by such contract the contractor and his sureties shall covenant and agree that in case the said contractor shall fail to do or perform all or any of the covenants, stipulations, and agreements of said contract on the part of the said contractor to be performed, as therein set forth, the said contractor and his sureties shall forfeit and pay to the United States of America the sum of $200,000, for which said forfeiture the said contractor and his sureties shall be jointly and severally liable, as fixed, settled, and liquidated damages, and not as a penalty to be sued for in the name of the United States. Such sureties shall justify their responsibility by affidavit, showing that they severally own and possess property of the clear value in the aggregate of $400,000 over and above all debts and liabilities and all property by law exempt from execution, to be sworn to before a district or circuit judge of the United States, and to be approved by him or by a district attorney of the United States.

If the bidder to whom the first award may be made should fail to enter into a contract, as herein provided, or if after entering into contract it should be annulled by the Postmaster-General because of the contractor's inability to properly begin work under it, then the contract may be let to the next lowest responsible bidder, if not deemed too high by the Postmaster-General, and so on until the required contract is executed; and such next lowest bidder shall be required to fulfill every stipulation embraced herein as if he were the original party to whom the contract was awarded.

The contract will also provide that if at any time during its continuance the sureties, or either of them, shall die or become irresponsible, the Postmaster-General shall have the right to require additional and sufficient sureties, which the contractor shall furnish to the acceptance of the Postmaster-General within ten days after notice; and in default thereof, the contract may be annulled.

RESERVATIONS.

The Postmaster-General reserves the right to reject any and all bids if, in his judgment, the interest of the Government shall require it; also the right to annul the contract when made, if the contractor shall fail to properly begin work under it, or if there shall be a failure at any time to perform faithfully any of its stipulations, or in case of a willful attempt to impose upon the Department stamps inferior to those required.

The contract can not in any case be lawfully transferred or assigned.

PAYMENTS.

Payments for stamps actually issued and delivered will be made monthly, after proper examination and verification of accounts.

Payments may be withheld by the Postmaster-General if it shall appear to his satisfaction that the contract has not been complied with in any particular.

EXTENSION.

Should the interest of the Government require, the contract may be extended for any period or periods beyond the time named, not exceeding three months in all, by order of the Postmaster-General, and the contract prices and all conditions herein set forth shall govern in such extended contract.

ADDRESS OF PROPOSALS.

Proposals must be made on the blank form hereto annexed, securely enveloped and sealed, indorsed "Proposals for furnishing adhesive postage stamps," and addressed to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

WILSON S. BISSELL,
Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., October 16, 1893.

COPY OF ORDER (NO. 18) OF POSTMASTER-GENERAL, DATED FEBRUARY 21, 1894, AWARDING TO THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING THE WORK OF FURNISHING ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS TO THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT FOR AN INDEFINITE PERIOD, AND REJECTING THE PROPOSALS OF PRIVATE BIDDERS SUBMITTED IN PURSUANCE OF PUBLIC ADVERTISEMENT DATED OCTOBER 16, 1893, AND IN COMPLIANCE WITH THE REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 3709 OF THE REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES, FOR CONTRACT FOR FURNISHING THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT WITH ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS FOR AND DURING A PERIOD OF FOUR YEARS, BEGINNING ON THE 1ST DAY OF JULY, 1894.

No. 18.—Order of Postmaster-General awarding work of furnishing adhesive postage stamps to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

No. 59.] FEBRUARY 21, 1894.

Ordered: It appearing to the Postmaster-General that the interest of the Government requires it, it is hereby ordered that the proposals received at this Department on the 15th of November, 1893, for furnishing adhesive postage stamps during the four years beginning on the 1st day of July, 1894, be all rejected, and that the work of preparing and furnishing such stamps be done by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, upon the basis of its estimate transmitted through the Secretary of the Treasury.

Memorandum of agreement between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, relative to the furnishing of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

1. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing is to manufacture, substantially after the manner of manufacturing now in vogue, furnishing the necessary labor and materials therefor, and in all respects subject to the approval of the Postmaster-General or his authorized representatives, all the adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, of the kinds and denominations now in use or hereafter to be adopted, that may be called for by the Post-Office Department during the period of four years from the 1st of July, 1894; and it is to keep constantly on hand a stock of all such stamps sufficient to promptly meet the wants of postmasters as communicated in orders of the Department.

The several kinds of these stamps now in use and to be furnished are known as—

Ordinary postage stamps.
Newspaper and periodical stamps.
Postage-due stamps,
Special-delivery stamps.

2. The stamps in general are to be turned over daily to the agent of the Post-Office Department upon formal orders sent to him by the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, embodying the needs of postmasters throughout the country, and in such quantities as may be therein specified, each lot of the several kinds and denominations for any one postmaster to be put up separately for mailing. After verification by the agent, and when these packages are all securely sealed, addressed, and ready for mailing, they are to be placed in secure iron boxes, locked, and taken to the Washington City post-office for dispatch to their several destinations by registered mail. Deliveries of stamps will also comprehend such as may be turned over to the Bureau on or before the 1st of July, 1894, from the stock of stamps made up to that time by the American Bank Note Company, the present contractor for furnishing stamps.

3. When fifty or more sheets of stamps are required to be sent to any address they are to be packed in strong binder's-board boxes, bound on the edges and corners with muslin, and enveloped in two thicknesses of strong manila paper; but when less than that number are required to fill an order they are to be inclosed in strong manila envelopes equal to those now in use for the same purpose; such envelopes, as well as blank labels of direction for the wrapped packages, to be furnished by the Bureau and addressed by the postage-stamp agent. All the wrapped packages and the envelopes inclosing stamps are, after verification by the agent, to be securely sealed with wax and impressed with a stamp of special device, or securely fastened with a paper seal of special design, subject to the approval of the Postmaster-General. The Bureau is also to furnish blank invoices for transmission with the stamps, intended to be signed as receipts by the postmasters to whom the stamps are sent, which invoices or receipts are to be filled up properly by the agent and inclosed with the stamps before sealing. Any other blank forms or circulars that may be found necessary to inclose with the packages of stamps are also to be furnished by the Bureau. Whenever necessary the stamps are to be so wrapped in paraffin paper as to prevent their adhesion during transmission, the wrapping to be similar to what is now done.

4. The Bureau is to furnish to the agent of the Post-Office Department, contiguous to the rooms where the stamps are to be packed, suitable and properly furnished quarters for himself and the employees under him, and to give him every facility for superintending the manufacture, packing, and delivery of the stamps. He is to be the general medium of intercourse between the Post-Office Department and the Bureau, is to have the right to look generally after the interests of that Department connected with the making and issuing of stamps, and is to be subject only to its orders.

5. The Bureau is to keep securely all the stamp dies, rolls, or plates now in existence that have been or may be turned over to it, and it is to make new ones whenever necessary, and to keep all of them in proper repair, constantly ready for use. All such dies, rolls, and plates are to be regarded as the property of the Post-Office Department, and are therefore to be disposed of as the Postmaster-General may at any time direct. The Postmaster-General is to have the right to order changes of design for any of the stamps whenever he deems it proper, to discontinue any denomination or kind of stamps, to change the colors thereof, and otherwise to do as under the law or practice he may now do; and the Bureau is to conform to his wishes in all such cases.

6. The Bureau is to make regular weekly reports in detail to the postage-stamp agent, showing the kinds and denominations of stamps manufactured, issued, and on hand, and the number spoiled. And all spoiled stamps are to be destroyed weekly, under the supervision and with the cooperation of the agent.

7. At the end of every month accounts are to be rendered to the postage-stamp agent by the Bureau, showing the number and kinds of stamps delivered during the month, whereupon, after such accounts have been verified and approved by the agent, the Post-Office Department is to pay the Bureau by warrant on the United States Treasurer, the cost of manufacture at the following rates:

	Cents.
Ordinary postage stamps a thousand	5
Newspaper and periodical stamps a thousand	11.4
Postage-due stamps a thousand	6.65
Special-delivery stamps a thousand	11.4

8. This arrangement may be modified, with the consent of the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time when found to be desirable.

J. G. CARLISLE,
Secretary of the Treasury.
W. S. BISSELL,
Postmaster-General.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 9, 1894.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has made a point of order. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill desire to say anything on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. No; I am willing to let the Chair rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] desire to say anything on the point of order made against the amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but I supposed from the statement of the Chair that the matter of the point of order was held in abeyance until I had completed my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied his ten minutes on the merits of the case.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is there any limitation in the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood from the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. There was a limitation as to the other matter, but I do not think there is here, except the five-minute rule, and I think it was understood between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself, with consent of the Committee of the Whole House, that he should have such time as he desired.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understood the gentleman in charge of the bill, when we came to this paragraph there was to be general debate. That was the understanding when the bill was first submitted to the House.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that I have no desire to prevent his having such time as he wishes; but I suggest to him that it is now half past 4. Does the gentleman think we can complete the bill this afternoon? How much time does he think the discussion will take?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know.

Mr. CANNON. Well, how much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BINGHAM. I want a very few moments myself; but hope that I shall provoke a debate upon the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. I hope such time as the gentleman desires may be given.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed, if there is no objection.

Mr. HAGER. I object.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the question here involved is simply the throwing open to public competition of the printing of postage stamps. The practical question is, How can postage stamps be printed at the lowest cost?

Mr. Chairman, it may well be that if this point of order be pressed by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, who yesterday succeeded in having an appropriation of $30,000 inserted in this bill, without the report of any committee of the House in favor of it—it may be that if this point of order be pressed, against the interests of American labor, the Chairman will feel bound to sustain it.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to say to the gentleman that I am going to press it, and I am not going to withdraw it.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The information is satisfactory enough to me, though it was hardly necessary for the gentleman from Texas to have conveyed it at this time, especially as it came out of my five minutes. But I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that one amendment in the interest of American labor, providing for back pay for three years on leave of absence to the next of kin or legal representatives of printers employed in the printing office, was passed here without objection. Why? Because, although we all knew that this change of the existing law was there, we did not care to take a stand against the manifest justice of the proposition in favor of the interest of skilled labor.

Now, I speak in behalf of the skilled artisan, the skilled mechanic, in all our great cities; that is, in Chicago, Philadelphia, New York, and every city where men are employed by bank-note printing companies. I say that the statistics show that our bank-note companies can make these stamps at a cost varying from 5¼ cents to 5.85 cents per thousand, whereas the same number of postage stamps now cost the Treasury Department 9¾ cents. It is for this reason that I advocate the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], because the record shows that since the change has gone into operation there has been a spoilage account of 4,000,000 postage stamps. I say that the printing of these stamps should be thrown open to public competition, because in the large cities our skilled mechanics with plants that have been in existence for the last half century can do the work better and at less cost than the Government of the United States can do it; and it is for this reason the amendment should be incorporated into the statutes of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]——

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand the question is upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The Chair will say that there is much force in what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said respecting that section of the statute, and the bidding of different parties for the privilege of supplying those articles to the General Government; but it is the understanding of the Chair that the Attorney-General has made a construction of that by which the Bureau of Engraving and Printing can compete for the printing of these stamps. Now, as the Chair understands, the amendment further——

Mr. BINGHAM. That I do not dispute. A fair competition I do not dispute.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania prohibits the Bureau of Engraving and Printing from printing these stamps after 1897, which is clearly new legislation, inasmuch as it prohibits the Government from becoming a bidder in competition with private individuals; and for that reason the Chair will sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report this bill with amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. CANNON. For one moment, certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now submit the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Revised Statutes," on line 13, page 17, insert the following: "And provided, That no part of the moneys herein appropriated shall be expended or used for the production and issue of postage stamps, the cost of producing and issuing said stamps being reimbursable out of the funds appropriated to the Post-Office Department for procuring the same, and the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in his annual report shall state the cost by items of producing postage stamps apart from that of the other work done by his Bureau."

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to return to page 2, for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] to move an amendment which will explain itself.

There was no objection.

Mr. DANIELS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 12, page 2, add, as a new paragraph, the following: "For a brick addition, 1 story in height, extending northerly 16 feet from the northerly side and 10 feet from the easterly end of the United States post-office building in the city of Buffalo, and 73 feet in depth on the northerly side, and 43 feet on the easterly end of said building, a sum not exceeding $4,300."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this provides for a temporary building to be used in connection with the present building, pending the construction of the new post-office building in Buffalo. Having looked into the matter myself, as the gentleman from New York has done, we are satisfied that it is necessary in order to carry on the public service there, unless you rent a building outside.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield a moment to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], who desires to offer a substitute for the proviso in an amendment offered by him in Committee of the Whole, and adopted by the committee and reported to the House.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the proviso in the amendment already offered by me and adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used directly or indirectly for the support of the theological department of said university, nor for the support of any sectarian, denominational, or religious instruction therein: And provided further, That no part thereof shall be paid to said university until it shall accord to the Secretary of the Interior, or to his designated agent or agents, authority to visit and inspect such university and to control and supervise the expenditure therein of all moneys paid under this appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that that is an amendment which proposes to strike out the proviso in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky in Committee of the Whole and to substitute the language just read.

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be allowed to extend in the RECORD my remarks, which were somewhat limited by lack of time.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the third reading and passage of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not understand what disposition was made of the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS].

The SPEAKER. That proposition is pending.

Mr. CANNON. And the previous question will operate upon it as well as upon the bill and the other amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman offer that as a substitute for the amendment which was adopted in the Committee of the Whole, or as an amendment to the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers it as an amendment to the amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole. He moves to strike out the proviso in that amendment and to insert what has just been reported to the House.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked for on any other of the amendments?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I desire a separate vote on the amendment relating to the appropriation for Howard University.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote must be taken on that. There is an amendment to the amendment pending. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

The remaining amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] to strike out the proviso of the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole and substitute the proviso which has been read.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 58, noes 116 (more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative).

Mr. BAILEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The yeas and nays having been ordered, if the House should now adjourn would not this question be the first to be considered at the session to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not desire myself to make the motion to adjourn, but I suggest it to the gentleman from Illinois, as it is now within three minutes of 5 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. There is now a full attendance of members, and the vote will take but a short time.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 106, not voting 120; as follows:

Until further notice:

Mr. HEMENWAY with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. HADLEY with Mr. MCDEARMON.

Mr. MILLER of West Virginia with Mr. WOODARD.

Mr. REYBURN with Mr. MCKENNEY.

Mr. SETTLE with Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. MINER of New York.

Mr. HUBBARD with Mr. DOCKERY.

Mr. WHITE with Mr. CLARKE of Alabama.

Mr. EDDY with Mr. KYLE.

Mr. LEISENRING with Mr. STALLINGS.

Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. RANEY with Mr. COWEN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana with Mr. WASHINGTON.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. BARRETT.

Mr. DALZELL with Mr. CRISP.

Mr. WOOMER with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts with Mr. BELL of Texas.

On this vote:

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire with Mr. MOSES.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. LAYTON.

Mr. TRELOAR with Mr. HALL.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska with Mr. CLARKE of Alabama.

Mr. SPENCER with Mr. JENKINS.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BARRETT, is paired on this question with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay," and Mr. GROSVENOR, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON. My colleague from Tennessee, Mr. MCCALL, is absent on account of sickness. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MOZLEY. I wish to say on behalf of my colleague, Mr. TRELOAR, that he was present and voted "nay" on the first roll call. I believe his name was read with the names of those who are paired.

Mr. MADDOX. My colleague from Georgia, Mr. BARTLETT, is confined to his room to-day by sickness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated. [Applause.]

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 55) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near the entrance to Maurice River, New Jersey; and

A bill (H. R. 6408) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 941) granting to the Atchison and Nebraska Railroad Company and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, its lessee in perpetuity, a right of way over a part of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian reservations, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PITNEY, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCRANTON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

And then, on motion of Mr. CANNON (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Attorney-General of the payments made from the appropriation for protecting property in the hands of receivers of United States courts—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting estimates of appropriations to pay certain United States deputy surveyors—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, giving a statement in regard to an account between the Oklahoma and Iowa branches of the Sac and Fox (of Mississippi) tribe of Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an additional estimate of appropriation for the expenses of the Eleventh Census—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred House bill No. 5676, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 7862) to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces, accompanied by a report (No. 1066); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BARTHOLDT, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred House bill No. 9, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States, accompanied by a report (No. 1079); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TRACEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7468) to improve Jefferson Barracks and making an appropriation therefor, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1081); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DANFORD, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 58) providing for the inspection of immigrants by United States consuls, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1082); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1317) to grant certain lands to the city of Colorado Springs, Colo., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1094); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. SNOVER, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 7226) for the relief of Twyman O. Abbott. (Report No. 1067.)

By Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765 and interest. (Report No. 1068.)

By Mr. DOWNING, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 1021) granting relief to Albert Augustine for property taken for the Cayuse war. (Report No. 1069.)

By Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 5740) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate bond to Benjamin March, guardian of Ruth March. (Report No. 1070.)

By Mr. DENNY, from the Committee on Claims:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 3, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company, of the city of East St. Louis, of the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its assigns, successors, grantees, mortgagees, representatives, and successors in interest, to build, own, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto, as hereinafter described, across the Mississippi River, from some point suitable to the interests of navigation between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, to the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri: Provided, That the plan and location of the said bridge, so far as the interests of navigation are concerned, shall be recommended by a board of three United States engineers appointed by the Secretary of War and shall be approved by the Secretary of War. And it shall be the duty of the said board to give a public hearing in the city of St. Louis to all parties interested in the construction of said bridge whenever the design and drawings of said bridge and maps of location shall have been submitted to the Secretary of War as herein provided. Said board to give reasonable notice of time and place of such hearing and report its recommendations to the Secretary of War as soon thereafter as may be expedient. Said bridge shall be constructed for the purpose of providing for the passage of wagons, vehicles, street cars, animals, and foot passengers, and shall be deemed and taken as a public highway for the purposes named only, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth: Provided, That street-railway companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of cars over the same and over the approaches thereto, and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the street-railway companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in question.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraphic purposes.

SEC. 3. That in case the said bridge shall be built below the bridge heretofore constructed and known as the Eads Bridge, it shall be built with unbroken and continuous spans, and shall have at least two channel spans of not less than 750 feet clear width, each measured at right angles to the current at any and all stages of water; and the lowest part of said spans shall not be of less elevation in any case than 75 feet above the St. Louis city directrix; and in case the said bridge shall be built above the said Eads Bridge there shall be at least three channel spans of not less than 500 feet clear width, each measured at right angles to the current at any and all stages of water; and the lowest part of said span shall not be of less elevation in any case than 50 feet above the St. Louis city directrix plus the slope of the river from the foot of Walnut street, in the city of St. Louis, to the point where the bridge shall be built; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river.

SEC. 4. That the piers of all high-channel spans shall be built parallel with the current of the river at the stage of water which is most important for navigation, and riprapping or other protection for imperfect foundations which will materially lessen the waterway or which may injure navigation shall not be employed in the channel ways of the high spans, and piers which will produce cross currents or bars dangerous to navigation shall not be constructed; and if, after construction, any piers or protection walls are found to produce the above-mentioned effects the nuisance shall be abated or corrected by or at the expense of the persons owning said bridge, and the approaches to the channel spans mentioned in this act shall provide sufficient waterway for the passage of floods.

SEC. 5. That the persons owning, controlling, or operating the bridge authorized by this act shall maintain, at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, throughout the year, and during heavy fogs, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board shall prescribe, and shall also each day during the season of navigation have posted in a conspicuous place the clear headroom under the channel span on that day, the figures expressing this height to be readily visible to the naked eye from any point in the channel of the river for a stretch of 4,000 feet, of which 3,000 feet shall be above and 1,000 feet shall be below the channel span of the bridge.

SEC. 6. That no bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions removed at the expense of the persons owning or controlling such bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case shall be brought and tried in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois.

SEC. 7. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for a sufficient distance above and below the bridge, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at low, medium, and high water stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any changes be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 8. That in case the construction of the bridge authorized in this act shall not be commenced within one year and completed within five years from the date of its approval, then this act shall be null and void.

SEC. 9. That a principal reason for giving authority to build the bridge herein contemplated is to secure reasonable rates and tolls to that class of traffic described in this act for passage over the same, and to facilitate the transaction of business across the Mississippi River at the city of St. Louis.

SEC. 10. That said corporation may transport on said bridge and approaches thereto persons and property of the class described in this act, and may allow others so to do; and said bridge and approaches may be used for the transportation of all that class of persons and property described in this act, under such regulations as the directors of said corporation or the parties owning the said bridge may prescribe. The said corporation or individuals owning the said bridge may take, receive, and collect such rates and tolls for travel, passage, or transportation over said bridge and approaches as the directors or individuals owning said bridge may from time to time fix and establish: Provided, That the rates charged for such travel, passage, or transportation shall not exceed the following, to wit: For each foot passenger over 5 years of age, 3 cents; for every person on horseback, including horse, 7 cents; for every gig, buggy, carriage, cart, or wagon drawn by one animal, 10 cents; for every buggy, carriage, cart, or wagon drawn by two animals, 20 cents; for every buggy, carriage, cart, or wagon drawn by three animals, 25 cents; for every buggy, carriage, cart, or wagon drawn by four animals, 30 cents; for every buggy, carriage, cart, or wagon drawn by more than four animals, 5 cents extra for each animal; for each head of cattle, horses, mules, or other animals other than those attached to vehicles, 10 cents: for each head of sheep or swine, 5 cents. In case said directors or individuals owning said bridge shall operate a street-car line, or permit any street-car company to operate a street-car line on said bridge and approaches, the fare for a single passenger over the same for persons over 5 years of age shall, in either event, not exceed 5 cents.

SEC. 11. That said corporation shall have power to acquire title to lands, by condemnation or otherwise, as may be necessary for the construction of said bridge and approaches thereto, in accordance with the laws of the State or States wherein title to such property may be necessary to the construction of such bridge.

SEC. 12. That the said corporation, its assigns, successors, grantees, mortgagees, representatives, and successors in interest may, from time to time, borrow money at any rate of interest and issue bonds or other evidences of indebtedness bearing such rate of interest and payable at such time and at such place or places as may thereby be deemed advisable or proper, and may secure such bonds or other indebtedness by mortgage of such bridge and approaches and such tolls and of the privileges, rights, and franchises given by this act.

SEC. 13. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Section 1, by inserting after the word "passengers," in the twenty-eighth line of page 2, the words "and shall be constructed of sufficient strength and dimensions to provide for the passage over it of railway passenger and freight trains, and the accommodation of double tracks therefor."

Section 9, by inserting after the word "St. Louis," in the fifth line of page 7:

"The East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company or its successors or assigns shall not agree or assent to the consolidation of this bridge company with any other bridge company across the Mississippi River, or to the pooling of the earnings of this bridge company with the earnings of any other bridge company across said river, nor shall any person who is or may be a director, manager, or any other officer or agent of any other bridge over said river be a director, manager, or officer or agent of the bridge herein provided for: Provided, That if this provision of this act shall at any time be violated in any of these particulars, such violation shall, without legal proceeding, at once forfeit the privilege hereby granted, and said bridge shall become the property of the United States, and the Secretary of War shall take possession of the same in the name and for the use of the United States."

Section 10, by inserting after the words "to wit," in line 14, page 7, the words:

"For each freight car loaded or unloaded, $3; for each passenger car (exclusive of passengers riding therein), $3; for each passenger over 5 years of age crossing in any passenger car, 15 cents."

By adding after the end of section 13 the words:

"SEC. 14. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill carries any appropriation whatever?

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Not a dollar.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not desire to object to the consideration of the bill if I am given an opportunity to offer some amendments to it.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 25 the following:

"And provided further, That said bridge shall be located not less than 1½ miles and not more than 2½ miles south of what is known as the Eads Bridge."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTHOLDT) there were—ayes 4, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were adopted.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this bill ought not to pass. It passed the committee at a time when I was not present; and while it is reported here from the committee, it is not a unanimous report.

This is a proposition to put a third bridge across the Mississippi River within a distance not greater than 2 miles from each other. It is right across the harbor of the city of St. Louis. This is a harbor in which there is a rapid current, in which there is difficult navigation, in which there are scores of vessels constantly moving about; and it will be a serious impairment of the navigation of the river, as was shown by the testimony of a number of experts capable of discussing the matter appropriately and intelligently who appeared before the committee. The only reason assigned for the construction of a new bridge there is that excessive tolls are charged by the other two bridges already existing. This is an argument that does not have any force, because of the fact that this Congress has the absolute control of the entire matter; can take from the companies that operate the bridges the right to let them exist for a day; can modify the regulations in any way they please; can establish a schedule of rates, and give to the people the relief they ought to have from exorbitant charges without in any way impairing the navigation of the river.

I want to remind gentlemen that this is not a matter of interest to the city of St. Louis alone. It is a matter that affects the navigation of the entire Mississippi River, and is of deep interest to all persons engaged in that navigation.

Within the last ten years the United States Government has expended some $30,000,000 in its efforts to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River, and yet here is a proposition to put an impediment in the way of commerce, infinitely greater than any single impediment to be found on the entire river; three bridges within a distance of 2 miles in a crowded harbor with a current of from 4 to 8 miles an hour. It is absolute nonsense for any man to say that this bridge will not be a detriment and an impediment to the navigation of the river. Every man with an iota of common sense knows it must be, and yet this is the proposition involved in the pending bill.

I thought it due to the House that it should know the real situation and the facts involved, and for that reason I have seen proper to make this statement.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce says that this bill was reported from the committee at a time when a full committee was not present. That may be true, but nevertheless it was reported at a time when every member of the committee who was present voted to report the bill favorably to the House. This bill has passed this House once before. The sole object which it accomplishes is to reduce the charges for crossing the river. The present charge, for instance, is 35 cents for a one-horse vehicle. This fixes the maximum charges, and makes them about one-half to one-third the present rate.

So far as obstruction of navigation to the river is concerned, this bill provides that the bridge shall be located at a point to be selected by three river engineers appointed by the War Department, and if in their judgment it will obstruct the navigation of the river it will not be built. I ask who is better posted or better qualified to tell where the location of such a bridge should be than river engineers? That is their business. They are appointed by the War Department, and I take it that the Department will appoint competent engineers. The location is to be selected by them, after giving public notice for a public hearing in the city of St. Louis. And if, after that, reasonable objection can be made to it, then there will be no bridge built. It seems to me that an objection of this kind should not be presented here. If this location was left to me, it might be different; but it is left to three river engineers, to be appointed by the War Department, as I have stated.

Mr. HOPKINS. So that it is under the control of the Department anyway?

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. It is under the control of the War Department.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a very few words with reference to this bill, and to answer some of the statements made by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. HEPBURN].

This bill is offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY] for the purpose of bettering the conditions of traffic across the Mississippi River at St. Louis.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JOY. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. In your judgment, is it not entirely competent for Congress to correct every evil of which you complain, and to give to you every advantage in the way of fair rates that will be obtained through this bill? Can there be any question about the right of Congress to prevent these extortions of which you complain?

Mr. JOY. There may be no question about the right of Congress to do it, but it is a fact that these extortions have existed for fifteen years now, and I will state the additional fact that a bridge, called the Merchants' Bridge, was built with the express understanding and with a provision that it should never be under the control of the officers of the Eads Bridge. That bridge was to give a lower rate than we have now. That was the proposition; but it is a fact that that bridge is now owned and controlled by the Gould Bridge or Eads Bridge. These facts show me that while it is possible for Congress to correct these evils, it is not probable that it can be done. Every freight car crossing from East St. Louis to St. Louis pays an arbitrary charge of $5. Every passenger pays 25 cents or more going one way or the other. On the Merchants' Bridge they pay 30 cents and upward. This bill provides a forfeiture unless the rates are kept down to a maximum of less than 60 per cent of the present charges.

The business interests of the city of St. Louis demand the passage of this bill. The bridge, if built, will not be an impediment to river navigation. I have the statements of men who signed the protest that went before our committee, among others the statement of the president of the St. Louis and New Orleans

Anchor Line, a man who has been before another committee for a long time, seeking the improvement of the Mississippi River, Mr. Isaac M. Mason. His statement is that this bridge will inconvenience to a small extent, but will not impede or interrupt the commerce of the river past the city of St. Louis.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman a question to see if I understand this matter right. This is to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, upon an investigation and favorable report by the Engineer Department?

Mr. JOY. Yes; a bridge at a point which those engineers shall fix.

Mr. CANNON. Is there due provision made in the bill against the extortions now practiced?

Mr. JOY. There is a maximun fixed, which is less than 60 per cent of the present rate. They can not go above that maximum without forfeiting their charter.

Mr. CANNON. If that is what this means, I want to say that with the great State of Illinois just across from St. Louis, and the great commerce between my State and the city of St. Louis, I am heartily in accord with anything that will give us free access to that city, or access to it at a more reasonable rate than we have been compelled for many years to pay.

Mr. JOY. That is the identical and only purpose of the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time since I have been on this floor that I have found myself compelled to disagree with my colleague from St. Louis [Mr. JOY], and in this instance I only partly disagree with him. I thoroughly concur in his statement that the extortion practiced by the Eads Bridge and by the Merchants' Bridge should be stopped by additional franchises granted by Congress, although I think it may fairly be questioned, Mr. Speaker, whether Congress has any jurisdiction in the matter of rates. My understanding is that Congress has nothing to do with the question of constructing bridges, except in so far as pertains to the question of navigation; in other words, all we are called upon to determine is whether a bridge is an obstruction to safe navigation or not. But I thoroughly and entirely disagree with the gentleman, because I represent another section of the city of St. Louis. It is merely a local question. My friend and colleague [Mr. JOY] desires the bridge to be located in the district which he represents, near that part of St. Louis which already has a bridge, while South St. Louis, the district I have the honor to represent, has no bridge; and for that reason I presented to this House the other day a petition signed by 10,000 citizens and manufacturers in favor of the location of the third bridge in South St. Louis.

That location is the only location to which the river interests do not object. I think it ought to be understood by everyone within the sound of my voice that it is intended on the part of this company to build this bridge only two or three blocks north of the present Eads Bridge. A gentleman who has his all invested in river navigation, and is an authority on the question—Mr. Hoarstick, of St. Louis—appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and told them that if that bridge were located there it would seriously obstruct the safe navigation of the Mississippi. But, as is usual in committees, the gentleman from St. Louis being on that committee, by courtesy it was left to him to say where the bridge ought to be located. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY] says it ought to be left, and is left by the bill, to a board of army engineers to decide where the location shall be, but I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact, and I wish gentlemen would give attention to the statement I am going to make in this connection, that if that board of army engineers should report in favor of the location of the bridge in South St. Louis the company will refuse the charter which you are now asked to grant them.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Will you build the bridge if it is located where you want it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. If the military board located it in South St. Louis, why should not you be satisfied?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This charter would not be valid. We can not build a bridge under your charter.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. You can not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This bill authorizes an East St. Louis company to build the bridge; not us. And I desire to call attention to another contradiction, and that is in the third section of the bill. It reads as follows:

That in case the said bridge shall be built below the bridge heretofore constructed and known as the Eads Bridge, it shall be built with unbroken and continuous spans, etc.

Now, what is this provision brought into this bill for? It is well known that the company will not accept the charter if the bridge is located below the Eads Bridge, or in South St. Louis.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Does the bill say that?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Here it is.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Read it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (reading):

SEC. 3. That in case the said bridge shall be built below the bridge heretofore constructed and known as the Eads Bridge, it shall be built with unbroken and continuous spans.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. They do not say they will not build it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But you stated it before the committee. The authorized representatives of your company stated it at a meeting of the committee, that they will not accept the charter at the hands of Congress if the army engineers should report in favor of a southern location.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. If the army engineers should locate it at the point you wish to locate it, in South St. Louis, what would prevent the incorporators from building the bridge at the point they locate it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Nothing whatever.

Mr. GRAFF. Is there any provision in the bill which would prevent them from taking advantage of it if the army officers should locate the bridge at the point you think it ought to be located?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am only contending, Mr. Speaker, that this is not in good faith.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. TERRY. If this company that proposes to build this bridge is incorporated——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is incorporated.

Mr. TERRY (continuing). How can you take the name of that corporation and build it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly we can not.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Is there anything in this bill which provides that this bridge shall be built at any particular place?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Why can not they build it wherever they see fit?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They can not because the interests of navigation have to be considered.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Of course I would not want to interfere with the interests of navigation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill. [Laughter.] The Chair understood what was going on was merely a conversation between members. The House will be in order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of line 25 the following:

"Provided further, That said bridge shall be located not less than 1½ miles and not more than 2 miles south of what is known as the Eads Bridge."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I received yesterday telegrams of protest from the three great lumber interests at Keokuk, in my district, against the location of this bridge as proposed. We are spending multiplied thousands and millions of dollars to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River, and then special enterprises come in here to thwart the great national enterprise contemplated by our system of Mississippi River improvement. Sir, the great lumbering interests and the great shipping interests of the Upper Mississippi are a unit against the location of this bridge where it will be an obstruction to the navigation of that river, and I insist that this bill should not pass until due and adequate provision is made in its terms for the location of this bridge so that the navigation of the Mississippi shall not be hindered in the interest of a corporation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman who has just taken his seat and of the House, I desire to state that the river interests, the interests of navigation, are supporting my amendment. They are in favor of the location mentioned in that amendment, and therefore I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, the pending amendment is practically the same as the one that was offered a while ago by the same gentleman and defeated. If he desires to have a bridge located at the particular point he proposes, let him introduce a bill for that purpose. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MURPHY] has introduced a bill which he thinks is in the interest not only of his own people, but of the people of St. Louis and East St. Louis also. There is nothing in the provisions of that bill to prevent the War Department having full discretion as to the particular location of this bridge. The officers of the War Department are in a better position than we are in to be advised as to the best place to locate this bridge, and under the provisions of this bill as reported from the committee they have full power, in their discretion, to put the bridge exactly at the point where the gentleman from Missouri says it ought to be; but he now, finding fault with the decision of the committee reporting the bill in its present shape on the ground that the bridge is likely to be placed under the discretion given to the War Department at a point where it will injure navigation, proposes to put his own judgment against the judgment of the Department and to limit the discretion conferred upon the Department by the bill as originally introduced and as reported from the committee.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It seems to me that the judgment of the engineers of the War Department will be very seriously limited by the stand which this company takes in stating before the committee that if the bridge should be located south of the Eads Bridge it will not accept the charter.

Mr. GRAFF. But we were advised a little while ago that if the bridge is located on the other side the interest the gentleman represents is willing to build it.

Mr. HOPKINS (to Mr. BARTHOLDT). Your amendment, as I understand, seeks to defeat this legislation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understood you to state to my colleague that if the bridge was located down there the enterprise would not be carried out.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not intend to defeat this bridge.

Mr. HOPKINS. But I understood you to make that statement to my colleague, and if that is correct it certainly looks as if you are simply seeking to defeat this legislation.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to be misunderstood. I am in favor of a third bridge.

Mr. GRAFF. But are you not seeking to hamper and limit the discretion of the War Department? Is not that discretion wider under the bill as it stands than it would be if your amendment were adopted?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will say that my judgment about the matter was formed in the committee room, after I heard the statements and arguments of the gentlemen representing river interests. Those gentlemen stated that the only location to which they would have no objection was the one which I am advocating, South St. Louis.

Mr. GRAFF. Is it not true that you said that if the Department, under the discretion given in this bill, located the bridge at a point where you do not think that the parties for whom the bill is introduced wish it, but at a point you preferred, you were willing to build the bridge?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. There is nothing in the bill to keep you from incorporating a company at South St. Louis if the War Department in its discretion, after looking over the field, should locate it at the point which you favor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman understands that we could not use this charter. If it is granted to an East St. Louis company we South St. Louis people could not use it.

Mr. GRAFF. There is no particular company mentioned in the bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes; there is.

Mr. GRAFF. Well, there is nothing in the bill to prevent your obtaining the benefits of the charter. I understand you could obtain this charter should the members of this company mentioned not desire to build at the point finally located.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, again I call attention to section 3. I think it ought to be stricken out, because the company say that they will not build below the Eads Bridge. The question is on my amendment, and I ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to add just a word before the vote is taken on the amendment. Under the bill as reported, according to my understanding, the location of this bridge is to be determined according to the discretion of the War Department, upon the report of three Government engineers, selected by the Secretary of War. If the view of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is correct, then this bridge will be located by the Government engineers at the point he favors; but if those engineers, who are familiar with the river and all the points which have been mooted in this debate, choose to locate the bridge at some other place, they will, if this amendment be not adopted, have that privilege. It seems to me that in the interest of commerce this discretion ought to be left with the engineers who are to be selected to supervise the construction of the bridge. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BARTHOLDT, it was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MURPHY of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SEWERAGE SYSTEM AT FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution submitted by the War Department. It makes no appropriation. It simply relates to the flushing in connection with the sewerage system at Fortress Monroe.

Mr. PICKLER. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which the Clerk will read.

Mr. HULL. If it takes any time I will withdraw it.

The Clerk read the joint resolution to amend the act approved August 1, 1894, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, etc.

Mr. HULL. I think I can state this matter more quickly than it can be presented to the House by the reading of the report of the War Department. By appropriation already made there is provision for the construction of a sewerage system at Fortress Monroe. As that system is now rapidly approaching completion, it is necessary to have authority to sink this other well and to construct pumping works out of the present appropriation, so as to flush the sewerage system and complete it. That is all there is in the resolution. It is recommended by the Chief of Engineers of the War Department and has been considered informally by the Military Committee.

Mr. SAYERS. How came this resolution before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HULL. It was sent there by the War Department.

Mr. SAYERS. The matter properly belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HULL. Well, the Department sent it to us.

Mr. SAYERS. It ought to have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HULL. Of course, if the consideration of the resolution is objected to, I will withdraw it; but I really think there can be no good ground for objection.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I object to the consideration of the resolution; it ought to have gone to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being private bill day——

Mr. PICKLER. I understand that the unfinished business on the Private Calendar is the regular order.

Mr. HITT. Does the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] propose to go to the Private Calendar now? If that is the case, I shall have to interrupt him.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; except as to the unfinished business on the Private Calendar—the bills that have passed the Committee of the Whole and are now ready to have the previous question ordered upon them in the House. There are about twenty such bills, I think, that have not yet been acted on by the House.

Mr. HITT. Does the gentleman propose to have debate?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; there has been debate on all of these bills in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HITT. I am informed by gentlemen around me that there will be debate on several of these bills.

Mr. McCLELLAN and others. On all of them.

Mr. HITT. Gentlemen here tell me that these bills will lead to debate.

Mr. PICKLER. Not if the previous question is ordered.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the recent ruling on the subject has been, but formerly, for a number of years, the ruling was that such business as the gentleman from South Dakota refers to was taken up as first in order after the House came out of Committee of the Whole on Friday afternoon. Speaker Carlisle used to hold that way. I do not know whether there has been any change in the method of conducting this class of business. That was the former ruling.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had occasion to rule on this subject in the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. McMILLIN. I had not recalled the ruling, Mr. Speaker, when I spoke.

The SPEAKER. The ruling was that the bills which have come out of the Committee of the Whole were unfinished business, and therefore would have to be taken up before the House would go into Committee of the Whole again.

The particular case on which the ruling was given was not a pension case; but an examination of the authorities as to the origin of the pension evening makes it clear, in the opinion of the Chair, that the pension bills would be within the purview of that ruling, although the Chair reserves his judgment if gentlemen desire to be heard upon the question.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not making the point, Mr. Speaker, that that should not be the rule. On the contrary, I think the ruling is in accordance with the proper principle. But the practice, I believe, has been the other way.

The SPEAKER. The rule has been somewhat changed, as the gentleman will remember, in this Congress. The Chair thinks that the change in the rule obviates the doubt.

Mr. McMILLIN. The Chair is undoubtedly correct. I could readily see, after the provision of the rule was adopted, how that principle should prevail in the consideration of these matters, for it would seem entirely appropriate that the business which had been considered on a preceding day, and had reached a further stage of advancement, should come up first.

The SPEAKER. That seems to be the principle involved.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to call up the bills, Mr. Speaker, reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HITT. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota to the fact that I am informed by a number of gentlemen around me that they desire to debate some of the bills, and that it is very likely the consideration of them will take several hours. Of course I do not wish to antagonize his bills, but I feel it my duty to proceed with the consideration of the conference report on the Cuban question.

Mr. PICKLER. I think it the duty of the House to pass the private pension bills. Cuba can wait as well as the private pension bills. [Applause.] You have plenty of time for that.

Now, if it is the will of the House, of course no bill can be debated, because it is within the power of the House to order the previous question, in which event there will be no debate.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman forgets that even after the previous question there may be limited debate.

The SPEAKER. How?

Mr. McMILLIN. Not, of course, if the bill had been debated in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. All of these bills have been debated in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, this being Friday, and there being quite a number of private pension bills reported from the Committee of the Whole favorably, that these bills ought to come up first; and I hope the gentleman from South Dakota will call them up and move the previous question on them as they are reached.

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman can assure me that he will move the previous question when he calls up the bills, and that there will be no debate, of course I will not interfere.

Mr. PICKLER. I can not say what action the House may take, but if I can get recognition I will move the previous question. I was going to say that all of these bills have been debated in Committee of the Whole, the reports were read in full, and they were disposed of in committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

RACHEL PATTON.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ERDMAN) there were—ayes 127, noes 6.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). Two hundred members are present—a quorum; and the previous question is ordered.

The question recurring on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ERDMAN) there were—ayes 115, noes 42.

Mr. ERDMAN. I call for the yeas and nays. This is the case of a remarried widow, and we ought to have an opportunity of testing the sense of the House on the principle involved.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS HOLADAY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2326) granting a pension to Thomas Holaday, with an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The bill and amendment were read at length.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ERDMAN) there were—ayes 140, noes 0.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the objection, stating to the House that there is evidently a quorum present. [Applause.]

So the previous question was ordered.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, on a division (demanded by Mr. ERDMAN) there were—ayes 135, noes 4.

So the bill was passed.

LEWIS C. SCHILLING.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2224) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Schilling.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES W. RINEHARDT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2054) to correct the military record of Charles W. Rinehardt and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was read.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will it be in order at this time to have the reports read in these cases?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order. The report of a committee can be read by a member as a part of his remarks.

Mr. PICKLER. The reports have all been read, and the bills have all been considered in Committee of the Whole.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAMSON DURLEY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3234) granting a pension to Williamson Durley.

The bill, with an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILSON KALE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1836) granting an honorable discharge to Wilson Kale.

The bill was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS E. HOOVER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover.

The bill, with an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS WALSH.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.

The bill, with an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JEFFERSON FUESTON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3689) granting an increase of pension to Jefferson Fuesston, of Company M, Tenth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill, with an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE D. MOWATT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THEODORE WERNER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2142) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Theodore Werner.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH PORTER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3993) granting a pension to Joseph Porter.
The bill, with an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct a clerical error in line 5. It reads "Eighth New York," and it should be "Sixth." I ask unanimous consent to insert the word "Sixth" in place of the word "Eighth."
Mr. ERDMAN. I object.
Mr. PICKLER. Then I move that amendment, and I demand the previous question on the amendment and the bill to its passage.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the bill can not be amended in that way. What is the error?
Mr. PICKLER. It is a clerical amendment, to strike out the word "Eighth" and insert the word "Sixth." The previous question has not been ordered.
The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood it. The gentleman from South Dakota moves an amendment, and demands the previous question on the amendment and on the bill to its passage.
The previous question was ordered.
The amendment proposed by Mr. PICKLER was read, as follows:
In line 5 strike out the word "Eighth" and insert the word "Sixth."
The question was taken on the amendment; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. ERDMAN. Division.
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand a division on the amendment?
Mr. ERDMAN. Yes.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 145, noes none.
Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.
The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIANNA C. HALL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4182) to increase the pension of Georgianna C. Hall, with amendments.
The bill and amendments were read.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question will be considered as ordered.
There was no objection.
The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY ANN TRACY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy, with an amendment.
The bill and amendment were read.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question will be considered as ordered.
There was no objection.
The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN DALTON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3221) granting a pension to John Dalton, with amendments.
The bill and amendments were read.
The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA A. TAFT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 577) granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft, with amendment.
The bill and amendment were read.
The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HORACE TOWNSEND.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 136) granting an increase of pension to Horace Townsend.
The bill was read.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.
The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT ELLIS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 708) to increase the pension of Albert Ellis.
The bill was read.
Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.
The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. ERDMAN. Division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes none.
Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-eight gentlemen are present. The ayes are 108, the noes none—the ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered.
Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. RICHARDSON. The Speaker has announced that 178 is a quorum. One hundred and seventy-nine is a majority, unless the Chair intended to change a ruling he has made.
The SPEAKER. The Chair does intend to change it. [Applause on the Republican side.]
Mr. RICHARDSON. This is a mere parliamentary inquiry. I make no issue about it and gentlemen need not get excited. I understand the Chair in the Fifty-first Congress——
A MEMBER. I understand that other gentlemen have come in.
Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). I do not make any point, as there would be no difficulty in getting a quorum, but there is a question of practice involved. The ruling of the Chair, as I remember it, was, the Chair held in the Fifty-first Congress that it took 179 members to make a quorum of the House of Representatives, and he now rules that 178 members, which is one less than a majority, is a quorum. That would seem to be a new ruling, and therefore I call the attention of the Chair to it simply. I am making no point on it.
The SPEAKER. The Chair took occasion at the close of the Fifty-first Congress to put on record his views in regard to the ruling which he made and to which the gentleman from Tennessee alludes. At that time the Chair, as was announced to the House, out of abundant caution, the question having risen somewhat suddenly, or rather the question which was in the Speaker's mind having arisen somewhat suddenly, made a decision which he intended should be a safe one, which was that 166 was a quorum, instead of 164, which the Speaker now believes to have been a quorum. In that expression of his views, which were presented to the House, and which will be found in the RECORD, the Speaker stated that he agreed with the rulings which had previously been made by various Speakers and the ruling which was made in the Senate after full deliberation, if the Chair recollects aright, under the lead of the late Reverdy Johnson, whose reputation as a lawyer has always been very high. The Chair thinks the ruling should have been 164 instead of 166; but, as it was made to the disadvantage of the Speaker's side of the House, he thought it safe to make——
Mr. RICHARDSON. My only object was to have a ruling.
The SPEAKER (continuing). The Chair desires to make that ruling.
Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, if the question should ever become an important one, I reserve the right to present some views in support of the ruling that the number of living members is the basis upon which a quorum must be counted, and I shall cite the opinion of one of the leading supreme courts of the country where this identical question was heard and determined.
The SPEAKER. The Chair made the ruling to which the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has called attention at a time when there was considerable confusion. In making it the Chair announced some doubt as to the proper ruling, and subsequently made a statement to the House of the opinion which he entertained after careful examination of the question.
The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH DESHLER WHITING.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1050) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Deshler Whiting.
The bill was read.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon that question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that it is better to let the bill be recommitted, according to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

The motion of Mr. PICKLER was agreed to, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

ISAAC N. WILLIAMS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Isaac N. Williams.

The bill, with the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered.

The amendments were adopted, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES P. HURLEY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3216) granting an increase of pension to James P. Hurley.

The bill was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HENRY V. ANDREWS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2605) granting a pension to Henry V. Andrews, of Fulton County, Ill., a survivor of the Black Hawk war.

The bill was read, with the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. EUNICE IDA RHOADES.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3749) to increase the pension of Mrs. Eunice Ida Rhoades.

The bill was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HELEN A. JACKMAN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman.

The bill was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL H. J. CROUCH.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5140) for the relief of Michael H. J. Crouch.

The bill was read.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY B. HOUK.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4606) to grant an increase of pension to Mary B. Houk.

The bill was read.

An amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question being on the passage of the bill——

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 115, noes none.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER (after a count). There are 183 gentlemen present—a quorum. On this question the ayes are 115, the noes are none, and the bill is passed.

ELIZA WILSON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Eliza Wilson.

The bill was read.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARIA E. WILSON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1181) for the relief of Maria E. Wilson.

The bill was read.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JANE WEBSTER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2621) to increase the pension of Jane Webster, widow of Joel Webster.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the recommittal? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WILLIAM F. GOOD.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1634) to grant a pension to William F. Good, Company L, Tenth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill and amendment were read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH A. COOPER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2234) granting a pension to Joseph A. Cooper.

The bill having been read, it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER having put the question on the passage of the bill, it was declared passed.

Mr. ERDMAN. I think there ought to be a division on this vote.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 109, noes 1.

Mr. ERDMAN. I make the point of no quorum. There ought to be a quorum to pass on this important measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the impression that a quorum is present, but will count the House.

After a count, the Speaker declared 184 members present.

There being a quorum, the bill was accordingly passed.

MOLLIE CRANDALL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 507) to pension Mollie Crandall.

The bill was read.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the previous question.

Mr. TALBERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order under the peculiar circumstances existing, while matters are being run through in such a heedless manner——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TALBERT. I will try to do so, if the Chair will allow me to lay down the premises.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer a parliamentary inquiry, but not a "premiss."

Mr. TALBERT. The parliamentary inquiry is just this: Will it be in order to ask that the present bill or any one of these bills be passed over on account of its being an outrage to pass it? Now, I ask permission to make a statement. Here is a bill claiming to pension——

The SPEAKER. One moment——

Mr. TALBERT. Claiming to pension a person on account——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

[Mr. TALBERT continued to speak while the Speaker rapped for order.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will take his seat. He is not in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I only want to ask——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must take his seat.

The question being taken, the previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TALBERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask whether it would be in order to move to amend the title or caption of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to make such a motion.

Mr. TALBERT. I move, then, to amend the caption of the bill so as to read, "A bill not to pension Mollie Crandall," if that is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to insert the word "not"? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I thought the Speaker decided it was in order to move to amend the caption of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to insert the word "not"?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes, sir; the word "not."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TALBERT. Can I be heard on that motion?

The SPEAKER. Not under the rules of the House. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TALBERT, it was rejected.

MARY A. HALL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 344) granting a pension to Mary A. Hall.

The bill was read.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HENRY JOHNSON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 486) for the relief of William Henry Johnson

The bill was read.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5736) to authorize the Light-House Board to proceed with the construction of the light-house and fog signal on North Manitou Island, Lake Michigan; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 159) to authorize the Secretary of War to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Portland, Me.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1585) to authorize and direct the Auditor for the Post-Office Department to credit the account of George H. Tice, postmaster at Perth Amboy, N. J., for postage stamps and money-order funds stolen from his office; and

A bill (S. 1546) for the relief of Levi Stoltz.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 1546) for the relief of Levi Stoltz—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1585) to authorize and direct the Auditor for the Post-Office Department to credit the account of George H. Tice, postmaster at Perth Amboy, N. J., for postage stamps and money-order funds stolen from his office—to the Committee on Claims.

Concurrent resolution—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report of a hearing before the Committee on Woman Suffrage, January 28, 1896; 2,000 copies for the Senate and 3,000 copies for the House of Representatives—

To the Committee on Printing.

Concurrent resolution—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, at the earliest day practicable, 5,000 additional copies, in separate form, with paper cover, of the paper entitled "Economic geology of the Mercur mining district," being a part of the Sixteenth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, with accompanying illustrations, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for distribution by the Geological Survey—

To the Committee on Printing.

M. R. WILLIAM GREBE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3139) for the relief of M. R. William Grebe, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DAN S. PLACE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 951) to amend the military record of Dan S. Place, first lieutenant Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. JONES.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 249) granting a pension to Charles E. Jones, with amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment here.

The SPEAKER. It is the custom of the House, the Chair will state, to allow the gentleman in charge of the bill to make such motion as he desires first.

Mr. TALBERT. I rose to make a motion to amend the bill.

The SPEAKER. If the House desires to amend the bill it can vote down the previous question, and it will then be open to amendments.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, crack away. [Laughter.]

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. TALBERT. Is it in order now to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not; the previous question has been ordered. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I understood the Speaker to say that I could offer an amendment——

The SPEAKER. The Chair said that if the previous question was voted down it would be open to amendment. [Laughter.]

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The question recurring on the third reading of the amended bill, and being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 104, noes 5.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point of order that that is merely a dilatory objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count nevertheless.

One hundred and eighty-two members are present, a quorum, and the bill is ordered to a third reading.

The bill was accordingly read the third time, the question recurring on its passage.

Mr. ERDMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ERDMAN. Am I entitled to have a copy of the engrossed bill at this time before its passage?

The SPEAKER. This being a Senate bill, it is already engrossed. [Laughter.]

The bill was passed.

JONATHAN SCOTT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4526) granting a pension to Jonathan Scott.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ERDMAN. I would like to have a copy of this engrossed bill if in order. This, I see, is a House bill.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed copy of the bill, the Chair will state, is not here.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice, and the next taken up.

The SPEAKER. The bill will have to be laid aside if demand is made for the engrossed copy.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

SOPHIA J. HAMILTON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 569) granting a pension to Sophia J. Hamilton, widow of Charles S. Hamilton, major-general of volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH MARSHALL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1109) granting a pension to Elizabeth Marshall.

The bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the several votes taken with reference to these pension bills, and move to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH DESHLER WHITING.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 1050) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Deshler Whiting, which was referred back to the Committee on Pensions, has been reported favorably again to the House. There is no objection to the form of the bill. The merits were not considered. I now ask leave of the House to restore the bill to its place upon the Calendar. It was Calendar No. 92, and I ask that it may take its former place so that it may be considered. The bill has already passed this House in a preceding Congress, but not in time to pass the Senate. There seems to be no objection to the merits of the bill, so that it will require a very short time to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] asks that the bill H. R. 1050, which by the action of the House was referred back to the Committee on Pensions, be allowed to take its place on the Calendar of the Whole House, to resume its former position. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CUBA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses touching the Cuban resolutions. I ask for the reading of the report, and of the resolutions recommended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolutions of the Senate (concurrent resolution 19, part 5), having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments to the Senate concurrent resolution, and agree to the same.

ROBERT R. HITT,
ROBERT ADAMS, JR.,
JAMES B. McCREARY,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

JOHN SHERMAN,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the two resolutions which have just been read, and to which the conferees on the part of the House, in committee of conference, have agreed propose, first, that our Government should accord to the struggling people of Cuba belligerent rights; and second, tender friendly offices to the Spanish Government for the recognition of Cuban independence. These resolutions passed the Senate on the 28th of February by the overwhelming majority of 58 votes. The House of Representatives a few days later, on the 2d of March, adopted by 245 majority, as a substitute for them, declarations very similar in purport, including one additional resolution, that we ought to be prepared to protect the interests of American citizens in Cuba by intervention if necessary.

When they had gone back to the Senate that body asked of the House a conference upon the disagreeing votes. In that committee of conference, after we had discussed the three resolutions which had been adopted by the House and the two adopted by the Senate, it was agreed by the Senate conferees that the House resolutions were in some respects preferable, and they yielded and agreed to our resolutions.

They and many other Senators made an earnest effort to have them adopted by the Senate; but after weeks had passed away in debate which appeared likely to be indefinite in length, the Senate, on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who had urgently pressed those resolutions, nonconcurred and asked for another conference. We met them again, and they assured the House conferees that while they were as earnestly of opinion as ever that the resolutions which the House had adopted ought to pass, yet they could give no assurance that they would at any time pass the Senate, as there was manifestly an organized obstruction, which, under the antiquated rules of that body, where there is no means of stopping debate and bringing on a vote, might continue indefinitely. They asked us to now act in the same liberal spirit in which they had met us, to agree to the Senate resolutions, take them back to the House, and pass them. This would at once secure final and complete action and defeat the dilatory debate.

Remembering the great majority by which the House had adopted our resolutions and considering the vote an instruction, we who were conferees for the House for a long time insisted upon the action of the House being adhered to. The first resolution, that which favors the recognition of the belligerency of those struggling in Cuba, is substantially the same as passed by the Senate and as passed by the House. The second, which relates to the "independence" of Cuba, as stated in the Senate resolution, and to "a government by the free choice of the people of Cuba," as stated more cautiously in the House resolutions, aimed at the same thing, the tender of good offices to secure that purpose. The third House resolution, which related to the protection of American interests in Cuba, though wholly unobjectionable, though in accordance with international law, the usage of nations, and the practice of our Government, so plainly so that the only objection to it would seem to be that it was hardly necessary for Congress to make such a suggestion to the Executive—this resolution they asked us to drop.

It would be in no worse position if it were dropped than if we persisted, and all of the resolutions would fail because there was no limitation on debate there. All of them would be talked to death if they once got back to the Senate, though there were not a dozen votes that could be mustered against them. Accordingly your conferees agreed to the two Senate resolutions. We now ask their adoption by the House.

The second resolution differed from ours in that it proposed the tender of the good offices of this Government to secure the recognition of the independence of Cuba by Spain. It was said—I said it and others said it on this floor in the former debate—that the expression "independence" seemed harsher than was necessary, and we said so to the conferees; but it was urged, and it is true, that while a proposition to any Government in ordinary time of peace to recognize the independence of a part of its territory as independent would be offensive, the reason why it is offensive is because it is on its face manifestly intended to offend.

A proposition by the British representative here that we should recognize New England or California as independent would be offensive; manifestly it would be intended as an offense. There is no reason in the present state of our affairs, no excuse for such a suggestion. But when war between a parent government and a dependency has gone on for some time and separation is the best solution of the war, it has often occurred that the mediation, the tender of good offices by another to the parent government to induce the recognition of the dependency has been an easy way to peaceful arrangement and has so been received as a truly friendly act. That has happened with us several times, and there was no objection taken in cases parallel to this, and can be none in this case unless there be a captious disposition to seek a quarrel.

When the Spanish Government, in the early part of this century, was at war with its colonies on this continent, in South America, and Mexico, our Government took the very step proposed in this second resolution—tendered its good offices and friendly counsels with Spain, urging upon Spain the recognition of the independence of the colonies. That was done, bear in mind those of you who think that we are going too fast in this, and that there is danger of our being called jingoes, by the most cautious and prudent of our Presidents, Mr. Madison. That is in the early history, and is a precedent of great authority, made by the man who more than any other may be called the father of the Constitution; and the Secretary of State who carried it out was Mr. Monroe, whose name is synonymous throughout the world with the wisest and noblest feature of the foreign policy of the Republic. That I may not misstate it in the least, I will read the words by which the President stated exactly what action he had taken touching the Spanish colonies in revolt on this continent after the war had gone on for some time.

In Mr. Monroe's message, after he was elected President, November 14, 1820, he relates the negotiations to adjust the differences, and says:

That the colonies, in their Congress of Angostura, would accept of nothing short of independence as a basis of negotiations.

And then states the action of our Government in these words, which are almost the words of this resolution:

To promote that result (independence) by friendly counsels with other powers, including Spain herself, has been the uniform policy of this Government.

There is the first, the great precedent, eighty years ago, for the very action to which your conferees have assented and which they recommend to you to-day. I will not follow through all the precedents, but I will come to one which is brought up so often in this House in another light—that of General Grant, when the Cubans were engaged in the ten years' war with Spain from 1868 to 1878. General Grant then made a proposition to Spain, that she should recognize the independence of Cuba. Those of you who care to read it at length will find the discussion in the instructions by Mr. Fish and the dispatches of Minister Sickles at Madrid. It is the very case we have in hand. That was an insurrection or rebellion in Cuba not half so extensive as the present, and it was near the beginning. Then the good offices of the United States were offered to bring the war to a close on the basis of Cuban independence, Spain to be paid an indemnity which the United States should guarantee.

The ruler of Spain was General Prim, and he received that proposition in the same friendly spirit in which it was made. There was no rupture of relations. I will not read all his answers, which are contained in and discussed through several dispatches of considerable length, but only to show its spirit I will give a few words. They may conveniently be found by members in Senate Report 141, if anyone desires to read it. At the conclusion of his remarks, assenting to the proposition of Mr. Sickles, he said:

I do not flatter myself that Spain will retain possession of the island. I consider that the period of colonial autonomy has virtually arrived. However the present contest may end, whether in the suppression of the insurrection or in the better way of an amicable arrangement through the assistance of the United States, it is equally clear to me that the time has come for Cuba to govern herself; and if we succeed in putting down the insurrection to-morrow I shall regard the subject in the same light, that the child has attained its majority and should be allowed to direct its own affairs. We want nothing more than to get out of Cuba, but it must be done in a dignified and honorable manner.

That was in response to General Grant's proposition that the independence of Cuba should be recognized and that an indemnity should be made to Spain, which would be guaranteed by the United States. General Prim, however, made a condition that the Cubans must first lay down their arms, and after that there might be a vote by the people of Cuba on the question of separation. But the Cuban people would not consent to lay down their arms. They knew those with whom they were dealing. They thought they knew them too well to do that, and that stopped the negotiations, together with the fact that the matter became public and created excitement in Spain. Subsequent events showed that the distrust of the Cubans was a wise one. No offense was taken by General Prim at the friendly counsel of our Government that the independence of Cuba should be recognized.

I mention this as showing why we can, with reason, come to the suggestions of the Senators whom we met in conference, and adopt that resolution which passed the Senate by so great a majority. It is only advice that we give to another Government. It is not a matter of great importance. It is all in the future anyhow. It is possible that Spain will not heed the advice; but whether she heeds it or not, we know how events are moving, that the car of destiny is bearing the cause of freedom to triumph, and the success and the independence of Cuba with or without the counsel of the stranger or the consent of Spain will soon be achieved, accorded, and established. [Loud applause.] But the matter now most important is not giving advice, it is the proposition for immediate action. That is in the first resolution proposing that our Government at once recognize the belligerency of those who in Cuba are struggling for their liberty.

Mr. HENDERSON. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. HITT. Not at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. Most of us, I think, understand the meaning of the recognition of belligerency, but the country at large does not know just what is to be gained by the revolutionists from a recognition of their right of belligerency, and if it will not break into the line of the gentleman's thought, I wish he would explain that.

Mr. HITT. I will endeavor to answer the question as clearly and practically as I can. The gentleman has struck the essential question—the one that transcends all the rest. That question of recognizing Cuban belligerency is the one on which the American people have been fixing their attention most earnestly. This House has been flooded with petitions and memorials by thousands from legislatures, chambers of commerce, societies, from churches, from associations of every kind, and from individual citizens by tens of thousands. Your committee room has been choked with them. There is no other subject for years on which there has been so vast and multitudinous an expression of the people's will as this question of recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans who are struggling for freedom. They go to the very heart of the question. The people know just what is most wanted and they ask us to do it.

Some individuals, generally those who call themselves business men, brokers, and financial men, write us letters deprecating action of any kind, opposing any agitation or discussion on any foreign question that may disturb the market. They are not in favor of the Spaniard; they are not in favor of the Cuban. They care nothing whatever for either side. They simply deprecate any action which will affect the markets in which their hearts are bound up. But the unmistakable voice of the people of the United States as expressed in the enormous majority given in this House a month ago—262 to 17—and in the Senate—64 to 6—is in favor of immediately recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans.

Now, to answer the gentleman from Iowa, the effect of recognizing the belligerency of the Cubans will be, first, to give them a flag and a status. If a ship should enter New York Harbor this afternoon belonging to the Cuban insurgents, flying the Lone Star flag, she would be liable to be treated as a pirate and all on board might be treated as criminals, as violators of law, as enemies of mankind. With recognition, the belligerents will have a flag with the same status as that of any other country, and a vessel flying that flag can go into New York Harbor right alongside of a Spanish frigate. But as we stand now, if they should go in there this afternoon, the Spanish minister would be at the State Department immediately asking to have them seized and treated as pirates.

Why, his predecessor made that very request, that high-handed and bloody request, of our Secretary of State eighty years ago, when a ship of one of the Spanish colonies, bearing its independent colors, entered our port, the minister claiming that they were pirates and demanding that they be treated as such. Pronounce that magic word "belligerency," recognize those as belligerents who are truly belligerents, who are carrying on war, and you at once give them that advantage and that status among nations in our ports. The word "belligerency" exactly defines and describes what they are doing. They are carrying on war. Recognize them as belligerents and you enable them at once to do all that other nations are entitled to do—to carry a flag, to purchase in our markets munitions of war and supplies of every kind, to purchase them openly and take them out openly, just as the Spanish Government now does—not hiding and skulking in obscure and distant ports by night to escape seizure, dogged every hour by spies and informers to give notice to our Government and have them arrested. Then men could go openly to join them, if not in armed expeditions. They could negotiate loans and sell bonds just as the Spanish Government is doing now.

Mr. SWANSON. May I ask the gentleman a question for information? Does he mean to say that if this resolution, as we are going to vote upon it to-day, is passed it will enable the Cubans to do all that?

Mr. HITT. I believe that it will, because I believe that the President of the United States is not so recreant to his duty as an agent and servant of the people that he will disregard the vote of the people of the United States as expressed through the House of Representatives and Senate by vast majorities. [Applause.] The House has already given a majority of 245 upon this question, but it has been null because, the action of the two Houses not being in accord, it has been in the air; but when these Senate resolutions have passed both Houses I have faith that we have a President who will act as the elect of the people of the United States, the agent of the people of the United States, and not their "ruler." Therefore I say that I believe that the passage of this resolution will secure the recognition of the belligerency of the Cubans.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Would it not be a safer and far more certain course to ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "concurrent" and insert the word "joint"?

Mr. HITT. I think we can not make that change, as such a proceeding is not in order on a conference report. Indeed, I think it is unimportant, because I have a different opinion from the gentleman concerning the President of the United States. I will not admit that he has yet taken up the conceit which has unfortunately been expressed of late elsewhere that he is a "ruler" and a "strong man." He may be a strong man, but he is strong because he is our President and not our ruler. [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not intend, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman should understand me as questioning what the President will do. I only make the point that this proceeding would be far more certain to accomplish the results which the House committee contemplate if we should substitute the word "joint" for the word "concurrent."

Mr. HITT. I do not think so. It would then simply require the President to sign it or take action necessarily within ten days, and would necessitate a different mode of voting here. We get at the essence of the matter in this way. Nobody will mistake the purpose of the American Congress.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit me, in response to the gentleman from Georgia, it is proper to state in justification of the committee of conference that such an amendment as the gentleman suggests would have been entirely in order. The committee of conference had to deal only with questions in dispute, and with matters not in dispute they had nothing to do.

Mr. HITT. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that we had no power over the form of the resolution; it came to us a concurrent resolution both from the House and from the Senate, and while we could have changed the matter of the resolutions in our conference with the Senators, none of us could change them from being concurrent. On the enacting clause the two Houses were agreed, and we were to confer on their matters of disagreement.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, a concurrent resolution is simply the expression of an opinion of Congress. It has no more force than the action of a moot court. But a joint resolution, if signed by the President, would have the force and effect of law. Did the committee when it made this proposition simply a concurrent resolution determine the scope that a concurrent resolution would have? There is some difference of opinion as to that.

Mr. HITT. The committee of conference had no authority to approach or touch that question. The difference between the two Houses did not relate to any such matter of form; both propositions which went to the committee of conference were concurrent resolutions. Had one resolution been joint and the other concurrent—had there been any such disagreement involved in regard to the form of the resolution—the case would have been different. We had the right to consider changes affecting the language of the resolutions themselves, but not affecting their form; the committee of conference, as a matter of parliamentary necessity, was obliged to report them as concurrent resolutions.

I was trying to explain, in answer to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], the force and practical effect of the action which I have no doubt will be taken in the adoption of these resolutions——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Would not another result follow the recognition of belligerency—that the war between the two parties in Cuba would have to be a humane war, that prisoners captured from the Cuban ranks by Spanish troops would have to be treated as prisoners of war?

Mr. HITT. That is argumentative. I am speaking of the immediate effect of our resolutions—of things completely within our power—which we can determine absolutely ourselves.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I hope that the chairman of the committee [Mr. HITT] will not be further interrupted while he is stating the effect which a recognition of belligerency would have. We desire to have his statement on that point in compact form for the information of this House and the public. I hope gentlemen will defer their questions until the gentleman from Illinois is through with his statement.

Mr. HITT. After we have recognized the belligerent rights of the Cubans men can openly leave our shores to aid the Cubans. The Cubans can go upon the stock boards in this city or anywhere else and publicly offer a loan—offer to negotiate their bonds, as our fathers did, during the Revolution, in Amsterdam. They can negotiate loans either with other Governments or with private citizens.

I will give the House a definition of belligerent rights in words that will not be questioned. Mr. Canovas, the prime minister of Spain, made public last summer a statement in which he discussed this very question. No one will accuse him of straining the definition in favor of the Cubans. I will read his words. What I am about to read is no "fake." This is no unsubstantial or unauthenticated paper. It comes to us from the President, and is a part of House Document No. 224. Says Minister Canovas:

From the moment of their recognition they can send out vessels upon the ocean under the flag of the lone star; raise funds in foreign countries; move about with a freedom that otherwise they could never enjoy; and they could even carry on privateering.

That does not state all that the recognition of belligerency would accomplish, but it states the great and important advantages that such an act would give to the Cubans. The Spanish Government to-day is doing all those things. It sends its agents to Hartford to buy arms; they buy them also in Philadelphia. Any man can openly go from this country to join the Spanish forces. He may, if he chooses, announce the fact in the newspapers and have a reception before he starts, yet go unmolested. The Spanish Government is, in fact, buying supplies here.

Why, sir, the United States is at this hour a base of operations of the Spanish Government in crushing the Cubans who are struggling for their freedom. Under the pretense of neutrality we are, every time the Spanish minister gives intimation to the State Department, running to capture men who may be about to start to Cuba or to seize supplies of arms intended for the Cubans, in any port, in any remote corner of the country anywhere. We have not even confined our assistance to our own ports. In the case of the Hawkins we pursued the Cubans out upon the high seas at the behest of Spain. Is that real neutrality? Is that fairness? Is it justice? Are we not in spirit and in fact the efficient oppressors of the Cubans ourselves?

Much has been said about this proposed action being a departure from the custom of our fathers—from the course pursued by former Presidents. Why, sir, this is nothing new. That great man to whom I referred a few moments ago dealt with this question so practically that there is little more left to be said as to the duty and the right of a nation to recognize belligerency in such a case. In 1815, after Mr. Madison had issued his proclamation touching the Spanish-American colonies—the ordinary proclamation of neutrality to forbid armed expeditions—the Spanish minister, Chevalier De Onis, demanded that our President should send orders to seize in our ports any ship that came from any of the rebel colonies. He denounced the men on any such vessel as pirates, bandits, and brigands.

Do you observe, gentlemen, that these phrases now so glib upon Spanish tongues and in the mouths of friends of the Spanish cause are not new at all? When a man is not an humble follower of oppressive authority, he is a "brigand." When he is not on their side, but fighting with such resources as God has given to him to save the liberty that God gave him, then he is a wandering bandit. That minister demanded that these ships should be seized and the men treated as pirates. He demanded that our ports be closed to the revolutionists under the flags of Buenos Ayres, Carthagena, and the Mexican Congress, and other places which have, he says, "revolted against the authority of the King, my master." It is a pleasure to read the dignified and noble language in reply by a great patriot and statesman. Let me read the words; Mr. Monroe wrote them January 19, 1816, as Mr. Madison directed:

The President thought it proper some time past to give orders to the collectors not to make the flag of any vessel a criterion or condition of its admission into the ports of the United States.

And again, in reply to that haughty demand of the Spanish minister, he said:

All that your Government had a right to claim of the United States was that they should not interfere in the contest or promote by any active service the success of the revolution, admitting that they continued to overlook the injuries received from Spain and remained at peace. This right was common to the colonists. With equal justice might they claim that we would not interfere to their disadvantage—

Who thinks of that now in this great contest, where we are doing all that we can to the disadvantage of those with whom every true heart now sympathizes?—

that our ports should remain open to both parties as they were before the commencement of the struggle; that our laws regulating commerce with foreign nations should not be changed to their injury. In these principles the United States have acted.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, that I could say to-day that on these principles the United States have acted within the last year.

Now, do not say that this action of President Madison was limited simply to letting the ships come into the ports of this country. It was to do more than that. It was a direct practical recognition of belligerency with all of its consequences. Afterwards Mr. Monroe, when he had become President, recited these events and their consequences, and stated what had been the conduct of the United States toward the participants in the conflict. Mark these words; this was the way the great American acted eighty years ago to men situated as the Cubans are now situated:

They have enjoyed an equal right to purchase and export arms, munitions of war, and every other supply, the exportation of all articles whatever being permitted under laws which were passed long before the commencement of the contest. Our citizens have traded equally with both, and their commerce with each has been alike protected by the Government.

That is what we ought to do to-day. There is a sentence a little farther on which I commend to the attention of the House. I will not detain you by reading at length even the words of this great man, save to give an extract here and there:

As soon as the movement assumed such a steady and consistent form as to make the success of the provinces probable the rights to which they were entitled by the law of nations as equal parties to a civil war were extended to them. Each party was permitted to enter our ports with its public and private ships and take from them every article which was the subject of commerce with other nations.

And then he recites again with emphasis and fullness our conduct toward both parties in the contest. Now, what is the situation? Is not the success of the province of Cuba probable? Have not these men there in arms shown that they can not be subdued? The Spanish minister made public an address to the people of the United States on the 22d day of February, in which he said that Spain had sent 125,000 troops. The Spanish war publications show that there were 21,000 troops already in Cuba as a permanent army, holding the people said to be so loyal to the Spanish Government before this great army went.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the coming of these men, 125,000 in number—with infantry, cavalry, and artillery, and besides that 40 ships of war—to crush the Cubans, they have baffled them and defied them. Yes, and General Weyler, it is said, has just asked for 40,000 more troops. More than that: Beginning in the eastern provinces at Santiago, these revolutionists have swept westward, steadily, resistlessly, fighting, avoiding, gaining all the time, choosing their own ground of battle, commanded by leaders whose ability now has long been vindicated, ability which none will question, until province after province has fallen before them; and they have passed through 700 miles of vanquished Spanish territory and Spanish armies. To-day they hold three-fourths of the Island of Cuba.

The Spanish troops are practically penned up in the cities. They have only detachments outside of towns. The country is Cuban and the Cuban army holds it. The Cuban capital, Cubitas, is more secure than Habana is to-day. It is not a war of similar dimensions to the ten years' war of 1868 and 1878. That never extended far beyond the eastern province of Santiago, and even that it was impossible for the power of Spain to subdue. They held that monarchy at bay for ten years, although they had not an armed force one-fourth as great as that now under the commands of Generals Gomez and Maceo.

They never were subdued at all. They were induced to treat, and General Campos, who had not been successful in subduing them, made a compact with them—the peace of Zanjon. This was done upon the suggestion of the Government of the United States. By that compact the Cubans were to have self-government, reduced taxation, taxation only with representation. They were to have the expenditure of those taxes at home in large part. They were themselves to share in full proportion in administering the government.

On that pledge, on those promises, they laid down their arms. Every promise was violated. Every pledge in that compact, followed by submission, though kept to the ear, was broken to the hope; though kept in form in many cases, was utterly disregarded in fact, and they were subjected to oppression as harsh as ever. They were promised freedom of elections, representation in the Spanish parliament, self-government in the provinces and in the cities, the control of the taxation laid upon themselves. There is a paper which has been sent to every member of the House, I understand, and I had a copy of it, purporting to be signed by a number of Spaniards in New York. They do not pretend to be Cubans, but Spaniards, who say in this letter that they know about these affairs. They seem to have read up or learned in some way, or think they have, and they assert that Cuba is a free country; that those people are entirely mistaken in thinking they are not free; that Cuba is as free as Canada, and Cubans have ample representation in the Cortes or Spanish parliament.

Now, we have before us a document sent by the Secretary of State in Senate Document 166, prepared, not by Spaniards nor by our own people, but by Cubans. They know of what they speak; and while I will not go over the details, I will give the statement of one of the real Cuban members of the Spanish parliament, who himself tells just what a mockery is the pretended voting or suffrage and representation of Cubans. Only a little over 9 per cent of the people of Cuba are Spaniards—that is, Spanish residents in Cuba whose homes are in Spain; yet that electoral law is so framed that as a matter of fact there are only 53,000 of the 1,600,000 people of Cuba who are on the electoral lists, and the Spanish element, with only 9 per cent of the population, have a preponderence of the men elected to parliament and everywhere else. They administer it all. Here is a specimen: In the municipal district of Güines the population is 13,000, of whom 500 are Spaniards. On the electoral list, out of the 13,000 native Cubans, there are 62, and out of the 500 Spanish residents there are 400 who are voters.

Now, to clinch this whole business, there is a permanent commission to revise the electoral list and settle all disputes, and that commission is appointed by the captain-general, by Weyler, a nice officer to appoint a reviewing board for an electoral list. Here are numbers of instances stated of the flagrantly arbitrary conduct by which the people were disfranchised. There are several scores of members of the Cortes sent from Cuba, but they are not Cubans. They are the bitterest enemies of the Cubans. There are sometimes Cubans elected to the Spanish Cortes, but the men who are elected under these forms as Cuban members of that parliament and representing Cuba are of that envenomed class that is the most bitterly hostile to them all, the resident Spaniards. Says Mr. Varona, himself long a member, in the most favorable epochs the number of Cuban representatives, out of the dozens that are sent, has not exceeded six.

Now, as to the local government, what kind of self-government have they? This gentleman states that of which Cubans know—not newspaper tales, nor official falsehoods and bulletins. Lately in the board of aldermen in Habana there was not a single Cuban. In the board at Güines, with a population of 12,500 inhabitants, there was not one Cuban found in the council of that province. So, too, in Matanzas, there were two, and in Santa Clara there were two. These are the most populous provinces in Cuba. That is the "self-government" to which they have been treated!

Mr. PATTERSON. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HITT. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand that the population of Cuba amounts to about 1,600,000. Now, what information have the Committee on Foreign Affairs, what official information, in respect to the proportion of that population engaged in the effort to throw off Spanish authority or in sympathy with that element?

Mr. HITT. We have a document that was sent to this House at the request of our committee, which gives scores of statements from our consular officers in Cuba, giving the number of armed men. As long ago as last August the force of Cuban insurgents in the field was given at 30,000, of whom 10,000 were pretty well armed. They have increased steadily since. If the gentleman desires information on that subject—and of course the essence of it all is, what is the scope, extent, and force of the military power of the insurrection—I will say to him that I hold in my hand a detailed statement, handed to me since the House was called to order to-day, giving the number of troops who are now organized, and a large part of whom are in active campaign for the Republic of Cuba. I will have the statement read at the desk if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the gentleman state the substance of it?

Mr. HITT. In the Province of Santiago de Cuba the total is 13,900. The divisions and the names of the commanding officers and the posts at which they are located are given. In the Province of Puerto Principe, which is a small province, there are 2,500. In the Province of Santa Clara there are 5,000 troops in the field.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have the aggregate.

Mr. HITT. I will come to that in a moment. In Matanzas there are 8,900; in Habana, 8,160; in Pinar del Rio, 5,562, and in the armies of Generals Gomez and Maceo, 16,700. The total is 60,722 men. I will insert the whole statement:

This is a table of officers commanding operating columns. Each of their separate columns is regularly officered as in the United States Army, the tables showing color and strength of leader.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, one further question. What number of Cubans—I mean citizens of the island, not resident Spaniards—what number of Cubans have enlisted in the cause of Spain in an effort to put down the insurrection?

Mr. HITT. It is said there are many Cubans—it is even stated officially. But I understand from Cubans who are in earnest in behalf of their cause that those who are thus entitled Cubans and who are in the Spanish armed forces are the same class as those men called "volunteers." Perhaps the gentleman is aware of what is misnamed a "volunteer" in Cuba. The Cuban "volunteer" means a Spaniard in Cuba who is subject to military duty under the Spanish law in Spain; but by a provision of the law he is allowed the choice of performing service in Cuba, and that is called "volunteering" to do duty abroad instead of at home. These are the bitterest men, the most implacably hostile and cruel, that the Cubans have to meet. They are the men who form the cloud of vultures, of officeholders, speculators, privileged spoilers, who have made the island poor. It pays $26,000,000 a year in taxes, and besides that the exactions and peculations.

Mr. PATTERSON. From what source do you get that information?

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman from Tennessee means the information about the number of troops.

Mr. HITT. That was handed me by a gentleman who returned from Cuba within a day or two—a very responsible gentleman, who was introduced to me by members of the House who knew and vouched for him as a man of intelligence, integrity, and high character. I have not permission to use his name, but it will be given me in a moment, if desired, by the gentleman who presented him.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then, if I understand it, substantially it is about this: The native population of Cuba have contributed about 60,000 men to resist the authority of Spain, that that army is maintained by the native population of Cuba, and that the natives of Cuba have directly contributed no soldiers to the Spanish cause.

Mr. HITT. Well, I would not answer that I know that fact one way or the other. That is a question in dispute. But we can infer some things which are so plain that by the laws of moral evidence and reason we can not be but convinced. I see the point of the gentleman's question. What is the tendency and wish of the people? There is every reason to believe, I think, that the people of Cuba are most earnestly devoted to the cause of independence and are determined to separate from Spain. The insurgent forces have worked in perfect harmony; the people recruit them spontaneously as fast as they fall away from exhaustion on the march or perish in battle. They have no uniforms, no rations. They have all the hardships of war and none of its splendors. Their arms were simply rough chopping knives of the plantations, called machetes, until they captured better arms from the Spaniards whom they overthrew and stripped of their Mauser rifles. If the Spanish Government believed what its officers constantly say and publish abroad in bulletins, that Cuban armies only represent brigands, incendiaries, and marauders, why do not they arm the good citizens and let them drive out the brigands? They would do it if these were brigands. Our people did it in the West; did it often in my youth. They organized to catch the brigands and executed them. But instead of that being the fact in Cuba, we have every evidence that the Cuban people regard the Spanish rule with the utmost detestation.

Mr. PATTERSON. If my friend will pardon me for a moment, I will tell him the thought I have in mind.

Mr. HITT. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PATTERSON. And that is this: If the people of Cuba, the inhabitants of the island, are practically united, or substantially united, in an effort to secure their autonomy and their liberty, in my judgment they are entitled to it. And if this Government would interpose its authority to prevent Spain from acquiring by force of arms territory contiguous on the North American continent, I do not see why Spain should be permitted to retain territory by means of subjugation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. The gentleman speaks to a point which is not now proposed for action, and as I am simply explaining a conference report the gentleman will not expect me to respond to his remarks.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HITT. With pleasure.

Mr. POWERS. I observe the gentleman from Illinois is thoroughly conversant with the fact touching this interesting matter; interesting not only to Cuba, but to this nation. I would like to request him to state to the House what the form of government is in Cuba that is directing the action of those insurgents. It has been stated, as the gentleman no doubt is well aware, that there is no such thing as any form of government there in an organized capacity, but that the army is made up of a band of marauders fighting for spoil. Now, if it be true that the army is made up of soldiers fighting for civil rights, is there a central power, is there a council with an administration that directs the movements of that army?

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the government of the insurgent movement, the revolution, in Cuba is a republican government, with a president; but in its beginning, like all revolutions, the very essence is the military power; that overshadows all other. They have an organization of civil officers. They have secured possession of province after province. In some cases they have almost the whole of the territory of a province in peaceful occupation administered by their officers. I have here an official copy of the constitution of the Cuban Republic. They have worked harmoniously from the beginning, each obeying his superior, showing the highest confidence—a real organization. Organization does not lie in words nor in printed papers. It is a fact. They obey their officers; their officers work in harmony. It is a consistent political and military movement, such a one that it can carry on war, and has carried it on vigorously, successfully, victoriously, from the very start.

The question as to the unity of the Cubans is a serious one. As to their sincerity in opposing Spanish domination, whether they are brigands or whether they are patriots, they have a great army against them, armed with all the appliances that the modern art of war can furnish. They are without pay. No Cuban soldier has ever received a day's pay in all this long year of battle and march and suffering. They have no uniforms. They can be described in the same language that Cornwallis applied to Washington's army when he followed its trail through New Jersey and described the soldiers of that army as "tatterdemalions." Barefooted, half-clad, armed only with the weapons they have torn from their conquered enemies, those Cuban soldiers have marched on from fight to retreat and from retreat to fight.

Their generals have not let the Spaniards set for them the places of battle. I do not know but that the Spanish generals have been able men. It is not my part to speak of them otherwise than with respect as to their abilities. But if they are able men, then the Cuban generals are men whose names should be placed beside that of Touissant, who organized the black army in Haiti which defeated the French, or by that of Hannibal, who organized savage tribes into armies that defeated the finest infantry in the world. Their generals have created out of the humblest raw material soldiers who have borne what our troops could not bear—delay, defeat, retreat, return to action, reattack, and victory. That is the proof of ability in the generals and in every individual soldier.

They have shown all these high qualities and done all these great deeds without the sordid hope of reward, bearing themselves more patiently through this incessant struggle than our fathers did during the saddest period of our Revolutionary war, when they had to change their capital nine times in the course of the struggle, when the troops were without pay and clothing and were sometimes on the verge of disorder and mutiny. There has been no such complaint on the part of the Cuban soldier, who humbly took what he could get, ate what he could find, and went forward with unfaltering heart, with bare and bloody feet, to meet the enemy and fight again. [Applause.] Such a people deserve liberty. They earn it. General Campos complained, and General Weyler has repeated the complaint, that their want of success in many instances was owing to the fact that they operated in a country where they could get no trustworthy information and where they never could rely upon their guides. Mark that significant testimony.

Remember that the guide was in the clutch of those cruel hands that love to strangle, and yet, looking death in the face, those humble, lowly men and women in the cabins and by the wayside in Cuba who were taken as guides would rather face death than lead the Spanish troops to the slaughter of their brethren in arms. Could there be a more striking testimony than this from the mouth of the Spanish commanders themselves of the devotion of the Cuban people to their cause, like that of the early martyrs to the Christian faith?

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to explain the reasons which led your committee to accept these resolutions, and in doing so I have been drawn into talking longer than I had intended. The suggestion has been made more than once that our action, if it led to the recognition of the Cuban Republic and its independence, would be but an introduction to a period of revolutions and anarchy, as in the other South American colonies of Spanish origin. But bear in mind one fact, which is never mentioned by those who make this prediction. There are only two spots in America where the Spanish race in considerable numbers really colonized as did the Anglo-Saxons in our country. One is Chile; the other Cuba.

In all the other Spanish-American countries the population has been, and is to-day, almost wholly Indian, with a little per cent of Spanish blood ruling. But few Spanish women or families ever came. In Chile the Spaniards transplanted themselves actually. The European race went to live there, as it did in Cuba, and in Cuba to-day there are a million people of the European race and only 600,000 others. Forty years ago the securities of Chile were good in the markets of the world. It has a comparatively stable government. Let the people of Cuba, who are of a fiber and spirit that knows how to work, a people with heads that know how to think—let them once become free and they will soon know how to rule themselves and to organize a government which will be stable and prosperous and which will earn our heartiest good wishes for its permanent success.

It is our duty to pass these resolutions. These people are imitating us. All the traditions of Americans, all our past, everything in our own history, appeals to us to cheer and encourage rather than aid to trample upon these men in Cuba who are struggling to become what we are. Why, Mr. Speaker, the very men who are now blackening the characters of the "bandits" will be, or their grandchildren will be, among those who will show themselves most anxious to prove that they are descendants from some of Gomez's captains [laughter]; just as in the cities along the Atlantic coast one hundred and twenty years ago, at the time when the barefooted soldiers of Washington were marching over the Jersey hills and plains, there were persons not overcharged with devotion to the cause of freedom, but whose descendants are most active in their efforts to discover or to invent stories of pedigrees showing descent from those soldiers, organizing "Sons" and "Daughters" of the Revolution. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] had expired.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended to allow him to conclude his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. I do not care to prolong these remarks much further. I will simply answer one suggestion which has been made. It has been frequently urged that we are under friendly obligations to Spain and that the action here proposed would be ungrateful on our part, as everybody knows that Spain is most intensely averse to our taking this step.

Sir, not long ago the Spanish Government had an opportunity to show its friendship for us when we were embarrassed by the war of the rebellion. The Spanish Government at that time organized a fleet, arranged a movement with two other Governments, made a naval demonstration in the West Indies, and seized upon the Island of Santo Domingo. They held that island for a considerable time while our country was engrossed in the war of the rebellion. Afterwards they were expelled by the people there. It was disclosed subsequently in a debate in the Spanish Cortes by the men who as ministers had conducted that business that they did it in order to "drive out the Yankees"; that that whole movement was organized to prevent our getting the naval station of Samana; that it was carried on in concert with Louis Napoleon, who was organizing a movement on Mexico to overthrow a republic there and set up an empire while we were engaged in a great duty that prevented our interfering with him.

Such is the friend that the Spaniard was to us. We are under no obligations to favor Spain and oppression as against Cuba and freedom. The truth is that in such matters as these there are no friendships. Friendship is no sentiment, any more than would be aversions and hates, on which to base a national policy or a national movement. The prime consideration in a question like this is justice—fairness to all. Enlightened self-interest as to our own people and all that concerns them should guide us in the discharge of our duty. It is our duty now to say we believe that these people, struggling as did our fathers, should be recognized as men carrying on war, as belligerents. When this utterance has gone from the representatives of the people to the White House I have faith to believe that the Executive will heed the voice of this nation, expressed by such vast majorities in House and Senate and by every sign that indicates the wish of the American people. [Applause.]

The cause of Spain is manifestly waning from week to week. The rainy season will soon come on, and then the stars in their courses will fight for Cuban freedom. An end will come to Weyler boasts and savageries. Our action here will speedily be followed by results great and practical, and the sufferings of those unfortunate people, their tortures in prison pens and lonely marshes and mountain retreats, will come to an end. They will see the sunrise—the morning of a new and brighter day—and we shall all be glad to say that we hailed the coming of free Cuba. [Applause.]

Mr. HULICK. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I should like to suggest a question to him relative to the terms of the first and third resolutions.

Mr. HITT. The resolutions to which the gentleman refers are not those now before us. The resolutions before us are the Senate resolutions, which in the print of the document the gentleman has in his hand appears as struck out.

Mr. HULICK. Then I have no question to ask. The question I had intended to ask had relation to the subject of strict neutrality and of intervention.

Mr. HYDE. Allow me a single question. Are we to understand that if the President should fail to take any action upon these concurrent resolutions they would then be entirely nugatory except as an expression of opinion and of our friendly feeling toward Cuba?

Mr. HITT. I will not assume that such a thing is possible; therefore I decline to answer the gentleman's question. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] took the opposite side in the recent discussion on this subject, and I trust the Chair will recognize him, if debate is desired, to control the time on that side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take the floor in my own right on this conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, then, will recognize the gentleman from Maine after the gentleman from Virginia or some other member of the committee has spoken.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If any member of the committee desires to speak, I will postpone my remarks; but I wish to speak in my own right on this conference report, under the rule.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I suggest that as the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee [Mr. HITT], has made a speech in favor of adopting the conference report, it would be proper and right now to recognize some gentleman who is opposed to the report. I would not like to waive my right as a member of the committee to speak later, if I should choose to do so, but I do not think it would be well to have now another speech on the same side, after the exhaustive argument of the gentleman from Illinois in favor of the conference report. I suggest, therefore, that the debate go on and that some gentleman opposed to the report be now recognized.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If no member of the committee desires to be recognized now to oppose these resolutions, I will take the floor in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair feels disposed to recognize first gentlemen on the committee if they desire to take the floor; otherwise he will recognize the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that no gentleman on the committee desires to take the floor now in opposition.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not know that any member of the committee desires to take the floor at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine in his own right.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the resolution for which the pending one has been substituted in conference committee was first brought into this House on the 27th day of February; and at 5 o'clock in the afternoon the House was requested to take up and dispose of that most important resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which was presented to this body without any explanatory report, without any statement of facts upon which the resolution was based, and without any information on which the members of the House could base their conclusion as to how their votes should be recorded on that matter.

In the exercise of my right as a member of this body, and as I believed in the exercise of my duty to my constituents and to the country, I objected to that summary method of dealing with a matter of such grave importance as the resolution involved. I had no idea in so doing that I was the only member of the House who objected to acting on a subject of that character in such a manner, without proper thought and proper care. The press of the country, however, have seen fit to give me a very wide distinction as being responsible for resisting that summary procedure. I have never complained of that distinction. I have no reason to complain of it to-day. I have seen no reason to regret the action that I then took; and if I needed any vindication of my action on that occasion I certainly ought to be fully satisfied with that which appears of record here to-day, when more than a month afterwards this measure again comes up for discussion and consideration in this body.

It is very obvious, Mr. Speaker, that some one somewhere in the United States besides myself has deemed this to be a matter of moment, and believed that a subject of so grave a character should receive more deliberation than would consist in rushing it through the House while the members were putting on their overcoats to hurry off to their belated dinners. There is no need for us to try to deceive ourselves when we are here together. There is not a man within the sound of my voice who does not understand how this resolution comes here and why it is here. We have had in connection with this question one of the most remarkable illustrations that has ever come within my observation of an attempt to put into practical operation the theory of how not to do it. We have passed a resolution in this House that could accomplish nothing if adopted. That has been proclaimed in the other end of the Capitol, and has been practically acknowledged by the representatives of this body to be the fact since the resolution which was passed by the House of Representatives was abandoned by the conference and surrendered by its friends because it was conceded not to be so desirable a resolution as the one that had been prepared by the Senate.

Mr. HITT. Not at all, if the gentleman will permit me. I said just the reverse of that. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state again the fact, because I am sure the gentleman is incapable of stating anything that he knows to be incorrect.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I certainly do not desire to do so.

Mr. HITT. Both the Senate and the House agreed at the first conference that the House resolution was preferable as to form, and there was one resolution additional——

Mr. BOUTELLE (interrupting). If the gentleman will permit me, I think I have reversed the order of proceedings with reference to the resolutions.

Mr. HITT. I knew the gentleman from Maine would not misstate the facts if he knew it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The condition of affairs to which I have just referred was brought about, I will say, after mature deliberation in the committee. In the first conference the Senate conferees seemed to concede, or did concede, that the House resolution was preferable to that of the Senate.

Mr. HITT. That is correct.

Mr. BOUTELLE (continuing). And the House resolution was reported from the Senate and brought before that body. It was debated in the Senate, and every man, woman, and child in the United States who followed public proceedings had become thoroughly satisfied that it was as dead as Julius Cæsar and never could pass that body. It was sent back to the conference, and when that conference met the House conferees conceded—parliamentarily, of course—that the Senate resolution, which was first declared to be inferior to that of the House, was more desirable, and in that way this resolution has escaped the final entombment in the Senate, where it never could have been passed, by a reversal of the action of the representatives of this body, who now come here and reverse, in fact—for it makes no difference what explanation is made of the matter, that is the parliamentary effect of it—reverse the views entertained by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the House, and recommend the adoption of the Senate resolution as better than the House resolution.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. HITT. I stated that the conferees of the Senate and the House were of the same opinion at the last conference that they were in the first instance, but that the Senate conferees told us that although there were not more than ten or a dozen men, at the outside, who were opposed to the Senate resolution, yet owing to the antiquated rules of the Senate (and there were only 6 votes against the resolution) that a half dozen men could delay action until the final adjournment of Congress, and therefore owing to these rules of the Senate, in the face of the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations that there was an overwhelming majority in the Senate for the resolutions, for all of them, still that this course was necessary under the circumstances to secure any action. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Speaker, after this first report and explanation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I desire to say that I do not find myself at liberty to account for any action or proposed action of this House by referring to the "antiquated rules" or methods of procedure in the Senate of the United States; and I will only say, in reply to what has been stated by my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT], that my information as to the complexion of the Senate on that matter is very different. I am informed that a large number of Senators would have voted against that resolution; and the best proof of that is in the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in that body—or perhaps I ought not to go so much into detail as to say that—that the Senate of the United States abandoned the effort to pass that resolution of the House, went back into conference, and now we are here with the Senate resolution before us. We have had thirty days in which to consider it, and every day of consideration has weakened the feeling in behalf of intermeddling with the foreign affairs of other nations. No man who watches the pulsation of what is called public sentiment can for a moment believe that there is anything like the heat and impetuosity in the public mind to-day on this subject that there was thirty days ago. But whether there be or not, my contention remains, that on a question of this kind it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to obtain requisite information, and to act deliberately and carefully upon absolute facts developed. I say that up to this time I have been unable to find, in any of the discussions, in any of the statements, in any of the information that has been brought to the public, any such demonstration of the actual existence of the fact of belligerency as is required by the rules laid down and that have been recognized from the days of George Washington to the present hour.

Now, gentlemen may say that this is a light thing, because it is not binding upon our Government. We ought not to trifle with a question of that kind. If we propose to interfere, as a Government, in the establishment of the independence of a Spanish colony lying along our shore, we ought to do it manfully, boldly, and specifically, and when my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] says that this resolution will be effective; that he assumes that it must be effective because the President of the United States will not disregard the expression of the Congress of the United States, I want to remind him that the Congress of the United States had the power, had the opportunity, to have put these resolutions into such form as would have compelled the action of the President of the United States, and that up to the present hour the record shows that Congress carefully avoided taking such action as would require the President to disapprove or put into force its recommendations. Nothing has been more fully discussed than the different constructions and operations of a concurrent and a joint resolution. There is no joint resolution before this body. The concurrent resolution is one that does not affect the action of the President except by its moral force. And we have abundant information—it comes to us in every way that it could come except by a special message from the Executive—that the executive department of this Government does not believe that a state of belligerency such as will warrant our interference at this time has been demonstrated to exist.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said here about the sentiment of the country, about what the people demand. Why, everyone who advocates a public measure always says that he is the retained counsel or attorney for the people at large. I undertake to say that the public sentiment of this country has not been proclaimed by authority upon this floor by any gentleman who has spoken. I do not pretend to say that I can voice the entire public sentiment of this country, but I do say that I voice what I regard to be a most respectable portion of the public sentiment of the United States. I voice sentiments that I know are entertained by thoughtful, patriotic men of all parties, of all conditions, of all relations in life, who deprecate this disposition which they apprehend, on the part of Congress, to be rushing off hither and yon to embroil ourselves in all sorts of foreign complications, or even to threaten embroilment in foreign wars. I need not cite the expressions that have come to me. They have been numerous, they have been entitled to consideration, and I say as my experience that up to this hour I have not received one communication from a person whom I know to be a thoughtful or considerate person of reliable judgment, in favor of embroiling ourselves in this contention on the Island of Cuba.

Gentlemen need not undertake to apply this opposition to what they call the moneyed classes of the United States, as I have heard upon this floor so often. The sentiment that I refer to comes from the quiet, sober, thinking people of the United States, and there is nothing novel about it.

It has been customary for the sober second thought of our people to be conservative and wise and pacific. The methods that have been employed to stir up this so-called public sentiment are perfectly familiar. Everybody understands how much a certain portion of the press of the United States depends upon sensationalism, and how it is catered to to-day. I have it in illustrated form. I will not take up the time of the House to show the portraiture, but will state the facts. A few days ago a gentleman came to me and unfolded a sheet of paper about the size of a newspaper, upon which was depicted a most revolting scene of the execution of a criminal by the use of the garrote. Every detail of the portraiture was calculated to harrow up the soul of the observer. The taking of human life in any form is revolting to humanity. This gentleman wanted to know from me——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me right at this point.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If you will permit me later, I will not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly. I think perhaps my story would be more complete if I should tell it all at once than it would be if I projected it in sections. He said a certain prominent newspaper of this country wanted my opinion as to whether that sort of transaction should be permitted in a civilized age. It represented an execution inside of the walls of Morro Castle. Well, I told him if he wanted my opinion on the general subject I would give it to him. I told him that that question brought up the whole controversy as to the death penalty, and that my friend from New York, General CURTIS, could give him a whole volume on the subject of the barbarity of the execution of men at all. I told him that I had never heard from any man who had been executed that he was particularly in love with the form of taking his life.

So far as the relative barbarity was concerned I could not give testimony as an expert. I had read, I remembered, years ago, when the garrote was invented, that its inventor claimed that it was the most humane method of execution that ever had been devised; that its special recommendation was in some sort of back-action appliance based on the experience of matadors in the bull-fighting arenas of Spain, that to sever the spinal column near the base of the brain was supposed to be the most painless method of producing death, and that the garrote was constructed on that theory. I did not know whether it was or not. I never had any testimony that I could rely on, but I told him that when it came to determining whether we should recognize the belligerency of the Cuban insurrection by considering whether that was the most painless execution that might have taken place, I thought it a very fallacious argument, because I remembered well that when in the great State of New York, where this paper was printed, the last and highest reach of scientific ingenuity had devised what was claimed to be an absolutely painless method of execution by electricity, the reports through the papers of the first experiments made under that law were more harrowing than anything I had ever read; and, so far as I could judge, it was regarded as a barbarous punishment, although intended to be humane.

At this point I was interrupted by the statement that he did not want that for the paper. "Well," I said, "what do you want?" He answered that they wanted my opinion about the barbarity of the Spaniards in Cuba. They did not want it respecting the methods of execution in New York or in this country. I replied, "Very good; then do not print anything I have said." He finally concluded that perhaps that position was untenable, and said he would print what I had to say. I then said to him that the old method that had been in vogue for generations, of putting men to death by a rope halter, had produced scenes of barbarity in this country that made humanity shudder, such as could not be exceeded, that could not be described; therefore I did not see that the depicting of an execution was a legitimate method of convicting a cause. Still, when the time came around, the picture of Spanish barbarity appeared in all its horrors. I presume gentlemen here have all seen it. With it were several gentlemen's opinions of the horrible character of this scene. These interviews accompanied it; but none of my remarks appeared. It was not in the line of "firing up" sentiment on the Cuban question to print anything but an expression of horror at something the Spaniards had done somewhere.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that only illustrates the method that is employed to stir up sensational feeling in this country on one side of a controversy about a contest that has been carried on in a foreign country.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does the gentleman from Maine mean to say to this House that the feeling of the sober and intelligent people of this country is not in sympathy with the Cubans?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I mean to say that I will not admit that it is the judgment of the sober and intelligent American people until I get through trying to state my position to this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey endeavored to address another question to Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I can not yield to the gentleman.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me while I submit a privileged report?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report the bill (H. R. 7940) making appropriations for construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works and rivers and harbors, and ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order against this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). All points of order will be reserved.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask that the report may be submitted for printing to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the point of order on the first paragraph of the fourth page. I desire to have it decided in the House, and I make the point now, so that I can have it here when the bill comes up in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order will be reserved.

CUBA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield to a question now?

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the gentleman from Maine. It is very brief. He said a moment ago that he had not heard a single expression in favor of recognition——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, from the way the gentleman is proceeding he is going to predicate a question on something I did not say, and by that means he will waste my time and his.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What did you say?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I said I had received no communication of the kind.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will ask the gentleman if he has seen the resolution adopted by the Republican convention of Massachusetts, which declares for the recognition of the belligerency in Cuba. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will say to the gentleman that I have received no communication from that source.

Mr. HENDERSON. Read the hearts of the American people and you will find that expression. [Great applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very good. Here is one more gentleman who represents the American people.

A MEMBER. And he is right.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am with them; I can tell you that. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I wish to correct the statement just made by the gentleman from Michigan, in saying that the platform adopted by the Republican convention in Massachusetts demanded the recognition of Cuba. No doubt he did that unintentionally; but it made no such statement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman quote from the language?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not carry it in mind. I only know that they did not recommend the recognition of belligerency in Cuba.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman doubtless referred to the platform of the Republicans of Minnesota. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I can keep Presidential politics out of this debate until I can get through with my speech, I should be very much pleased.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who has injected them, Mr. BOUTELLE?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have not.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And I have not.

Mr. HENDERSON. The man who makes that insinuation is saying something very far from the truth.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I did not get up in favor of a Presidential candidate. It has got to be very nearly a political debate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, They come very near being the expression of public opinion, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very good; I will take care of that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You will in Massachusetts, but we will in Michigan.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; I will not in Massachusetts. Massachusetts will take care of herself, and she will be taken care of on this floor by the men who have been elected to represent her here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No, sir; the gentleman from Maine has no desire to represent Massachusetts; nor to represent Michigan, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And Michigan has no desire to be represented by the gentleman from Maine. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very well; if the gentleman will remove Michigan from this arena until I get through with my speech, I shall feel obliged to him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is something that you can not do.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. No, sir; and when I say that, I intend, as my friend very well understands, no discourtesy to him.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand that; but I was just going to ask who is to be the next President of Cuba? [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that if a man stands here alone, as so many gentlemen are very anxious to have it appear that I do, he ought at least to have an opportunity to express his views, and I want to say to you gentlemen that I propose to exercise the right to make my own speech.

Mr. SULZER. We are glad you stand alone.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] would evidently have been glad to have stood somewhere else a few days ago, when he stirred up the wrong man here.

Mr. SULZER. In this case you are the "solitary horseman" that G. P. R. James used to tell about. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to resume my discussion of these resolutions, which are intended to express a quasi recognition of a state of war in the Island of Cuba, and I repeat with emphasis that if gentlemen in discussing this question, which is one of international and not of Presidential politics, will be kind enough to keep the Presidential question out of this debate, I shall not bring it in. I called attention a few moments ago to some of the methods of inflaming public sentiment that have been resorted to in this Cuban matter, and I denounced those methods.

I do not believe that the opinion of any citizen of the United States, or of any Representative of the American people, or of any Senator of the United States, ought to be influenced by the depicting of scenes of alleged horror, about which we have no evidence, concerning which we do not know the facts. You can not indict Spain, you can not indict the Cubans, upon a lithographic representation of the taking of human life under circumstances that are unknown to you.

If you could, the people of this country might stand indicted to-day for scenes of horror in the taking of human life which, so far as my observation has gone, are unparalleled either in Spain or in the history of the civilized world. It ill becomes us to stand here and denounce a people as barbarians because life is taken among them by means recognized as lawful in that country, when only a few months ago the press of our own country was teeming with descriptions of the most horrible orgy in the sacrifice of human life ever reported in print. While the memory still exists among us of a human being bound to a gridiron of railroad bars, burning and writhing in a public square, amid the applauding shouts of a portion of the populace, when the very paper which has given us this representation of barbarity in Cuba itself recorded the fact that water was put on the despairing victim from time to time to alleviate his sufferings for the moment only in order that they might become more agonizing by the relighting of the flames—while the memory of that transaction is still fresh in our minds it ill becomes us to go into paroxysms of horror over an instance of the execution of some man, I know not whether justly or otherwise, and to point to that execution as showing such a barbarous condition of things that the United States must rise in its wrath and cross the Gulf and take possession of the island where the transaction occurred.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will, if the gentleman feels that he must do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is there not a wide difference between barbarity perpetrated by national authority, under the law, and barbarity perpetrated by an incensed mob?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will answer the gentleman from Ohio by saying that if human life is to be taken, I am always in favor of its being taken by legal process rather than by a mob. [Applause.] I will say to the gentleman further—and I know he does not misunderstand my position on this question, for he knows perfectly well what I am endeavoring to demonstrate, and in his heart he believes in it—that it will not do to indict a people or a government merely because somebody has been hanged by it under certain circumstances, or because some one has been garroted under the forms of law, and I want to say further that my sympathy is always with the people who, if they have to take human life, take it under the forms of law and by legal methods, rather than with those who do it by violence and outrage, or who permit or condone such things.

I am not in favor of either. I do not want to see human life taken anywhere. Nobody in this House mistakes my attitude in using this illustration. I protest against that method of inflaming public sentiment. It is no more just to Spain (whatever may be the merits of this controversy) to parade an execution inside Morro Castle by presenting nothing but the bare, naked horror of the infliction of death than it would be to indict the United States or the great State of New York upon an engraving or a lithograph showing the miserable victim writhing in the "electrocuting" chair, with the smoke of his death fire assailing and offending the nostrils of humanity. That is what I am trying to enforce; and I undertake to say that two-thirds at least of what has been brought to bear upon public sentiment in this country in regard to this Cuban question has been through methods like that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, suppose all this horror is true; suppose that barbarities are being carried on in Cuba. Without the interposition of a link of logic gentlemen jump instantly from the assertion or declaration that wrong exists somewhere to the conclusion that it is the duty of the United States of America to rise up in arms and right the wrong. I deny it. I deny it on the authority of the fathers of the Republic. I deny it in the name of the public policy of the United States that has been indorsed by every great statesman whose name is embalmed in our history. We can not right all the wrongs in the world if we try; and if we make the attempt we abandon the mission which is given to us of working out the destinies of a free people whose example of self-government, of self-control, of the creation of liberty and prosperity within their own domain, will do more for liberty in every land than all the foreign embroilments we could enter upon in generation after generation. [Applause.]

It is not our duty to be the Don Quixote of the earth; and if it were, we are not capable of performing the function. Why, sir, there are people in this country to-day—not my enthusiastic friends around me here, but there are old-fashioned people in the country to-day—who really entertain serious doubts as to the ability of what we call the Government of the United States—the House, the Senate, and the Executive—to successfully run this Government of ours. There is quite a respectable number of people entertaining that opinion. Yet here we are, every man looking into every other man's face and acknowledging—no man denies it to-day—that as we are now situated, with our three coordinate branches, we can not enact legislation to give this country money enough to pay for its daily bread. That is true, is it not? If it is not true, let us have some enactment to fusnish revenue for the Government of the United States. [Applause.] We are here to-day acknowledging in private and in public that this great Government about which we swell and strut and orate so magniloquently is not able to enact a law that will enable this country to obtain revenue or to borrow money with which to pay its debts. Yet we are absolutely aching to waltz out into the international arena and "lick" all the other nations of the world. [Laughter and applause.] I am glad to be complimented by being designated, however conspicuously, as one man who does not believe in that sort of nonsense.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to sak him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish you would not.

Mr. MAHON. It is a short one.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am just getting under way——

Mr. MAHON. If Spain should declare war against this Government the gentleman will find that we shall have men and money and power to take care of her.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is the gentleman's argument, and I will let it stand right in the midst of mine. So much weight as it carries in answering my statement I hope it will have.

Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago the country was startled by an experiment of our executive department in this line. You remember, I remember—I was here; I was lonely here then; I am not so lonely now—the President of the United States, returning from a sojourn in the swamps of North Carolina, where his prowess in the demolition of waterfowl had been so great as to cause him a sudden fit of belligerency [laughter], rose up in his wrath and sent out a message that rang with all the emphasis of a slogan of war to Great Britain. Oh, it was a ringer! [Laughter.] Inside of twenty minutes after that message came here I was "held up" by more than forty newspaper men, who wanted me to give my judgment upon this "magnificent manifestation of Americanism by our great President." "Why," they said, "he has called Great Britain down; he has told John Bull that he can go no farther; he has given the British lion's tail the most terrific twist in the history of diplomacy."

Mr. MAHON. And England has not gone any farther, either.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, if the gentleman wants to make my speech, I will give him the floor. But I am just at this moment getting warmed up, and I am inclined to the opinion that I can make a better speech from my point of view than he can. If he will let me do it I shall be glad.

That magnificent declaration represented the Chief Magistrate with the full epaulets of Commander-in-Chief, with a plume taller than the one worn by the bandmaster at West Point, with a sword 10 feet long and spurs 4 feet broad, standing on the shore of the Atlantic and shouting across the water, "Fee! fi! fo! fum! I smell the blood of an Englishman." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, that was on Tuesday afternoon. It was just before the Christmas holidays; and just four days after that (in the interval of which time John Bull, I am bound to say, had exhibited a degree of candor, coolness, and civility that we might well have imitated, during which time the only effect on international affairs the world over was the tumbling home of American securities at a rate that created a panic in Wall street and came near submerging the country), four days after that, as Congress was packing its grip, with a keen appetite for the Christmas turkey, and when about wending its way to the delights and recreations of home, our great American champion, with his plume broken in the middle, his sword dangling between his legs, one epaulet lost, and his spurs tangled in his pantaloons, came hurriedly rushing to the Capitol with the plaintive appeal: "For God's sake don't go home; we haven't money enough to run the Government until after Christmas!" [Applause and laughter.]

There are men in this House who thought that a marked demonstration of a "strong and vigorous" foreign policy. [Applause and laughter.] There are men here now who think to-day that it was a creditable episode in the career of the United States, and how do they seek to prove it? Why, I heard a man within a few hours past claiming to me that that was "splendidly successful." Why? Because Great Britain, showing more sense than we did, had declined to be driven by that course, by that undignified and unprecedented message, into precipitating a war with us, for they had sense enough to know that if we did succeed in getting into a war it would have the effect of arresting the march of progress by a hundred years, and would inflict untold misery and misfortune on the two great English-speaking people of the world, who ought to stand side by side in the onward march of Christianity and civilization. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat that experience. I say to my fellow-Representatives here, when they talk of what "public sentiment" is, and what the clamor out of doors is, I want to ask, what is their duty here? Why do you not try to elevate public sentiment? Why do you not perform your duty, and endeavor to lead public sentiment in this country? Why should the representatives of the people on the floor of the House of Representatives be blown hither and yon like waste paper in the street corners on a windy day? The people, my associates, are looking to us. They think we ought to know more about these things than they. I think we ought to know more about them; and I think we ought to know a great deal more of the Spanish-Cuban controversy than we do now before taking the action that is suggested here and which might plunge us into the complications of a foreign war.

Somebody says, "Oh, Spain don't amount to very much anyhow. We can lick her easy." How many lives do you want to sacrifice to do it? Somebody said that the adoption of this resolution will not bring on a war. But why run the risk? It has been suggested, doubtless because of my opposition to this resolution and the policy it inaugurates, that the opposition was not that of a very brave man. I make no boast of bravery, and I did not hesitate to say that war is horrible. William Tecumseh Sherman said, "War is hell," and he knew a great deal more about war than I do. We should not permit ourselves—we can not afford to be rushed by popular clamor into what is unjustifiable and what is against the best interests of our country. Stop and reflect what it is that you propose to do.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have just as much sympathy, so far as my capability goes—for we are all different in our make-up—I think I have as much sympathy for people striving for freedom as as any other living man. I think I love liberty just as well, and think I sympathize as much with the necessities of other people and their misfortunes, as well as their efforts to gain freedom. But, Mr. Speaker, at the same time, we present a most remarkable spectacle here, when in our own country, even in the Republican party, there has come to be apparently either a tacit consent or an admission that we, with our Constitution, with our laws, and with our forms of government, are unable to maintain the independence and the liberty of our own citizens.

It is declared on this floor in every election case. We have that great race of people—I do not know of how many souls it consists, eight or ten millions of colored people, I believe—concerning whom it was said on yesterday by my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and by other gentlemen in the course of the discussion that over a vast expanse of our own country there are these millions of people who are still denied some of the most sacred rights guaranteed to the people of this country in the Declaration of Independence. With this condition confronting us, it is strange, indeed, for us to insist that the first duty resting on us is to dash across the Gulf of Mexico and establish and maintain the independence and freedom of the insurgents in the Island of Cuba. I can not so understand it. I do not believe it to be our duty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how do we get the information that we have upon the subject? I desire to be clearly understood. I desire in every possible way to avoid anything that might be construed into a criticism of either the action or the great ability of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. But I recognize that the pressure or the clamor, the persistence of what is called "public sentiment," sometimes sweeps a committee off its feet, and even Congress itself is at times swept from its moorings. But permit me to call your attention to the fact that in this great matter we have had no facts officially stated to us that would warrant the action proposed in running counter to the best judgment of our conservative people, while I am at liberty to say, from what already appears as exhibited in the action or the nonaction of the Administration, that the President and his advisers have not received information, officially, that they deem such would justify them in granting belligerent rights.

I am bound to believe that the Chief Magistrate of this country, with such information in his possession officially, would not delay an hour, and the fact that recognition has not been extended is evidence that there is no such information, and none such has been sent to Congress. We have statements, we have eloquent appeals, some of them from questionable sources. My attention was called the other day to an article in a New York paper in behalf of Cuba. Some gentleman has kindly disturbed my papers to which I wished to refer. I am under great obligations to him. You see this determination to interfere with other people's business is individual as well as collective. [Laughter.] It has taken possession of this body not only collectively but individually.

Well, my memory is pretty good, although it is a little more forceful to read the exact language. As I say, there was an article in a New York paper the other day, a very eloquent article, in behalf of the Cuban cause and denouncing Spanish outrages. It was signed by a man named Pierras. He spoke of the horror of the outrages upon Cubans, presenting them in the most lurid light. It turns out that this same man was once connected with the Pan-American Congress here, from some other portion of the civilized globe; that he made himself very obnoxious; that he was finally sent away by Mr. Secretary Blaine or discontinued in his position, and that he then attacked the American people in a most scurrilous article. The RECORD which I had here, which some friend of the insurgents has undoubtedly abstracted [laughter], and very wisely, too, contained a debate in the Senate to a portion of which I desired to refer. When that man was spoken of as sponsor for certain statements derogatory to the American people, just after the adjournment of the Pan-American Conference, Senator HAWLEY arose and denounced him as a liar and a blackguard. General HAWLEY is not a man who often resorts to that sort of explosive remark. He repeated it two or three times. Ah, my good friend from New York [Mr. RAY] has rescued the volume to which I desire to refer. This article was read, when Mr. HAWLEY arose and said:

I wish to inquire, in the first place, whether the Senator knows who wrote that; and, in the next place, whether it is quite fair and decorous and civil to foreigners and to respectable gentlemen in America to read us that mass of irresponsible blackguardism.

Then Mr. VEST said:

Whoever he is, he is the secretary of a society in the city of Buenos Ayres, and accompanied the delegation from the Argentine Republic to the Pan-American Conference.

Mr. HAWLEY. I regret, Mr. President, that I must leave town, but I wish to leave my parting remark that he is a liar and a blackguard.

A few days later Senator FRYE, of Maine, referred to the very same person in the following remarks:

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in a speech made in the Senate a few days ago, I am very sorry to say, caused to be read a letter, in my judgment a very infamous letter, in which the writer attacked grossly the character and qualifications of the American delegates to this Pan-American Congress, and in the course of his speech the Senator said that this person was connected with the Argentine Republic delegation, and, as I understood him, was a resident of that country.

Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. President, this man was a Cuban, never had been in the Argentine Republic in his life, had been a resident of New York City for fifteen years, engaged in merchandising. He could talk the Spanish and English languages equally well, and either by his own exertion, or in some other way, he became an invited guest with the members of this congress in their tour of the United States. He made himself of some use on account of his knowledge of the two languages. He made the members and delegates acquainted with each other, and when he came back to Washington he was elected as one of the secretaries of this conference. The American delegates voted for him for that position.

These very gentlemen whom he abuses so outrageously in that letter undoubtedly gave him this position of secretary. He had not been secretary a week before he began to make trouble. He assumed that he was bearing the full responsibility and the entire dignity of the international conference. He insisted upon constant personal interviews with the Secretary of State. He carried that to such an extent that the Secretary was compelled, in defense of himself and his office and his business and his duties, to refuse personal interviews to this man. Thereupon there was a revolt and trouble, and he tendered his resignation.

He next insisted that his pay was too small. His pay was $300 a month; as much, I think, as the pay of any head of a bureau in the city of Washington, is it not? I ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. It is larger, at any rate, than that of any clerk in the city of Washington and a very liberal salary for the duties he performed. They refused to increase his pay, and thereupon he tendered his resignation, and, I think, five times the resignation of this man was tendered to that conference, and at least four weeks were wasted over the quarrels and controversies and perplexities induced by this man.

Finally he offered his resignation once too often, and it was promptly accepted, and immediately he was in arms against the delegates representing the United States, and wrote this letter as a kind of circular to be distributed all over the Latin-American countries, abusing and traducing the American delegates in order to send broadcast over those countries the idea that the United States had selected fourth-rate men to meet the gentlemen from those Republics, and that that indicated the estimate which the United States was placing upon the gentlemen who had been sent here as delegates from those Republics.

I simply desired to make this statement so that it might be understood why this attack was made upon the United States and upon its delegates.

Now, I will not emulate the example of some people in this debate by saying that that discredits the Cuban cause, that every Cuban revolutionist is a "liar and a blackguard." I have no such idea: but I say that is one man whose testimony is being adduced to govern the opinions of American citizens and Representatives in regard to that matter.

Now, in regard to the actual status of the conflict, I make no confession when I say I do not know what the facts are; and I am as much in that position to-day as I was when this matter was first brought up. I read articles in the newspapers. They are colored on the one side and on the other. I understood my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT], to say that he has no knowledge of any Cubans being engaged in fighting against the rebellion.

Mr. HITT. I said I had no personal knowledge on the subject.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman said he had no personal knowledge. Mr. Speaker, neither have I; but I have the distinct averment, that comes from different sources, one of them the paper to which the gentleman referred, and which has been sent, I presume, to other members, a respectful document, purporting to be signed by gentlemen of Spanish blood in New York. I do not know who they are. I do not know how truthful their statements may be, but I insert the letter in the RECORD. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, March 23, 1896.

To the Congress of the United States:

At a meeting of native Spaniards residing and doing business in New York, friendly to the Government and people of the United States, and strongly desirous that the friendship between our nations shall stay unbroken, the undersigned were this day instructed by such meeting to make to you, in the spirit of that friendship, a statement of important facts, in correction of wide-spread misrepresentations, and in the hope that the spread of truth will prevent misunderstandings.

Spain, though once a despotism, is now a free land. In the past fifty years, step by step, freedom has been established. Spain is now governed by a parliament elected by the people, with universal suffrage.

In the same way, step by step, liberty has been established in the Spanish colonies. Cuba and Porto Rico are allowed to choose more than 60 members of the parliament of Spain.

This is a far greater liberty than Britain allows to the neighboring colony of Jamaica or to the Dominion of Canada—a far greater one than Britain ever allowed to any colony.

Had Britain let the North American colonies choose members of the British Parliament the American Revolution might never have occurred. Just what Britain then refused to North America—representation in connection with taxation—Spain has granted to Cuba. In fixing the taxes, not only in Cuba but in Spain, Cuba's representatives have votes.

The whole general taxation in Cuba, with more than a million and a half people, and territory about the size of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Virginia, or Tennessee, is only $22,000,000 a year.

Cuba has fewer people than the city of New York. Its total taxes are about half the taxes of New York for city use alone. Cuba's taxable property is about as much as that of Boston. But Boston and New York's city tax rates average over 1 per cent. Cuba's tax rate for all general purposes is less than 5 mills on the dollar. Cuba's sugar and tobacco products are about $100,000,000 a year. The taxes on these are about one-fourth of 1 per cent.

Such are the fruits of representation. The deputies are chosen by vote of all adult male citizens who pay $5 a year taxes. Men can also vote on taxes paid by their mothers, wives, and children. Holders of school or college degrees can vote without paying taxes.

Every province has its legislature and every municipality has its council, chosen by the voters therein. These councils and legislatures, with leading taxpayers, choose the senators from Cuba in the parliament of Spain.

Cubans are appointed to all public offices in Cuba as well as in Spain. Very many such offices in Cuba are filled by native Cubans, subject only to civil-service rules. The rector of the University of Havana is a Cuban. The faculties of all the colleges and the teachers of public schools are mostly Cubans. The courts contain 36 judges, 27 of whom are Cubans.

The parliament of Spain, with the full consent of Cuba's representatives therein, years since abolished slavery.

The presence of a great mass of freedmen, still burdened with the ignorance due to bondage, and the insurrections of a small but turbulent portion of these freedmen, with a small part of the more ignorant and idle white men, have obliged the parliament of Spain to go slowly and cautiously in extending freedom and home rule to Cuba. But two years ago the representatives from that island of all parties unanimously agreed on a bill transferring the administration of Cuban affairs to a colonial council, and this bill, asked for by the whole Cuban delegation and by all parties in Cuba, the parliament of Spain, on motion of Señor Abarzuza, minister for the colonies and himself a Cuban, enacted as a law.

The great majority of the people of Cuba, having got what reforms they asked, are satisfied to remain in the Spanish Empire. But the insurrectionists, who are but a small part of the people, mostly ignorant, violent, and lawless, whose chief leaders are foreigners or natives of Cuba whose long absence from the island prevents them from understanding the present state of affairs, and who are supported by the contributions of absentees equally ignorant—these insurgents refused to acquiesce in the reforms achieved, demanded what the mass of the people do not desire, independence, and, under cover of this unpopular demand, are roaming through the country, committing all sorts of misdeeds, and preventing the industrious poor from earning their living, and on the approach of troops retreating into the mountains.

When in 1861 attempts were made to overthrow by arms and force the Government of the United States, the American people declared that this should never be; that any change should come through peace and not through war; and they sternly crushed the effort at armed revolution and forcible separation. This is the precise situation in Cuba to-day. Armed revolution and forcible separation the people of Cuba do not desire. Though Cubans are not required to do military duty, 40,000 Cubans are voluntarily fighting side by side with Spaniards to suppress disorder and crime, uphold law, freedom, and safety to property and life, and enable the masses to earn their living in peace. The people of Cuba are now doing what the people of America did in the same situation; and they desire the sympathy of America. They will never submit to be ruled by such men as the insurgents show themselves to be. To be ruled by such men means the ruin of the industries and commerce of Cuba by the dominion of ignorance, tyranny, and fraud. The owners of over $800,000,000 of property are under arms, operating in the field to suppress these men and restore order. Three hundred Cuban officers, from major-generals through all ranks, are on the rolls of the army; and not one has joined the disturbers.

Has my time expired, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The gentleman has a half minute remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Considering the interruptions to which I have been subjected, I will ask the House for a few minutes longer. I should like twenty minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended until 5 o'clock, the time when we take a recess.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope my friend's time will be extended, but I should like to ask him a question right where he is now.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope my colleague will not interrupt me.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will not interrupt you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended until 5 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. SKINNER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended until within five minutes of 5 o'clock. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] desires five minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] must leave for home this evening, and he is entitled to the recognition which is asked.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, there are other gentlemen who would like to be heard. I should like to speak on this question myself, but I will yield to my colleague what time there is to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended until five minutes to 5 o'clock?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire whether it is proposed to have a session of the House to-morrow, or to adjourn over until Monday?

Mr. HITT. I hope we can have a session to-morrow. This matter has been deferred a long time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My time is slipping along very fast——

Mr. HOPKINS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I will not abuse the patience of the House. I have very few words of my own to say, but I desire to call the attention of this House to words that have been uttered by men who ought to be heard, and heard respectfully, by the American Congress. First, however, in regard to this matter of the actual status in Cuba. I have received another document, concerning the accuracy of whose statements I can not vouch, but it comes to me under the authority of a respectable publication. It is the organ of the building and loan associations of the United States. It claims to represent 6,000 of these associations, which we all recognize as among the most useful in our country. This paper editorially states that it had taken pains to look into this matter or into some contradictory statements that had been made, and it gives its conclusions, some of which I desire to call to the attention of the House for what they may be worth. It says:

UNMASKED—READ THE TRUTH ABOUT THE "REPUBLIC OF CUBA."

Our proposal, in our first edition this month, that both Spaniards and Cubans stop fighting and that the whole people of Cuba freely discuss their form of government and settle it by peaceful vote—which proposal will also be found in this edition—is so new and so fair that it gained prompt and wide attention. From many quarters come facts and points which throw strong light on the case.

So much has been said that we have investigated for ourselves.

Here is what, to our astonishment, we find:

The American press and public are misinformed and misled.

A great party of Cuba's people oppose independence.

In fact, this home-rule party, the "Autonomists," who prefer to remain in the Spanish Empire, are the great mass of the people.

A more astonishing fact is that many Cubans, both there and elsewhere, who are opposed to the "Republic of Cuba" dread to say so. They fear that these self-styled "republicans" will ruin their property, harm them in business, or commit outrages on their families and friends, as those separatists are daily doing to others.

We have tried hard to get these gentlemen in this country to speak out; but they dare not.

They complain bitterly that the truth and the views of the great majority of Cuba's people are not known to the American press and people—are carefully withheld; and these Cuban gentlemen desire us to make known to the journals and citizens of this country the facts we have learned.

Here they are:

The "Republic of Cuba" is a fraud.

Cuba's people are not fighting for independence.

They are fighting against it.

Forty thousand Cubans are in arms to prevent it.

These 40,000 men are not in the Spanish army. They have volunteered as soldiers against independence; to put down the so-called "Republic."

They own nearly all the property and pay nearly all the taxes of the island.

If they are satisfied, what right have others to complain of the taxes?

Especially, what right have those who do not pay taxes to make those taxes an excuse for war, plunder, rapine, arson, and murder?

Three hundred Cubans are officers in the army and navy of Spain. They hold all ranks, from second lieutenants to major-generals.

Not one of these 300 Cuban officers has joined the "army of the Republic." They are fighting against it.

Not one of the three political parties—Conservatives, Reformers, Home Rulers—desires independence.

The "army of the Republic" are small bands, like the "jayhawkers" of our civil war, the guerrillas of Spain, the brigands of Italy and Sicily, the buccaneers of the West Indies. They fly party flags to cloak their crimes. When troops come near, they hide in woods, swamps, and mountain dens.

Their leaders—Gomez, Gil, and Roloff—are not Cubans. Gomez fought to subject his own country, San Domingo, to Spain. He sold the Cuban rebels out to Spain in 1878. He later tried to prove in public that Cuba never should be independent. These leaders are professional soldiers, adventurers, habitual disturbers.

General Sherman made short work of such men here.

They are not supported by the people, but by foreigners and absentee Cubans, who do not know the present state of things.

The cry that Cuba's people are fighting for freedom and self-rule is false. They have freedom and self-rule now, except as rebellion prevents.

Spain was a despotism. So was Cuba. Spain was oppressed and robbed thereby. So was Cuba, but not worse than the mother land. Spain was almost ruined.

Let practical men not confuse their minds by mixing the misdeeds of the dead with the doings of to-day.

Spain now is a free country, ruled by a parliament chosen through universal suffrage.

In this parliament Cuba has 64 representatives.

Forty-six deputies are elected by all adult male citizens, of every race, who pay, or whose families pay, $5 a year taxes, and all such who have taken degrees in schools or colleges need not even pay this small sum.

Every province has its legislature; every town its council, chosen by these voters.

These legislatures and councils, with the main taxpayers, choose the 18 senators from Cuba.

The general taxes are laid by the parliament of Spain, in which Cuba has these 64 votes, cast by representatives chosen by the taxpayers.

The statement that Cuba is "fighting against taxation without representation" is absurd.

Cuba's delegation, voting together, can hold the balance of power between parties in Spain—can turn out of power any ministry that refuses their demands.

Is not this "representation"?

Had Britain given America 50 members in the House of Commons and 20 in the House of Lords—had she enabled America to vote on the taxes, to hold the balance of power in Parliament, and to turn out of power any party and any ministry that refused American demands—Americans would have had no cause to complain, no wrong to resist; the American Revolution would not have occurred.

Spain treats Cuba better than Britain treats Jamaica, Guiana, or Canada. Not one representative from any colony votes or sits in the British Parliament.

None ever did.

Britain's Parliament never enacted reforms in these colonies on request of colonial members. There were none.

But the ports of Cuba were opened to the trade of all the world at the request of a Cuban deputy, Señor Arango, a leading journalist of Habana. The Spanish Government granted all the reforms which he requested in the course of many years; and, far from punishing him, made him a member of the imperial council for the colonies in Madrid, and later a member of the Spanish house of lords, which has since been abolished.

Britain never made a colonist an officer of the House of Commons. But in the late parliament of Spain a Cuban, Señor Francisco Lastres, of Habana, was elected by the Spanish majority vice-president of the house of representatives.

Britain never made a citizen of Jamaica, Guiana, or Canada minister for the colonies; but the late parliament of Spain made a Cuban, Señor Abarzuza, minister for the colonies.

The whole representation from Cuba, of all parties, in that parliament united on a bill transferring the main administration of Cuban affairs from Madrid to Habana and creating a colony executive council. This Cuban measure the parliament, on motion of that Cuban minister for the colonies (Abarzuza), unanimously enacted into a law. It has been delayed in execution only by the insurrection.

The Cuban delegation, of all parties, even the most radical, consented, in order to get the executive administration transferred to Habana, consented that the home Government should reserve the right to confirm or reverse the colony council's acts, should appoint half the members (the other half being elected by the taxpaying voters of the provinces according to population), and should continue to appoint the governor-general of the colony; that he should preside over the council, decide questions in case of tie votes, and suspend members if necessary.

This is the common course when any colony is first intrusted with self-government. Having got this much by peaceful methods, and these reservations being accepted by the whole representation of the colony, there is no excuse whatever for violence and blood. Peaceful means, step by step, will complete the work.

The parliament of Spain years ago abolished slavery in Cuba, established freedom of the press, and secured personal liberty to all.

If Cuba's people ever do desire independence, it can, and should, be had without war and carnage.

The greatest of all crimes is to begin a war. William T. Sherman, General-in-Chief of the United States Army, said truly, "War is hell!" It includes crimes of every kind.

The insurgents had no ground for beginning war; and their record is a frightful mass of crimes—robberies, murders, arson, wrecking railroads, ruining bridges, destroying buildings and crops, undoing the industrious work of years, and, worse than all, starving thousands of honest workmen by forbidding them to make sugar, and so earn their bread. These bandits deserve no sympathy or recognition from America. They deserve the fate they suffer when they are caught, the same that guerrillas met in our civil war. No act nor word of the American people or Government should give them the slightest aid. Nor should the money or blood of our people be spent to help them.

This country has no business meddling with matters elsewhere. With territory as large as all Europe and 70,000,000 people—as many as England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Holland, Spain, and Portugal together—far more people than Canada, South America, and all America besides—we have all we can do to manage our own affairs.

The disturbers who are trying, in Congress and outside, to draw this country into such meddling are seeking to repeat the stale trick of tyrants—make war to divert the public from wrongs at home—or to fill their pockets at the cost of their countrymen's cash and blood.

We do not take the side of Spain against Cuba. We take the side of the people of Cuba against violence and crime; the side of the people of America against crushing taxes and wicked bloodshed.

The toiling masses of this country have burdens and problems enough without adding these.

Mr. TUCKER. Where is that paper published?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is published in New York; called the Building and Loan News. I give it for what it is worth. It is published by evidently a reputable paper; and it seems to me there must be some modicum of truth in that statement, affirmed by these Spanish residents of New York.

I will try to call attention very briefly, for my time is limited, to the policy of this country in regard to this sort of interference. Reference has been made here several times to the action of General Grant. I want to emphasize the fact that General Grant in 1875 declined to recognize the belligerency of the insurgents of Cuba on grounds stated in his special message to Congress. It was stated here, and truthfully, that General Grant once had prepared a message of recognition, or a proclamation. That is true. Mr. Fish, with a calm equipoise that must be admired to-day, declined to issue it, and persuaded General Grant to issue the message from which I will quote. And within a few weeks the diary of Secretary Fish, one of the ablest diplomats and one of the greatest patriots in our country, has disclosed the fact that subsequently, when he desired to retire from his position as Secretary of State, General Grant in reply stated that he was under great obligations to Mr. Fish, and that on at least two occasions the Secretary had saved him from committing mistakes; and that one of those occasions was when he was about to issue a proclamation recognizing the belligerency of Cuba.

In that message President Grant said (this was in 1875):

I have hoped that Spain would be enabled to establish peace in her colony, to afford security to the property and the interests of our citizens, and allow legitimate scope to trade and commerce and the natural productions of the island. Because of this hope, and from an extreme reluctance to interfere in the most remote manner in the affairs of another and a friendly nation, especially of one whose sympathy and friendship in the struggling infancy of our own existence must ever be remembered with gratitude, I have patiently and anxiously awaited the progress of events. Our own civil conflict is too recent for us not to consider the difficulties which surround a government distracted by a dynastic rebellion at home at the same time that it has to cope with a separate insurrection in a distant colony. But, whatever causes may have produced the situation which so grievously affects our interests, it exists, with all its attendant evils, operating directly upon this country and its people. Thus far all the efforts of Spain have proved abortive, and time has marked no improvement in the situation. The armed bands of either side now occupy nearly the same ground as in the past, with the difference, from time to time, of more lives sacrificed, more property destroyed, and wider extents of fertile and productive fields and more and more of valuable property constantly wantonly sacrificed to the incendiary's torch.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that it is not only conceded, but it is the boast of those who champion the cause of the insurgents that the incendiarism, the destruction of crops, the ravaging and burning of villages by the insurgents, is being done in order to weaken the cause of Spain and to drive the people of that island into insurrection. I do not understand that it is alleged anywhere—certainly I have not heard it—that the Government in Spain has entered upon any systematic destruction of public or private property; but that the destruction of towns, the laying waste of fields, this widespread disorder and anarchy, is being carried on by those armed bands in the name of liberty and of the people.

Only a few weeks ago we had a proclamation issued by the leader of the insurrectionary forces absolutely threatening any man who attempted to produce sugar on his plantation, thus depriving peaceful citizens of Cuba of their only means of providing subsistence for their families; the idea being to shorten the sugar crop of the world so as to compel interference to put a stop to a war that was thus disturbing the comfort of mankind. That was the case in 1875, and it is so to-day. Now, says Mr. Fish (and however little gentlemen may regard my judgment or my opinions, I ask them to give calm consideration to this definition by Mr. Fish of the duty of a nation under international obligations):

In contests of this nature, where a considerable body of people who have attempted to free themselves of the control of the superior government have reached such point in occupation of territory, in power, and in general organization as to constitute in fact a body politic, having a government in substance as well as in name, possessed of the elements of stability and equipped with the machinery for the administration of internal policy and the execution of its laws, prepared and able to administer justice at home as well as in its dealings with other powers, it is within the province of those other powers to recognize its existence as a new and independent nation. In such cases other nations simply deal with an actually existing condition of things, and recognize as one of the powers of the earth that body politic which, possessing the necessary elements, has, in fact, become a new power; in a word, the creation of a new state is a fact.

It is not our duty, nor is it competent for us, to assume to establish such a condition of things. Before we can recognize it that condition of things must be in fact established. Every man knows that we have had no demonstration of the establishment of such a condition of things in Cuba up to this time. It was for that reason that General Grant refused recognition.

The creation of a State, as Mr. Fish says, is a fact. It is not a matter of sentiment. You can not create "the Republic of Cuba" by voting it in the American Congress to be a State. You can not establish belligerent rights unless belligerency is an international fact.

To establish the condition of things essential to the recognition of this fact, there must be a people occupying a known territory, united under some known and defined form of government, acknowledged by those subject thereto, in which the functions of government are administered by usual methods, competent to mete out justice to citizens and strangers, to afford remedies for public and for private wrongs, and able to assume the correlative international obligations and capable of performing the corresponding international duties resulting from its acquisition of the rights of sovereignty. A power should exist, complete in its organization, ready to take and able to maintain its place among the nations of the earth.

While conscious that the insurrection in Cuba has shown a strength and endurance which make it at least doubtful whether it be in the power of Spain to subdue it, it seems unquestionable that no such civil organization exists which may be recognized as an independent government, capable of performing its international obligations and entitled to be treated as one of the powers of the earth. A recognition under such circumstances would be inconsistent with the facts, and would compel the power granting it soon to support by force the government to which it had really given its only claim of existence. In my judgment, the United States should adhere to the policy and the principles which have heretofore been its sure and safe guides in like contests between revolted colonies and their mother country, and, acting only upon the clearest evidence, should avoid any possibility of suspicion or of imputation.

A recognition of the independence of Cuba being in my opinion impracticable and indefensible, the question which next presents itself is that of the recognition of belligerent rights in the parties to the contest.

In a former message to Congress I had occasion to consider this question, and reached the conclusion that the conflict in Cuba, dreadful and devastating as were its incidents, did not rise to the fearful dignity of war. Regarding it now, after this lapse of time, I am unable to see that any notable success or any marked or real advance on the part of the insurgents has essentially changed the character of the contest. It has acquired greater age, but not greater or more formidable proportions.

Referring now to another point that has been brought up in this debate, the appeal to our retaliatory disposition, I wish to quote the advice of a great soldier and statesman. We are told that because Spain did something that we did not like at the outbreak of the rebellion in this country, therefore we should retaliate now by recognizing the belligerency of Cuba. Upon that subject General Grant used these words, which should have great weight:

It is possible that the acts of foreign powers, and even acts of Spain herself, of this very nature might be pointed to in defense of such recognition. But now, as in its past history, the United States should carefully avoid the false lights which might lead it into the mazes of doubtful law and of questionable propriety, and adhere rigidly and sternly to the rule which has been its guide, of doing only that which is right and honest and of good report. The question of according or of withholding rights of belligerency must be judged in every case in view of the particular attending facts. Unless justified by necessity, it is always and justly regarded as an unfriendly act and a gratuitous demonstration of moral support to the rebellion. It is necessary and it is required when the interests and rights of another government or of its people are so far affected by a pending civil conflict as to require a definition of its relations to the parties thereto. But this conflict must be one which will be recognized in the sense of international law as war. Belligerence, too, is a fact. The mere existence of contending armed bodies and their occasional conflicts do not constitute war in the sense referred to.

Applying to the existing condition of affairs in Cuba the tests recognized by publicists and writers on international law, and which have been observed by nations of dignity, honesty, and power, when free from sensitive or selfish and unworthy motives, I fail to find in the insurrection the existence of such a substantial political organization, real, palpable, and manifest to the world, having the forms and capable of the ordinary functions of government toward its own people and to other states, with courts for the administration of justice, with a local habitation, possessing such organization of force, such material, such occupation of territory as to take the contest out of the category of a mere rebellious insurrection or occasional skirmishes and place it on the terrible footing of war, to which a recognition of belligerency would aim to elevate it. The contest, moreover, is solely on land. The insurrection has not possessed itself of a single seaport whence it may send forth its flag, nor has it any means of communication with foreign powers except through the military lines of its adversaries. No apprehension of any of those sudden and difficult complications which a war upon the ocean is apt to precipitate upon the vessels, both commercial and national, and upon the consular officers of other powers, calls for the definition of their relations to the parties to the contest.

Considered as a question of expediency, I regard the accordance of belligerent rights still to be as unwise and premature as I regard it to be at present indefensible as a measure of right. Such recognition entails upon the country according the rights which flow from it difficult and complicated duties, and requires the exaction from the contending parties of the strict observance of their rights and obligations. It confers the right of search upon the high seas by vessels of both parties; it would subject the carrying of arms and munitions of war, which now may be transported freely and without interruption in the vessels of the United States, to detention and to possible seizure; it would give rise to countless vexatious questions; would release the parent Government from responsibility for acts done by the insurgents, and would invest Spain with the right to exercise the supervision recognized by our treaty of 1795 over our commerce on the high seas, a very large part of which, in its traffic between the Atlantic and the Gulf States and between all of them and the States on the Pacific, passes through the waters which wash the shores of Cuba. The exercise of this supervision could scarce fail to lead, if not to abuses, certainly to collisions perilous to the peaceful relations of the two States. There can be little doubt to what result such supervision would before long draw this nation. It would be unworthy of the United States to inaugurate the possibilities of such result by measures of questionable right or expediency or by any indirection. Apart from any question of theoretical right, I am satisfied that while the accordance of belligerent rights to the insurgents in Cuba might give them a hope and an inducement to protract the struggle, it would be but a delusive hope and would not remove the evils which this Government and its people are experiencing, but would draw the United States into complications which it has waited long and suffered much to avoid.

To my mind those are words of absolute wisdom.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the House would kindly extend for a few moments the time for taking the recess, I should like to read a few words of George Washington.

Mr. HITT. I ask unanimous consent that the hour for the recess be deferred for thirty minutes, with the hope of closing this debate and this whole proceeding this evening and adjourning until Monday. Otherwise we shall have to sit here to-morrow. Why not close the whole subject this evening?

Mr. TUCKER. I can not agree to that. I do not object to extending the time as requested by my friend from Maine, but I can not consent to closing the debate in so brief a time as my friend from Illinois suggests. There are a number of gentlemen who wish to speak on this question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I ask that the hour for the recess be extended ten minutes, so that I may read a few extracts from President Washington.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] asks that the time for taking the recess be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. SKINNER rose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Reserving the time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can not consent unless the gentleman from Maine will agree to give me one minute in which to make a statement in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to extending the time for the recess for ten minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, in that memorable legacy, his Farewell Address, which President Washington left to the American people as a gift, commensurate with his relations to the new nation which he had so preeminently helped to establish, he uses some very instructive and weighty words which, it seems to me, ought easily to find application at the present time. We all know the strength of Washington's advice, and the earnestness of his appeal to his countrymen, to avoid foreign complications. In that connection he used these memorable words:

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas, is it rendered impossible by its vices? * * *

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

Again he says:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Now for the application. We are called upon in the name of patriotism, in the name of brotherhood, in the name of humanity, in the name of sympathy. We have had cited frequently in this debate the help that France extended to us when we were engaged in the struggle to establish our liberty—help that we all recognize, and our recognition of which is attested by the portrait of our great French ally, Lafayette, that adorns this Chamber. Yet, Mr. Speaker, no American familiar with our history can forget that, with all that obligation of gratitude—with a knowledge such as Washington must have had more clearly and deeply than any other man, of what we owed to France—we find that later in his career he was not swept from his feet by the clamor for interfering in behalf of France in a European complication, but steadily and firmly resisted that appeal in the interest of the American people and because he believed our duty was to establish the rights and strengthen the foundations of our own Government. He said:

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

I see the keen eye of my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] upon me; and I anticipate his statement shortly to be made that this was a proclamation of neutrality on the part of the United States between France and the allies with whom she was engaged in war; and that "neutrallty" is what this resolution proposes. But I want to remind my friend and the House that I am addressing myself now to that phase of this question which deals with the obligation assumed to rest upon us to interefere in behalf of somebody with whom we have sympathy, how far we are called upon to interfere in Cuba because we may sympathize with the struggle of the Cuban insurgents, how far it is our duty to embroil our nation in a war because we desire to see some people somewhere, and perhaps especially in the Island of Cuba, establish reforms and obtain rights that they do not now enjoy. It is impossible that any such obligation should be so strong in this case as was our obligation to France to aid her in war when she had so aided us in war. Yet in all the stress of those circumstances Washington stood like a rock against interference. He asserted the neutrality of the American Republic between our ancient ally and her enemies, and sustained himself upon the broadest ground. He says further in his Farewell Address:

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position.

That is the position I want this country to take in regard to any interference with the strife in Cuba to-day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will my friend allow me a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have just stated what I know my friend wants to refer to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wanted to ask whether there is any proposition here to take any other than a neutral position?

Mr. BOUTELLE. My friend did not do me the honor to listen to my remarks, or he would not have asked that question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And I wanted further to ask, How is it an act of war to recognize the belligerency of those who are at war with another country?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have just read the opinion of General Grant on that subject—an opinion expressed with so much more strength than any words of mine could express it that I did not care to do more than read it. If my friend had done me the honor to listen while I was reading from public documents the expressions of that great captain of our armies and that great President of the United States he would have observed that I did not attempt to put upon this proposition my own version, but planted myself behind the joint judgment of Hamilton Fish and Ulysses S. Grant, as I am now putting myself behind the judgment and the expressions of George Washington, of whom I suppose the gentleman has heard. [Laughter.]

Further he says:

Having taken it—

That position—

I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

Again, and I call special attention to the language:

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? * * * * * * *

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

And further on:

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1796, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

I hold in my hand a volume of the writings of Washington, edited by Jared Sparks, in which the President of the United States submits to his Cabinet, in a communication dated April, 1793, thirteen questions, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, 18th of April, 1793.

I. Shall a proclamation issue for the purpose of preventing interferences of the citizens of the United States in the war between France and Great Britain, etc.? Shall it contain a declaration of neutrality or not? What shall it contain?

II. Shall a minister from the Republic of France be received?

III. If received, shall it be absolutely without qualifications; and if with qualifications, of what kind?

IV. Are the United States obliged by good faith to consider the treaties heretofore made with France as applying to the present situation of the parties? May they either renounce them or hold them suspended till the Government of France shall be established?

V. If they have the right, is it expedient to do either, and which?

VI. If they have an option would it be a breach of neutrality to consider the treaties still in operation?

VII. If the treaties are to be considered as now in operation is the guaranty in the treaty of alliance applicable to a defensive war only, or to war either offensive or defensive?

VIII. Does the war in which France is engaged appear to be offensive or defensive on her part; or of a mixed and equivocal character?

IX. If of a mixed and equivocal character, does the guaranty in any event apply to such a war?

X. What is the effect of a guaranty such as that to be found in the treaty of alliance between the United States and France?

XI. Does any article in either of the treaties prevent ships of war, other than privateers, of the powers opposed to France from coming into the ports of the United States to act as convoys to their own merchantmen? Or does it lay any other restraint upon them more than would apply to the ships of war with France?

XII. Should the future Regent of France send a minister to the United States, ought he to be received?

XIII. Is it necessary or advisable to call together the two Houses of Congress with a view to the present posture of European affairs? If it is, what should be the particular object of such a call?

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

That Cabinet, to which those inquiries were propounded, I may say, was composed of men who, I suppose, are of fair repute to-day, such men as Thomas Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton, and men of that character. The Cabinet determined, on the first question propounded, that a proclamation should issue forbidding all citizens to take part in hostilities upon the high seas with either of the belligerent powers, and warning them of penalties to be inflicted in the event that they should do so. The opinion of the Cabinet was as follows:

At a meeting of the heads of Departments and of the Attorney-General at the President's, April 19, 1793, to consider the foregoing questions proposed by the President, it was determined by all on the first question that a proclamation shall issue forbidding any citizen or citizens to take part in any hostilities on the high seas with or against belligerent powers, and warning them against carrying to any such powers any of those articles deemed contraband according to the modern usage of nations, and enjoining them from all acts and proceedings inconsistent with the duties of a friendly nation toward those at war.

PROCLAMATION.

Whereas it appears that a state of war existing in Austria, Prussia, Sardinia, Great Britain, and the United Netherlands on the one part and France on the other, and the duty and interest of the United States require that they should with sincerity and good faith adopt and pursue a conduct friendly and impartial to the belligerent powers:

I have therefore thought by these presents to declare the disposition of the United States to observe the conduct aforesaid toward those powers, respectively, and to exhort and warn the citizens of the United States carefully to avoid all acts and proceedings whatsoever which may in any manner tend to contravene such disposition.

I may say in this connection that there is an explanatory note appended to the third question propounded by President Washington, which throws considerable light upon the feeling then existing in reference to this question. It is in the following words:

On the third question (propounded by President Washington) Jefferson and Randolph were of opinion that the minister should be received absolutely and without qualifications. Hamilton and Knox deemed advisable that the reception of the minister expected from the Republic of France should be qualified substantially to this effect:

"That the Government of the United States, uniformly entertaining cordial wishes for the happiness of the French nation and disposed to maintain with it an amicable communication and intercourse, uninterrupted by political vicissitudes, does not hesitate to receive him in the character which his credentials import; yet, considering the origin, course, and circumstances of the relations continued between the two countries, and the existing position of the affairs of France, it is deemed advisable and proper on the part of the United States to reserve for future consideration in discussing the question whether the operation of the treaties, by which those relations were formed, ought not to be deemed temporarily and provisionally suspended; and under this impression it is thought due, in the spirit of candor and friendly procedure, to apprise him beforehand the intention to reserve that question, lest silence on the point should occasion misconstruction."

With reference to the foregoing questions submitted by President Washington, I desire also, Mr. Speaker, to call the special attention of the House to a letter from Henry Lee, so well known as "Light-Horse Harry," addressed to President Washington from Richmond on the 14th day of June, 1793, in which he says:

My DEAR SIR: Plain and evident as is the wise policy of neutrality on the part of the United States during the present European war, I find that the papers teem with publications reprobating this system.

If I am to judge of the feelings and dispositions of the people of the United States from what I believe to be the temper of the people of Virginia on this question, I can not doubt that nine-tenths of America applaud the policy adopted and feel increased gratitude and love for the man who has declared the same as the rule of conduct for his fellow-citizens. There are in all societies at all times a set of men anxious for change in the political machine and fond of confusion. This disposition results in part from love of novelty, from ruined private circumstances and disappointment in political stations. This class of men receive the aid of the wicked and abandoned of every description, and therefore in free countries are considered more numerous than they really are, because they are noisy, clamorous, and impudent.

[Applause and laughter.]

But when their weight in society is taken they will be found as light as straw.

[Laughter.]

So it is here at present. If a stranger were asked his opinion of the wishes of the people of this country with respect to war he would probably declare the same to be universally favorable; for he would gather his information from the conversations he has heard at taverns, where this order of men abound, gambling and drinking all night, and all day abusing men and measures, however respectable, however proper.

[Laughter and applause.]

I returned yesterday from a visit to our arsenal at the Point of Fork, and took occasion during my journey to talk freely with the planters respecting your proclamation. I found every person regarding it as highly wise, duly timed, and all expressed a confidence in you adhering invariably to its purpose.

To my mind these communications were not unexpected, and yet I profess I derived great satisfaction from them because from the clamor issuing out of the towns and promulgated in the papers, I began to fear that the golden prospects of felicity before us would be lost by our country in spite of the wisdom and firmness of our Government, and I have been induced to give to you my observations thereon as in your situation at this crisis the happiness of the people requires you should be well acquainted with their opinions.

When M. Genet was here we conversed very freely with respect to the neutrality of the United States. I attempted to convince him, and I thought with some effect, that from the superiority of the enemy's fleet it was the only way we could take which promised to France those provisions which we had and which she might want, and concluded the argument I held on this subject by asserting that, had you determined the interests of France to every other consideration, you could not have acted more effectually than you did when you issued your proclamation, and that happily on this occasion, while you did the greatest good to the United States, you did all the possible good to their allies; that we had no fleet, no army, no money, to authorize us to take a part in the war with effect, and to do it pitifully was to risk our own destruction without the consolation of affording material aid to our friend.

He seemed to acquiesce in my reasoning, but insinuated that in case the royal government was reestablished in France the kings of Europe would combine to destroy liberty here, and that our existence as a nation depended on the success of the republican system, and that we might conveniently make an important diversion in her favor on our southern and northern neighbors.

To this I opposed our infant situation as a people, our love of peace, the heavy debt which oppresses us in consequence of the last war, the probable futility of such vast enterprises, and the certainty that France would derive more benefit from holding within her own bosom all her means of men and money than she possibly could by such quixotic adventures. I augured ill of their late efforts against Belgium (which have turned out since as I presumed) and contended that the sure way to effect their object was to be content with defending their own country.

The impressions which he seemed to entertain when we parted induced me to hope that he would never attempt to disturb the system of neutrality adopted.

But opinions of moderation and wisdom can scarcely be held long by any man in his situation when our citizens seemed to take an active part in commending very opposite conduct. I judge by what I read in the Philadelphia papers, then, that his will be soon turned from those proper sentiments which he possessed when here and that our only route to national prosperity may experience new obstructions.

But, sir, let whatever may happen or be effected, in your firmness we all rest, thoroughly convinced that you can never be brought to depart from that line of conduct which in your judgment best promotes the public good.

With best wishes for your health and happiness, I am ever your most affectionate friend and humble servant,

HENRY LEE.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My time has expired and I must close my argument. [Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute, which the Chair understands is to be yielded to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly, I yield that to the gentleman, and hope it will not be necessary to ask a further extension of time for a reply.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I intended, in my interruption of the gentleman from Maine a few moments ago, to say that a sentiment had been expressed in Massachusetts against the proposition that he was advancing, and in favor of that contended for by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I now quote the language of the Massachusetts Republican State convention, embodied in the platform adopted the 27th day of March:

We sympathize with the Cubans in their struggle for independence. As friends of freedom everywhere we wish them success and believe that the United States should use its influence and good offices in the interest of humanity to bring to an end the useless and bloody war now desolating Cuba, and to give to the people of that island peace and self-government.

[Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER], the Chair understands, is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I had just risen to remind the Chair that I had included that in my request for an extension of time.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I represent the most ancient and at the same time the most patriotic territory within this Government; a territory where Sir Walter Raleigh first landed; the first colony where the foot of the Anglo-Saxon pressed American soil; the territory whereupon this country, this great continent, was dedicated to God and afterwards to liberty; the territory in which the first form of civil government on American soil was organized and out of which this great Government has grown.

I only say that, Mr. Speaker, prefatory to the remarks which I am impelled to make when my eyes fall upon the flag which overhangs your head. Because, as I look upon the Stars and Stripes there, I recall the fact that it is the same flag which floated over the venerated veterans of the Revolution, which cheered the half-fed and half-clad heroes of Valley Forge, which waved over the redoubts of Bunker Hill, which floated from the masthead of the Bon Homme Richard, which kissed the breezes over the waters of Erie and Champlain, which waved in triumph over the immortal field of Chippewa. And, Mr. Speaker, when I recall the anxious hours during which the followers of that flag were fighting for life and for liberty; when I turn my eyes to the south and see, a few leagues from Florida, the Cuban patriots fighting for liberty as our Revolutionary fathers were fighting, I turn with the Cubans to that flag as the Emperor Constantine did to the cross in the heavens, to in hoc signo vinces. As written then, the Cubans think in this sign we shall conquer.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the Cubans look upon this flag to-day as the emblem of liberty, as we look upon the cross as the emblem of Christianity; and wherever you would advance the cross to establish the Christian religion, I take that flag as the counterpart of the cross, as the emblem of liberty. I would place it over Cuba. I would have this flag, the emblem of liberty, floating over Cuba, and it ought to wave in triumph over her dominion, and she ought to be made a State of this Union. These palliative measures do not concern us. They accomplish nothing unless that flag stands for liberty. And liberty to the Cuban is as much as liberty to Americans. I want to see it established in every land and on every sea, not only in America but over every people on this continent who ask for the blessings of liberty.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House will now take a recess until 8 o'clock, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will please discharge the duties of the Chair.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report clause 2 of Rule XXVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar, under the special order.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 56, nays none.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

ELIZABETH DESHLER WHITING.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first business on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1050) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Deshler Whiting.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I think that is hardly on the Calendar. That is the bill which the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] had restored to its place to-day.

Mr. DANIELS. It was restored to its place on the Calendar by order of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that when the Clerk reads a bill he give us the Calendar number.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill has no Calendar number, having been recommitted to the committee, and reported back from the committee to-day.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Its former number on the Calendar was 92, but having been taken off it lost its place by way of number; but by order of the House it was restored to the Calendar, to be the first bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill has been read, and the report has been read. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What is this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is one which was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, and was reported to-day by unanimous consent and placed upon the Calendar in its old position.

Mr. DANIELS. I will say to the gentleman that the bill passed the House in a former Congress, on the 2d of March, but too late to pass the Senate.

Mr. ERDMAN. It is not that bill on which the other side of the House antagonized the gentleman from New York, is it?

Mr. DANIELS. Not at all, sir. I ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH MOORE ENGLISH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1271) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Moore English, widow of Rear-Admiral Earl English, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, this is a Senate bill with quite a lengthy report. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MILES] makes the report, and I ask unanimous consent that he make a statement in regard to this bill without consuming the time necessary for the reading of a lengthy report.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the railroad proceedings we had this afternoon, I think it would not hurt if the House heard these bills and reports in full. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. MILES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1271) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 20) as their own, and respectfully recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 20, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1271) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English, have examined the same and report:

During the third session of the Fifty-third Congress both Houses of Congress passed a bill in behalf of this claimant, but which went to the Executive at so late a day in the session as not to receive consideration. The history of the bill is as follows:

The House Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the bill at $50 per month, but when passed it was reduced to $30. The Senate Committee on Pensions recognized the fact that the claimant was justly entitled to a higher rate, but in consequence of the near approach of the close of the Fifty-third Congress, adopted the House report and passed the bill, which, as before stated, did not reach the President in time to receive his signature.

The present bill proposes to pension the claimant at the rate of $50 per month. Mrs. English's petition for relief by special act of Congress is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The petition of Elizabeth Moore English respectfully represents—

First. That she is the widow of Earl English, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, who departed this life on the 16th of July, 1893, in the city of Washington, being at the time of his death on the retired list of the Navy.

Second. That the said Earl English entered the Navy as midshipman the 25th of February, 1840, and passed through all the grades to that of rear-admiral, the highest rank in the Navy under existing laws, and was retired on the 18th of February, 1886.

Third. That the said decedent served with distinction through three wars and the exposures and hardships of forty-six years on the active list, more than twenty-seven of which were spent at sea, twelve years having been passed in the East Indies, where he was severely wounded in an engagement at the barrier forts in the Chinese war. Never wavering in his allegiance to the United States throughout his long career, he was distinguished by his services, characterized by wisdom and bravery.

Fourth. That your petitioner's husband died leaving her little property, and that she is in embarrassed circumstances and without adequate means of support. Your petitioner therefore prays that your honorable body will pass an act for her relief, granting to her, as the widow of the late Earl English, a pension of $100 per month.

The following is the report made in this case:

Mrs. English is the widow of Earl English, late rear-admiral, United States Navy, whose record is as follows:

Earl English, rear admiral, United States Navy. Born in Crosswicks, Burlington County, N. J., February 18, 1824.

Appointed midshipman from his native State February 25, 1840.

Was attached to the line-of-battle ship Columbus until December of same year; was then ordered to the frigate Constellation and made the cruise in her to the East Indies and around the world, arriving home May 8, 1844; was attached to the Princeton, on gun practice, 1844 and 1845; was then ordered to the Naval Academy, where he graduated July, 1846; was then ordered to the frigate Independence and actively employed on the Pacific station, coast of Mexico and California, and participated in the capture of Mazatlan, and in other important naval operations on the coast and in California. After the Mexican war he made a year's cruise in the Vixen to the West Indies. He then joined the Southampton for two years on special service in the Pacific and California. Returning, he joined the Dolphin in April, 1853, on deep-sea soundings between the United States and England.

While on this duty, in the month of July, 1853, he was successful in bringing up the first soundings from the bottom of the ocean at the depth of 2,500 fathoms, the result of which was the laying of the first ocean cable between England and America in 1855. Having finished that duty, he joined the Coast Survey, and was attached to the schooners Crawford and Varina for two years. He was then attached to the Levant and joined the East India squadron, and in November, 1856, in the capture and reduction of the barrier forts in the Canton River, he was seriously wounded. Returning from that cruise, he joined the Wyoming and went to the Pacific station, where he remained until the breaking out of the rebellion, when he returned East and took an active part until the close of the war, commanding the Somerset and Sagamore in the East Gulf squadron, capturing a large number of blockade runners, Cedar Keys, St. Marks, as well as destroying large numbers of salt manufactories on the coast.

Health failing him, he returned North for a short time. May, 1864, he took command of the Wyalusing in the sounds of North Carolina, where he remained until the suppression of the rebellion. While in the sounds he assisted in the capture of the city of Plymouth and the rebel ram Albemarle, and in numerous engagements up the Roanoke River and in various places in the sounds. The war ending, he was ordered to the navy-yard, New York, on ordnance duty, until, in November, 1866, he took command of the Iroquois and once more joined the East India station; was in Japan during the revolution in that country, and when the Tycoon was defeated by Satsuma at Osaka, he and his official followers fled and took refuge on board of the Iroquois, for which kindness he received the thanks of the Tycoon. He returned home in November, 1870, and for three years was on special service with Admiral Porter and at navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H. March, 1874, he took command of the Congress and joined the European station, and in the absence of Admiral Worden the duty of settling a difficulty between the Pasha of Tripoli and the United States consul devolved upon him.

The Government was so well satisfied with the result that General Grant, then President of the United States, thanked him in person, Returning home in 1876, he was ordered as senior naval officer afloat at the Centennial, Philadelphia, where his sailors and marines were given a post of honor in the grand procession on the day of the opening.

July 31, 1876, was ordered as commandant of the Portsmouth (N. H.) Naval Station, where he remained until November, 1878, when he was appointed Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, Navy Department. While in the Bureau he had a law passed authorizing the enlistment of 750 naval apprentices. At the same time Coasters Harbor Island, at Newport, R. I., was ceded by the State to the National Government as the headquarters for the training station, where it remains at the present time in a most flourishing condition.

He was instrumental in having President Arthur sign the order increasing the pay of the enlisted men and boys in the Navy. September 4, 1884, he resigned from the Bureau and took command of the European station. Returning home, he retired, according to law, February 25, 1886.

Promotions.—July 11, 1846, passed midshipman; March 1, 1855, master; September 16, 1855, lieutenant-commander; July 25, 1866, commander; September 28, 1872, captain; March 25, 1880, commodore; September 4, 1884, rear-admiral.

Admiral English died July 16, 1893, and his widow filed an application for pension December 19, 1893, but the same was disallowed April 26, 1894, on the ground that the disease from which he died (acute enteritis) could not clearly be traced to diseases originating in line of duty during his active service. It is believed, however, that a liberal view of the testimony would have justified the medical authorities of the Pension Office in allowing the claim, as the hospital records show that the officer was frequently under treatment during his active service for diseases similar in character to the one which caused his death. The physician (a naval surgeon) who treated Admiral English during his final illness gave it as his opinion that the officer's "long and arduous service brought a train of infirmities which gradually sapped vitality" and assisted in bringing about a fatal termination to his illness.

After a careful and thorough examination of all the facts in the case, and in view of the long and valuable services of Rear-Admiral English, your committee is of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that it pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside this bill with favorable recommendation.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, only one word. I simply want the House to understand that this bill, being a Senate bill, was also introduced in the House and went to the Committee on Pensions and not to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; so that a separate committee, following their own line of inquiry and from separate sources, have reported the bill back favorably, making a report very similar to the one which has been read. So that the House bill is before the House in the unusual position of having passed one or two Congresses and failed merely to get the signature of the President, of having passed the Senate this session, and having been favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and the Committee on Pensions, having a House bill, have also favorably reported on it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, one weak point in the report there is the failure to connect the cause of death with the disease contracted in the service. An abstract of the evidence in the Pension Bureau, I think, will clearly connect that; and I send it up to be read, in order that it may go into the RECORD, to show that he died from disease contracted in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Was under treatment December, 1849, for cholera morbus; in 1851, for obstipatio; January, 1851, tonsilitis; April, 1855, gastric derangement; 1856, head, ache, and wound of spine, congestio hepatitis, and dysentery; 1857, orchitis-rannea, furunculus; 1874, bronchitis acute, icterus, chronic hepatitis; 1880, catarrhus; 1881, malarial cachexia; 1892, febris remittens; 1883, pneumonia; 1892, diabetes incident to long service in line of duty. Died July 16, 1893, of acute enteretis due to long and arduous service in Navy.

Extract from certificate of death: "Attacked with acute indigestion July 14, from partaking of blackberries. After several hours of suffering became comfortable. Stage of calm of short duration. Inflammation of small intestines supervened. Liver became intensely congested, very painful, and increased in size. Owing to alteration of tissues, the strain caused perforation or rupture of intestines, permitting escape of fæcal matter into peritoneal cavity. Peritonitis not very well pronounced, because life was so abruptly terminated. Deceased possessed but little resiliency."

"There is good evidence that the disease (or disability) causing death was in line of duty, the facts being as follows: Long and arduous service brought a train of infirmities which gradually sapped vitality. Suffered diabetes mellitus for many months. Gangrene of senile character followed. There was extensive atheromatous degeneration, which largely prevented removal of foot when gangrene threatened its integrity.

"WM. S. DIXON, Surgeon, U. S. N."

Liver much congested, painful, increased in size, and the strain caused perforation of, or rupture of, intestines.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the report shows how this claimant stood on the tariff and the financial questions.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable report.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1838) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to place on the invalid pension roll of the United States the name of Thomas Corigan, late a member of Company B of the Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1838) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan, respectfully report as follows:

Your committee have carefully examined into the facts in this case, and find that the soldier served in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from July 25, 1862, until he was discharged on account of disability.

At the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, he was severely wounded in the left hand, and is now drawing a pension of $30 per month for that injury, the arm being rendered wholly useless by the wound. At the same time he was wounded by a buckshot in the neck, and the soldier claims that this wound has affected his spine and has produced epilepsy.

The medical evidence shows that the wound in the neck produces distinct crepitus on movement of the neck. The epileptic fits have gradually increased until the soldier is totally helpless and requires constant aid and attendance and has become almost imbecile mentally.

The Pension Bureau in 1892 held that it can not accept the "fits" as a result of the wound in the back of the neck; but no other cause is evident, and medical evidence has been furnished to show that the wound in the neck is the cause of his present condition.

The soldier's condition is helpless in the extreme, and if the wound in the neck is the cause of his injury he would be entitled to $72 per month under the general law. We are not disposed to criticise the action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting this portion of the soldier's claim, but we think that it might have very fairly decided the other way under the evidence and examination of the medical boards.

Your committee think that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt to the extent of being raised to the second grade, or $50 a month. The committee is adverse to reporting bills changing the rate of pension as fixed by the Pension Bureau, but in case of extreme helplessness like the present, where the wound has been followed by such helplessness, and there is much evidence to show that the soldier's condition is due to his wound, we are inclined to relax the rule.

If this case were before us as an original question we would probably have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Pension Bureau, but in the doubt raised in the case we think that the second grade would relieve the wants of the soldier and ought to be granted, especially as the claimant was an excellent soldier, highly commended by Gen. W. T. Sherman, and his severe wounds received in the battle of Chickamauga are clearly shown.

A bill granting the same amount of pension passed both Houses of the last Congress, but failed of action by the President.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I recollect this case. It engaged the attention of the Fifty-third Congress on several Friday nights. It engaged the attention of the Committee on Invalid Pensions for a long while. So much so that majority and minority reports were filed. The case was carefully investigated, judicially scrutinized, thoroughly discussed; and, in order that we may contrast the processes of the Fifty-third Congress in arriving at what it considered doing justice in cases of this kind, I send up to have read in my time a part of the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan from $30 to $72 per month, and submit the following report:

Thomas Corigan was a corporal in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry, enlisted July 28, 1862, and was discharged on January 24, 1864.

At the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, he was severely wounded in the left hand and is now drawing a pension of $30 per month for that injury, the arm being rendered wholly useless by the wound. At the same time he was wounded by a buckshot in the neck, and the soldier claims that this wound has affected his spine and has produced epilepsy.

The medical evidence shows that the wound in the neck produces distinct crepitus on movement of the neck. The epileptic fits have gradually increased until the soldier is totally helpless and requires constant aid and attendance and has become almost imbecile mentally.

The Pension Bureau in 1892 holds that it can not accept the "fits" as a result of the wound in the back of the neck, but no other cause is evident and medical evidence has been furnished to show that the wound in the neck is the cause of his present condition.

The soldier's condition is helpless in the extreme, and if the wound in the neck is the cause of his injury he would be entitled to $72 per month under the general law. We are not disposed to criticise the action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting this portion of the soldier's claim, but we think that it might have very fairly decided the other way under the evidence and examination of the medical boards.

Your committee think that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt to the extent of being raised to the second grade or $50 a month. The committee is adverse to reporting bills changing the rate of pension as fixed by the Pension Bureau, but in a case of extreme helplessness like the present, where the wound has been followed by such helplessness, and there is much evidence to show that the soldier's condition is due to his wound, we are inclined to relax the rule.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting "fifty."

If the case were before us as an original question we would probably have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Pension Bureau, but in the doubt raised in the case we think that the second grade would relieve the wants of the soldier and ought to be granted, especially as the claimant was an excellent soldier, highly commended by Gen. W. T. Sherman, and his severe wounds received in the battle of Chickamaugua are clearly shown.

The letter of Colonel Sherman is as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
"SECOND DIVISION, FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
"Camp near Blains Cross Roads, East Tennessee, January 10, 1864.

"To whom it may concern:

"This is to certify that Thomas Corigan, an enlisted man of the Eighty-eighth Regiment Infantry, Illinois Volunteers, and corporal of Company B, same regiment, is a soldier good and true; ever faithful in the discharge of duty, never absent without leave, brave as a lion in action, and always at his post. He won the confidence and esteem of his commanding officers by his uniform good conduct and soldierly bearing. I therefore take great pleasure and bear willing testimony to his merit, and request that his wishes may be consulted inasmuch as he is disabled from active field service by reason of wounds received on the hard-fought and bloody field of Chickamauga on the 20th of September, 1863.

"F. T. SHERMAN,
"Colonel Eighty-eighth Infantry, Illinois Volunteers."

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out the word "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. ERDMAN. That is not all that I want read. Go to the places that I have marked.

Mr. PICKLER. What has already been read is almost verbatim the present report. It is simply to consume time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is objection made to the reading of this paper?

Mr. PICKLER. You are reading the same report that we have reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read Rule XXXI, on the reading of papers.

The Clerk read as follows:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. POOLE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this paper be read?

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes seem to have it; the noes have it, and the committee refuses to have the paper read. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized once upon this question.

Mr. ERDMAN. Is there any other gentleman who desires to talk?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. ERDMAN. Then go on.

Mr. HARDY. I yield my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KIRKPATRICK].

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I will ask for a vote, if that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, the minority report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Fifty-third Congress is as follows on this case:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan, and submit the following statement of their views:

The records of the War Department show that this soldier served from July 25, 1862, to January 29, 1864, in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry. He was discharged on account of disability from gunshot wound of hand received at Chickamauga. He has been pensioned for this wound ever since discharged, and now receives $30 per month since August 4, 1886. His application, filed February 12, 1864, alleged only this wound. A later application, filed September 11, 1866, states that he also "suffers pain in the neck from the effects of a wound there received." In 1887 he claimed that deafness had resulted from that wound, and states that the ball was removed in the field hospital; in April, 1888, he alleged resulting impairment of vision and of hearing; in September, 1888, he refers to "buckshot wound in back of neck"; in February, 1892, he alleged affection of sight and hearing and epilepsy as a result of said wound.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania, by indirection and evasion, defeat in this way the action and vote of this House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not reading. He is speaking. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I submit that the gentleman is reading, and is doing so in direct violation of the action of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to proceed.

Mr. ERDMAN (continuing to read):

In September, 1892, the Pension Bureau accepted the fact that he had received this wound in the neck, but rejected the claim for additional pension on the ground that he had suffered no ratable disability from it at any time since the war, and none of the alleged results were accepted as sequences of such wound. This action was taken after a careful special examination of the claim, and was affirmed by Secretary Bussey on appeal January 3, 1893.

It will be observed that you are about to overrule General Bussey. I congratulate you on your success.

In his deposition before the special examiner in June, 1892, the pensioner stated that he received the wound of neck at Chickamauga; that the doctor who took the bullet out put a sticking plaster over the wound and it remained until it fell off.

"The first time I felt any serious disability from the wound of my neck was about fourteen years ago (1878). I was flagging at a railroad crossing * * * in Chicago. I felt a cloud come over me and I fell down right in the track. * * * It was a hot day just like this. * * * I have had convulsions for the past fourteen years, but not so much until the last eight years. I saw the shot that was extracted from my neck. I had it a long time. I lost it. It was a buckshot, and went as far as the point of my ear. The doctor said to me when he extracted it, 'Pat, if the shot had gone a quarter of an inch farther you would never eat any more potatoes.' * * * I was not bothered with the wound of my neck in 1873, but I knew I had been shot in the neck. In 1875 I was not suffering with the wound in my neck much."

His wife, Rosetta Corigan, corroborates his statement as to the first convulsion or fit about fourteen years previously.

An examination by medical officers of the Pension Bureau September 6, 1873, reports: "Flesh wound of the neck, not rated"; September 7, 1875, "slight flesh wound on the back of the neck, not rated"; September 4, 1877, "slight wound of neck, not rated"; June 22, 1892, "wound on posterior surface of neck, size of a nickel, white in color, nonadherent, nondragging, nondepressed; the vertebræ do not seem to have been injured, but there is thickening of soft tissues beneath the integument."

From the facts stated it seems reasonably clear that the pensioner's present condition as to epilepsy is not chargeable to the slight wound of the neck, but rather originated in 1878 in the manner described by himself and wife.

Moreover, he is in receipt of a pension of $1 a day, and the question involved is purely one for the determination of the Pension Office, and ,the committee has repeatedly refused to interfere in the individual adjudications of the Pension Bureau in matters clearly within their jurisdiction and presenting no technical hardship. To pass this bill is squarely in violation of the principle enunciated in several adverse reports on bills of this character, and the minority do earnestly recommend that the bill do lie on the table.

JOHN J. McDANNOLD.
M. R. BALDWIN.
C. J. ERDMAN.

The question was afterwards discussed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS], and other gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

JOSEPH W. FISHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 640) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph W. Fisher, late colonel of the One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment of the committee, to strike out "$100" and insert "$75," was read.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the report, when

Mr. ANDREWS said: Mr. Chairman, if there be no objection, the reading of the report might be dispensed with, and a brief statement of the facts covered by the report might disclose the essential features of this case.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I notice that gentlemen on the other side are very considerate of my wishes in matters of this kind; and therefore I think I must insist on having the report read in full.

Mr. ANDREWS. I simply supposed that this matter had been fully examined and was well understood by members of the committee, otherwise I would not have asked that the reading of the report be dispensed with.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 640) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher, having carefully considered the same, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 62) as their own, and respectfully recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 62, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 640) granting a pension to Joseph W. Fisher, have examined the same, and report:

A similar bill was introduced in the Fifty-third Congress, referred to the Committee on Pensions, examined, reported favorably, and passed the Senate.

The facts are as follows:

The object of the bill is to increase the pension of Gen. Joseph W. Fisher, late colonel of the One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, from $30 per month to $72 per month.

General Fisher at the breaking out of the civil war entered the service as a lieutenant-colonel of the Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves, and in July, 1862, he was promoted to the colonelcy of the regiment. He served as such for a full term of three years, the time of enlistment. Being mustered out, he raised the One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and at the expiration of their term of enlistment he again raised a regiment known as the One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. He continued in the service until January 31, 1866, when he was finally mustered out.

He was engaged in all the battles in which his regiments participated, frequently received the compliments of his superior officers, was recommended for the position of brigadier-general, and was appointed brigadier-general by brevet in 1865. He performed conspicuous service at the famous Little Round Top at the battle of Gettysburg.

At the time General Fisher first enlisted he was past the military age, but he served during the entire war and came out of the war broken down in health, and has suffered from the exposures and hardships of the war ever since. He has had four different strokes of paralysis; he is 80 years old and is well-nigh helpless. He is by profession a lawyer. He held the office of associate justice and the office of chief justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Wyoming for a number of years. He has no means of support, and is totally disabled for mental and physical work.

A petition signed by several hundred representative citizens of his town (which is hereto annexed with the omission of the signatures) gives a statement of his condition mentally and physically, while the affidavits of two representative physicians, who are members of the pension board of examiners (hereto annexed and made a part of this report), confirm the statements contained in the petition.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 7 of the bill, the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-two," as this will grant to General Fisher a pension equivalent to that provided for privates in the volunteer service who are totally disabled.

To the Honorable the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, do hereby most respectfully petition your honorable body to grant a pension to Gen. Joseph W. Fisher, formerly of the State of Pennsylvania, and for twenty-three years last past a resident of Wyoming.

General Fisher's military record, which is part of the history of the late civil war, is, briefly, as follows: He entered the service in May, 1861, as lieutenant-colonel of the Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves; in July, 1862, he was promoted to the colonelcy of the regiment; he served as such for the full three years' time of enlistment. When he was mustered out he raised the One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers for one hundred days' service, being colonel of the regiment, and at the expiration of that term again raised a new regiment known as the One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, of which he was colone), and continued in service until January 31, 1866, when he was finally mustered out of service.

During all his term of service General Fisher was engaged in all the battles in which his various regiments participated and was frequently complimented in orders by his superior officers, all of whom recommended him for promotion to a brigadier-generalship, and he was appointed brigadier-general by brevet in November, 1865. His chief achievement as an officer was the taking and holding of Little Round Top, at the battle of Gettysburg, at a critical juncture in that battle, which fact was well known throughout the Army.

At the time he was finally mustered out of service he was suffering from disability caused by exposure and hardship in war and has ever since been in feeble health in consequence. He has sustained four strokes of paralysis and is now suffering from the effects of the last, being unable to speak fluently and being extremely weak. He is 80 years of age, and has been for about four years last past and is now absolutely unable to follow his profession as a lawyer (he was chief justice of Wyoming from 1871 to 1879), and will never recover sufficiently to engage in any business or employment. That he is without means of support. Your petitioners, therefore, pray that a reasonable pension be granted General Fisher, believing that no more worthy case has appealed to the sense of justice of your honorable body.

(Here follow nearly 300 signatures.)

CHEYENNE, WYO., April 13, 1894.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that I was called to attend, professionally, Hon. J. W. Fisher, of this city, on December 2, 1890, he being the subject of apoplexy, with right hemiplegia, labial paralysis, and amnesia aphasia. My attendance continued daily until the 18th of December, 1890, and occasional visits for a variable period; the dates of the visits have not been kept. At no time since the attack of December, 1890, has he been in a condition, either mental or physical, to attend to any kind of business, and, owing to his advanced age, never will be able to earn a livelihood in any manner. While in certain respects he has improved slightly, yet it is not of a character to hope for improvement, as the attack may recur at any moment and place him in a more deplorable state than he has yet been in.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that I have attended Joseph W. Fisher professionally at various times within the past year, and that I find his physical condition to be such as to totally disable him from manual labor of any sort whatever. He has "amnemonic aphasia," resulting from senile degeneration, which unfits him from all business pursuits where memory, a normal coordination in thought, and a concise manner of expression are required.

His condition during a greater portion of the past six months has been such as to require the services of an attendant to supply his wants, having been afflicted with a catarrhal inflammation of the ears, which resulted in the perforation of the drums of both ears and an almost entire loss of hearing of the right one.

Taking into consideration his age and his present condition of general senile degeneration, it is quite probable that he will require the care of an attendant most, if not all, of the time of the remaining period of his life.

[SEAL.] LOUISE S. SMITH, Notary Public.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I had no objection to the passage of the bill which was before us a few moments ago—the bill in the case of Mr. Thomas Corrigan. In the last session of the Fifty-third Congress that same bill passed, and I voted for it. I learned from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and his colleague [Mr. LACEY] that his case was meritorious. I investigated it myself and found that the applicant deserved what the bill asked for. I found that he was a true, a tried, a brave, and gallant soldier [applause], who had never turned his back upon the enemy except in a legitimate retreat. I found he was a soldier who had been complimented as one of the bravest that ever fought in any army. For these reasons, I made no objection a while ago to the passage of the bill giving that brave old man something with which he could take care of himself in his declining years. But, Mr. Chairman, right upon the heels of that bill comes this, which, like many others that have passed this House, discriminates against the gallant private soldier in favor of the officer, and I am opposed to it. I hope it will not become a law.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that this pension is not based upon the rank which this man held. If he had been only a private, and were in his present condition, he would get $72 a month. He is 80 years old, and has had four attacks of paralysis.

Mr. TALBERT. Yes; but his case is not presented here as that of a private, but because he is an officer.

Mr. PICKLER. We can not reduce him.

Mr. TALBERT. The reason adduced in the report in favor of granting this pension is that he is an officer; that is the inference drawn—that there must be a discrimination in his favor as against the private soldier. I am opposed to any such discrimination. It is not right. It is not proper. It is not just. An officer is no better than a private soldier.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman note the fact that this man has had four attacks of paralysis?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes; and it seems to me his case is somewhat like that of the man whose case was before us the other night, who, according to the statement of his disability in the report, was about six-tenths beyond being dead. And I voted for the bill so that he might have enough money to pay his funeral expenses. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I sat here to-day and witnessed the unpleasant, uncomely, and unusual spectacle of an attempt to stifle debate. I witnessed the unpleasant and uncomely attempt, by means of the previous question, to railroad through these undeserving bills—bills having no merit in them whatever—bills which, by the apparent tyrannical and arbitrary rulings of the Chair, were passed without giving anyone an opportunity to make an explanation or to learn something about them, or to have any light thrown upon them by discussion.

We passed here to-day two bills giving pensions to remarried widows in violation of all law, in violation of every principle of right. Not that I am opposed to the remarrying of widows, for I wish they were all married, but the law says when they remarry they relinquish their right to the pension; and this House has no more right to violate the law than the private individual has. This was done to-day; and I claim that it is not right, for when a widow remarries, knowing the effects of the law, she has no claim upon Congress for restoration to the pension roll. She relinquishes voluntarily her claim.

But, Mr. Chairman, upon the heels of that, under whip and spur, the Chairman and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions railroaded through the House a pension for the widow of a man who was only in the Army three months, who never heard a gun fired, and who was never in an engagement with the enemy—that is, there is no testimony to show that he was—who claimed that his deafness asserted as his disability arose from the firing of a cannon that never was fired and that he never heard. [Laughter.] I submit it was not right. I rose in the House when the bill was under consideration and asked if it was in order to offer an amendment to the bill to make it "not granting a pension." The Speaker decided that it was in order to amend it, and I made the motion, but it was ruled out, after it was presented to the House, and no debate allowed at all. I say it was arbitrarily done; it was tyrannical; it smacks, sir, of arbitrary power; and I say we should rebuke such conduct, for if we do not do so we are laying the foundation for despotism and anarchy in this country; the premonitory symptoms are already upon us. It is not right.

I rose when the next bill was under consideration and made a similar inquiry as to an amendment, and made the same motion, but was again ruled out of order. I was thereby refused an opportunity of amending the bill.

A MEMBER. But that was done under the rules of the House. The previous question had been ordered.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I know my friend from South Carolina does not want to do the Speaker of the House any injustice or any wrong, especially in his absence. The bill to which the gentleman alludes came from the Committee of the Whole, and was debated in the Committee of the Whole, and amendments considered and adopted. It was not subject to amendment in the House after the previous question was ordered, and the Speaker of the House, on the demand of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the question, and the House ordered the previous question. It was the action of the House itself, and the Speaker was simply carrying out the rules of the House.

There was no opportunity for the gentleman to submit his motion to amend after the previous question had been ordered by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Well, that may be; but I do not think there is anything to laugh about. I do not wish to do the distinguished gentleman any injustice, and certainly will not do him any injustice that he does not do to himself, and I accept the correction offered by the gentleman.

But I repeat, the House, under whip and spur, put in a pension for a man and carried it through, when there is not a scintilla of evidence showing that he ever enlisted in the Army or that he was ever forced to go onto the battlefield; that he ever heard the firing of a gun; that he was ever compelled to take photographic pictures of the contending forces or anything else, and the evidence in this case shows still further that he had only a little scratch in the back and claims that that scratch caused him to go blind without any evidence whatever beyond the mere assertion. For what appears in the report of the committee was not satisfactory to the House or anybody else.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to be particularly understood on this question, for I claim to represent no men or set of men who oppose on this floor any claim which is just and right for the granting of pensions. I oppose no claim that is based in justice and founded in right. All I ask is fairness and honest dealing in these matters. I will oppose any pension that is not based upon fairness, that is not based upon principle, and upon right, notwithstanding any arbitrary rulings that have been made to the contrary; and the opposition that I make to such cases is entirely in harmony with what I believe to be the proper principle of our Government; for I am advocating principles that are founded on the solid basis of everlasting truth and justice.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Do you think it right and just or gallant on the part of a man to assail the Speaker of the House in his absence?

Mr. TALBERT. I never knock a man in the back before his face, my friend. [Laughter.] And I want it understood that I am not one of those who think that "the king can do no wrong." I have rights on this floor as well as the Speaker or anybody else; and I am one of those who dare to assert them. I make no charges upon the Speaker.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is, "My king can do no wrong"?

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I have no doubt that the gentleman who asks the question might do a little wrong, if he tried right hard.

Now, I want my position particularly understood on the question of granting pensions. [Cries of "State it!"]

My friends, I am making this speech now, but if you want to make one I will wait until you get through. [Laughter.] I am like the gentleman from Maine or the gentleman from Hawaii, I do not know which. But I have the floor; I have got it now, and I mean to hold it.

I feel myself backed up in the position I take by the old soldiers of this country, and touching on that very subject I send to the desk to have read a letter that I received from an old soldier from the town of Olney, Ill., on this subject, a letter received this afternoon, by which I am justified in saying that the soldiers of this country appreciate the stand that has been taken in support of justice and right on this floor.

I ask the Clerk to read this letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OLNEY, ILL., March 31, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been reading in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the debates in Congress and I have about come to the conclusion that you are about as true a friend as the real soldiers have in this Congress. Now, I am going to give you something to work on. I was one of the very first men in this country to enlist. I enlisted on the 17th of April, 1861, three months; reenlisted and was mustered out of the service February, 1865, on account of a gunshot wound which took my leg off. While I was being hauled to the hospital at Atlanta, Ga., my leg all inflamed, swelled up, and got worms in the wound, and the consequence is that there is not flap enough over the stump; consequently my leg has been bleeding more than one-half the time, and am and have been for thirty years poulticing and bathing in cold water in order to get a little rest at night, and my wife has all these long years been up and down of nights nursing me; so she, too, has lost her health. She has washed these old bloody stockings. Now, my friend, if you will take the trouble to go down in the Pension Office and look at account for increase No. 65580, you will find just what I have told you; will find that in the last two years I have been totally helpless. My claim was rejected because I was drawing all the law allows for a man with a leg off. They did not take in consideration that there is not another case in the United States like this one. My family physician here is one of Mr. Cleveland's appointees, and he told me to-day to write you and when some of these camp followers, wagon masters, or photographers are up have you move to strike out the name and insert my name. Hon. BENSON WOOD introduced a bill for me, but I wrote him to drop the private bill and work to get a certain general bill through which would apply to wounded men like me.

Now, my friend, I can assure you that the old soldiers are getting mighty tired seeing General So-and-So's wife getting $100 per month, when our poor wives have sat by our bedsides, night after night and day after day, dressing our old wounds, and they have been put off with $8 and $12 per month. I suppose THOMAS is afraid he will offend some of the Moneybags if he allows a bill to go through helping wounded soldiers and their wives. I am really entitled to $72 per month. I have not been out of my room but four times in five months, and am aware that I have not long to stay on this earth; but what I want—if you think you could get my pension raised—I want a clause in the bill that if my wife lives longer than I do she is to have the same amount until her death. I do not want to displace anyone that has merit, but I do not like to be put in with deserters. If you will, please write me what you think of this kind of a proposition before you try. Dr. Foster told me to write you and see what you thought about it.

Respectfully,

JOHN S. COCHENNOUR,
Late Captain Company H, Sixtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Hon. JASPER W. TALBERT.

During the reading of the above,

Mr. GIBSON. I want to inquire whether the correspondent of the gentleman is in a lunatic asylum?

Mr. TALBERT. That shows what the gentleman thinks of the old soldiers, after he has been spending every evening here pretending to advance their interests.

This is a brave soldier, and he is not afraid to express his views in reference to matters pending in the House of Representatives. Besides that, he is not under bond for libel or anything of that sort, and he is no lunatic, either.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask, if this letter is to be read, to have it read. Let us go on with the consideration of this bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the letter as above.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. NORTHWAY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TALBERT. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] if he thinks that letter sounds like a letter written by a lunatic?

Mr. GIBSON. I will take it all back.

Mr. TALBERT. I am glad to hear that. I forgive the gentleman, and I hope God and this House will. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. Have you introduced a private bill to help this man?

Mr. TALBERT. I just got the letter to-day, and I stand ready to advocate anything that old soldier wants in reason and equity, and I want to say I stand ready to fight deserters and teamsters and photographers and everything of that kind, and I do hope gentlemen on the other side of the House will have manhood enough, after hearing that letter, to rise up and not bring in any more such unmeritorious, infamous, scandalous bills as they have been bringing in heretofore.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If you will introduce a bill in behalf of that man I will stay here and vote for it, if I have to stay until midnight, or I will come up to-morrow night to vote for it.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOOD], as the letter says, has that bill in charge.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I will vote to give that man $72 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. Please let me say I did not have that letter read to create any laughter or anything of that sort. I had it read in good faith. I believe it ought to have been read here to show the sentiment of that grand old soldier who is lying suffering to-day, with an invalid wife.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. If I understand the gentleman, he is in favor of giving $72 a month to this old soldier who has written this letter. Is that true?

Mr. TALBERT. This old soldier does not ask for $72 a month.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, he does, in that letter.

Mr. TALBERT. One thing that he asks for is to be put upon an equality with some of these colonels and generals who never smelled powder, who were always in camp—a great many of them—and who knew nothing about it, but viewed the battle from afar off.

Mr. PAYNE. Are you willing to vote this old soldier $72 a month, as he asks in this letter—this private soldier?

Mr. TALBERT. My friend, I want to say that I will advocate what is right for this old soldier.

Mr. PAYNE. You said you were willing to give him what he wanted. Now, are you willing to give him $72 a month?

Mr. TALBERT. Introduce a bill and try me, my friend. I never answer a question until I reach it. I never cross a bridge until I get to it. But you show your willingness first to do your duty. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. If you are willing to give that soldier $72 a month, why do not you allow the committee to give this other soldier from Illinois $72 a month, as asked in this bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I will answer your question by asking another. Why is it you stand up here night after night and vote to put bummers and deserters and camp followers and coffee coolers along with such men as he is? Answer that question. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I never have done it. I have not voted for any of that class.

Mr. TALBERT. I say you have done it, and the RECORD shows it. I appeal to the RECORD.

Mr. BURRELL. We did not have that kind of men in our army.

Mr. TALBERT. Yes, sir; you had a number of them, and they were in every other army that ever existed, and you know it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not know that I am standing a civil-service examination. [Laughter.] But my old friend is so good-natured—and I know he wants to ask something about McKinley. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will fill up the time just as well as anything else. Do you remember the time when this old soldier's pension was raised in common with that of every other soldier who had lost a leg or an arm? Do you remember when the pension of every such man was raised from one rate to a higher rate?

Mr. TALBERT. I suppose he is rated according to his disability.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am asking you whether you have any knowledge of the change in the law that raised his pension and the pensions of all the legless and armless pensioners from one grade up to a higher one.

Mr. TALBERT. I suppose he has a rating; but as to keeping up with all the laws that you people make, it would take a faster man—as fast as I am—it would take a faster man than I am to keep up with them, you change them so often; but of course I recollect this instance.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask you if you have any knowledge of how many Democrats voted for that increase in the House of Representatives?

Mr. TALBERT. I am not dealing in statistics just now. We are discussing pensions and not statistics.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If you will find out, you will learn a great deal.

Mr. TALBERT. The other day when I asked the gentleman how much money there would have been in the Treasury if the income tax had not been repealed he did not answer, but went off into the high seas and went into piracy. [Laughter and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ERDMAN. Why is it that this Republican House and Republican majority——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. ERDMAN (continuing). Of the Invalid Pension Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. TALBERT. I have the floor. I yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not address the Chair, and the Chair had no knowledge of that private conversation.

Mr. TALBERT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PICKLER. He has no time that he can yield.

Mr. TALBERT. I think I have. I have more time than money; and I expect the gentleman from South Dakota is in the same condition. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman says that he yielded for a question.

Mr. ERDMAN. Why is it that this Republican House and the Republican Committee on Invalid Pensions, the majority of them, have had before the committee for four months a bill to increase the rating of the armless and legless which it has not reported to this House at all?

Mr. TALBERT. I will answer the gentleman as far as I am able. I want to give him a correct answer, and if I do not state it right, I want to be corrected. I suppose they have not got through the bills for all the camp followers and coffee coolers and deserters. I suppose when they get through with them, they will report the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, as the letter which has just been read has introduced my——

Mr. TALBERT. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, just right here——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. TALBERT. I have the floor. I submit that I have never yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that when the gentleman started away, after closing his remarks, that he had yielded the floor, and has recognized the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, I understand that the Chair has the right to so decide, and I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order and will take his seat.

Mr. TALBERT. I will stand up, if I see proper, but of course I yield to the Chair.

Mr. WOOD. I will occupy the attention of the committee but a very few moments. As my name was introduced in the letter which was read at the Clerk's desk, addressed to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], I will just state here that Captain Cochennour, the writer of this letter, is personally known to me, and a more gallant soldier never went out from any State in the Union. He lost his leg by a gunshot wound in a charge at the battle of Jonesboro, Ga., September 1, 1864. It is true, as that letter has stated, that, realizing the fact that some pension legislation was needed in behalf of the legless and armless soldiers, he generously requested me to withhold his bill until a general act could be put through Congress that would cover all cases.

I wish that everyone who was a claimant on the bounty of the Government or the just dues of the Government had taken the same honorable course he has. There can be nothing said against the character of that man. He is a good citizen. His neighbors about him, who know his condition, have written me repeatedly since I have been here. The fact is, that the stump of that leg has not healed entirely in all these thirty years. I am glad that this matter has come up, for I desire to give notice to the committee that on the first opportunity I shall ask unanimous consent to have the bill increasing his pension brought before the House and put upon its passage. That is all I have to say.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I only intend——

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. TALBERT. I just desire to say that I did not——

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). The gentleman has already been recognized once upon this question——

Mr. TALBERT. I desire only to make an explanation.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). And he can not be heard again without consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds the point of order well taken.

Mr. TALBERT. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. TALBERT. I just simply desire to say, in reference to what the gentleman has said, that I introduced that letter in good faith, and without having any thought of raising all this hullabaloo; but that it might be brought up in this way and that it might do good. I disclaim introducing it with any disrespect to that old soldier or to have any levity about it. I did it in good faith, am not ashamed of having done so, and I will stand by it, no matter how many points of order the gentleman from New York may raise. [Laughter, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand that these Friday night sessions came into existence for the purpose of meeting emergencies that are not provided for under the general law. These cases that come before us at Friday night sessions are those not covered by the general statutes. Now, I find that on this floor there are two extremes that are very damaging to the old soldiers; and I want to say to my friends on both sides of the House that they do an injustice to themselves and to the old soldier by taking these extreme positions. We have some men on our side who seem to be opposed to any kind of pensions; you have men on your side [addressing the Republican side] who are willing to burden this country with any kind of a pension.

Mr. ERDMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ERDMAN. Have you heard any gentleman on this side express himself as opposed to all pension legislation?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side (addressing Mr. ERDMAN). You are!

Mr. ERDMAN. No, sir; I am not.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no man on this side or on the other, whether he be Democrat, Populist, or Republican, who ought not to vote for every meritorious case that comes before this body at these Friday night sessions. At the same time the chairman of the committee and the gentlemen who stand behind him on his side of the House ought to be extremely careful that they do not put before the House unmeritorious cases. If both sides were thus careful, all this contention and all this loss of time would cease.

It is true we should not have so much political capital on which to go before our people when we come to stand for reelection; but at the same time the old soldier would fare better. We should have less turmoil and strife in this House at these Friday night sessions. I am not here to-night to make any speech; but I do want to say to the chairman of this committee, in all candor, that during my membership of this House there have been brought here on Friday nights and on private-bill day pension cases which ought never to have been passed, but which have been railroaded through. It was a dishonor to the old soldier, and it was no honor to the chairman of the committee and the majority of this House, to put through such pension bills. And on the other side of the House the opposition at times to gentlemen on our side who were conscientiously opposing pension bills was not at all creditable. That is true also.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman from Georgia state what case has been reported this session from our committee which ought not to have been reported?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, I am not going to particularize cases.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that the most questionable case we have reported in this House at this session is one which was favorably reported in the last House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What I want to say is this: If the chairman of the committee and the majority of the House will only take up meritorious cases, I shall insist with all the power and influence which I may have that gentlemen on this side of the House shall let such bills go through without opposition, without dilatory motions, and without unnecessary consumption of time. Why can we not do that? Why can we not behave here like Congressman ought to do; and why can we not legislate for the benefit of the old soldier?

Mr. PICKLER. Simply because the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not let us do so.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, the gentleman is becoming personal. What I desire is that we shall stop all this personal crimination and recrimination. We ought to do it. All I am saying now is in the interest of the soldier and on behalf of the credit of this House and this Congress, and on behalf of the peace and sobriety of spirit which should characterize our action at these Friday night sessions. [Applause.]

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, on last Friday night we had a speech from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] attacking the work of the Invalid Pension Committee. To-night a similar attack is made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]. It is time that these attacks should be met by the Invalid Pensions Committee, and I propose to meet them in a few words here to-night. I call attention to the words spoken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] on this floor last Friday night:

> Mr. Chairman, I say I can not understand what it is that actuates this Committee on Invalid Pensions to neglect the bills that are pending before them for sure-enough soldiers, men who carried sword and musket and stood in the forefront for years, but who can not bring themselves now within the strict letter of the law so as to obtain pensions under the general law.

Again, the gentleman from Illinois said:

> As to that class of bills, bills giving pensions to soldiers and to their widows, the sentiment that has inspired the enactment of special laws of that kind has been approved for twenty-five years by the people of this country. We are justified in passing them: but are we justified in letting such claims sleep and bringing to the front bills for teamsters, photographers, camp followers of every grade and kind, and giving them pensions, while the soldiers who are really entitled to pensions are one by one dropping into their graves, dying in poorhouses, or living upon the crumbs of charity?

Now, Mr. Chairman, if those words are true, if this Invalid Pensions Committee has been guilty as thus charged, we deserve the censure not only of this House, but of the entire country. But I say, Mr. Chairman, those charges are a base slander. There is no committee of the House that has such hard work as the Committee on Invalid Pensions. We do not originate many of these bills ourselves. We take them as members present them to our committee, examine them and the testimony submitted; and I wish to show what we have accomplished in that direction. There have been presented to the committee 1,863 private pension bills. We have made favorable reports in 261 cases up to the 1st day of April.

I claim, Mr. Chairman, that the committee has been unjustly attacked, and I wish to show in a few words what we have done and say something in defense of our action. As I said, sir, we have made favorable reports in 261 cases. There have been probably three times that number of bills presented that we have examined and rejected individually as members of the various subcommittees who had them to consider.

Of the bills reported—and I want the House to distinctly understand just the class reported, and then if we have been guilty of bringing teamsters, photographers, and camp followers to the front, and relegating to the rear the soldiers who carried muskets and who served the country faithfully, we are willing if that fact is exhibited by the work we have done, to accept the censure of the House. The following bills were reported by the committee:

Invalid, original and increase of pension	109
Widows, original and increase of pension	106
Dependent mothers	10
Nurses	3
Minors	1
Permanently helpless:
Dependent daughters of soldiers	13
Dependent sons of soldiers	1
Dependent sisters of soldiers	2
State militia disabled while in United States service	4
Contract surgeon	1
Civilian employees injured in United States service	3
Citizens injured doing military duty	2
United States Revenue Marine	1
Widow of scout and guide (spy)	2
Foster father	1
Stepmother	1
Mother of civilian employee (boy drowned)	1
Total	261

Total number of private bills referred to committee up to April 1	1,863
Total number of public bills referred to committee up to April 1	121
Total number of Senate bills referred to committee up to April 1	103
Total	2,087

It will be seen, therefore, from this table that there have been 261 bills favorably reported by the committee in all. In addition to these bills, as will be seen by the same table, we have had 121 general bills under our charge for consideration. We have also had from the Senate 103 bills, making a total of 2,087 bills all told that we have had for consideration in the committee during the present session of Congress.

I claim that from this record it is demonstrated, beyond any reasonable doubt, that we have worked faithfully and earnestly on this business and that we have not relegated the invalid soldiers and their widows to the rear and brought forward the camp followers and photographers and others of that class, as has been alleged on this floor.

The case of that photographer, which was argued with so much spirit a week ago, and in reference to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] made such an attack, was a case of unusual hardship. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to go over the evidence in the case again, but merely wish to state that this was the man who was wounded in the service of the Government under circumstances, as I have said, of peculiar hardship; and we believed that it was only right and proper that he should receive a pension, and thought we were fully justified in giving him the pension of $30 a month in view of the terrible injury he had received. He was wounded, I repeat, while doing duty, taking photographs of the earthworks of the enemy, by the direct request of Maj. Gen. John J. Peck.

But now let us turn our attention for a few moments to the bills that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] introduced, a gentleman who seems to be so much better than the rest of us. Let us see what bills the gentleman from Illinois presented, because we must take the bills that the members present, not our own bills, for consideration before our committee. It is right, of course, that we should expect this gentleman only to send us such bills as would take care of the interest of what he calls the "sure-enough soldiers," the old soldiers, the men who carried the muskets and performed hard duty in the field, and we should not expect that any bill coming from that source would be open to the slightest question as to its propriety or the wisdom of its passage in the House. Let us examine, then, the character of bills the gentleman has introduced and see whether they come up to his standard.

The first bill I find is the bill (H. R. 4184) "granting a pension to Nancy Hollenbank, formerly Nancy Boaz, formerly Nancy Yeley, a hospital nurse during the war of the rebellion." She did not carry a sword or musket, and does not come under the head of the class of soldiers which the gentleman from Illinois thinks should only be pensioned. That is the first bill. The second was a bill granting a pension to William C. Estell, a disabled dependent son of a soldier. It may be a very worthy bill. I do not attack the bill at all; I am simply asking attention to those presented by the gentleman from Illinois, who says that we are bringing the camp followers to the front and relegating the old soldiers to the rear. I only want to call attention to the character of the bills that he has introduced, to see how they compare with those this committee has reported. I want to let you see what bills he has presented for consideration. The third bill is House bill 7628, which proposes to put the name of William T. Evans, late a hospital steward, on the pension rolls; a man who never carried a musket, who never carried a sword. That is the third case. The fourth bill that he presented for consideration was to pension Hannah Bailey Munson, a nurse, a woman, who never carried a sword or a musket. Those, gentlemen, are the only bills that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] has presented to our committee for pensioning what he calls sure-enough soldiers. But upon looking over the record I find that in addition to those bills he has presented to the Committee on Military Affairs some bills for the benefit of men who were possibly sure-enough soldiers. The first one was the bill (H. R. 4183) to remove the charge of desertion from Peter Gehm. That was a bill for a man who possibly at one time did carry a musket. But he deserted.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. What became of that man?

Mr. POOLE. He deserted from the service of the United States, and now the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] is trying to restore his record, and possibly at the next Congress he will present a bill to pay him a pension.

The second bill, and the only other bill he has presented for a sure-enough soldier, was H. R. 5931, to remove the charge of desertion from William C. Johnson, another deserter.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the only bills that the gentleman from Illinois has presented to this Congress for the consideration of any committee that benefited any man who had ever been a soldier. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what his purpose was in making this attack upon our committee.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. POOLE. Wait a moment. You had the floor last week. It may be possible that the gentleman made this attack last week because early in this week there was a Congressional convention in his district, and it might have been necessary for him to let the people in his district and the soldiers there know how much he was doing for the old soldiers of Illinois.

Now, I do not attack these bills which he has presented. I do not think the committee have examined these bills. The subcommittee having charge of these bills from Illinois has not yet found enough merit in them to present them to the entire committee.

Mr. MILES. I should like to ask my friend a question right there. Did not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] complain last Friday night that these bills had not been considered?

Mr. POOLE. He certainly did complain that all this class of bills—bills for sure-enough soldiers—had not been presented and considered, but I claim it is a base slander.

Mr. MILES. Do we not sometimes have the custom in our committee of giving such bills as that a pocket veto?

Mr. POOLE. Certainly we do. I can prove by my own record that I have been compelled to abandon more bills than I reported, and I have reported perhaps as many bills as any other member of the committee. We do not waste your time, gentlemen of this committee, by presenting bills to you that have no merit. We present those bills that our consciences tell us are right.

Now, we were taunted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN], at the last Friday night meeting of this committee, that we did not pass these bills. Who is to blame? It is not the Committee on Invalid Pensions; it is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN], who has fought us every night and done everything in his power to prevent our passing these bills—bills that he knew were meritorious. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, with the forbearance of the committee, I should like to add just a word or two, in order that we may return to the bill under consideration and give a moment's attention to its merits.

The beneficiary named in this bill is in such a helpless physical condition that he needs and must have one attendant constantly, and two attendants a greater portion of the time. All of the facts presented in this case and stated in the communications that came to me before the bill was recommended for passage led me to the conclusion that if there is any meritorious case for Congress to pass upon this is one of the meritorious cases. It must be remembered that this man is 80 years of age, that his life perchance may close any day. I will not intrude upon the forbearance of the committee further, but hope we can now have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Those who favor laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation will say "aye."

The affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Those opposed will say "no."

The negative vote was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and the bill is laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

AGNES A. BLACKMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2151) to restore to the pension rolls the name of Agnes A. Blackman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to restore to the pension rolls the name of Agnes A. Blackman, widow of George C. Blackman, brigade surgeon, United States Volunteers, certificate No. 346324, at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2151) granting a pension to Agnes A. Blackman, having carefully considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

This bill grants a pension of $8 a month to Agnes A. Blackman, as widow of George C. Blackman, a brigade surgeon in the war of the rebellion.

This woman applied for pension under the old law, and pending the determination of that claim she applied for and was granted a pension of $8 per month under the law of 1890.

After this she presented her claim under the old law, and in that investigation the question as to the validity of her marriage to Dr. Blackman arose.

Dr. Blackman had been married and divorced in Kentucky prior to his marriage to this woman. This divorce was a limited one, and the question was whether under it this subsequent marriage was legal.

Before entering into this second marriage Dr. Blackman took the advice of eminent counsel, and he was advised that he was perfectly free to marry again, and that the marriage would be valid.

While the matter was pending in the Pension Office an autograph opinion of Justice Stanley Matthews and ex-Attorney-General Alphonso Taft was filed, in which opinion they declared that the second marriage was valid. Notwithstanding these opinions the law clerk of the Pension Bureau decided against the validity of the marriage and her claim was rejected, and her pension under the law of 1890 stopped.

The law question appears in the following facts. Prior to 1853 the law of Kentucky relative to divorce was as follows:

"CHAP. 47, ART. 3, SEC. 2. No decree of divorce shall authorize or permit the party obtaining the same to marry again until one year after the final decree except when it is herein allowed in favor of both parties, etc.

"SEC. 8. A divorce from bed and board shall operate, as to property thereafter acquired, and upon the personal rights and legal capacities of the parties, as a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, except that neither shall marry again during the life of the other, and except, etc.

An act approved March 10, 1854, repealed the provisions limiting the right to remarry and is as follows:

"An act to amend the third article of the Revised Statutes, entitled 'Divorce and alimony.'

"Be it enacted, etc., That a party obtaining a divorce may marry again at any time after the final decree was rendered; may marry again at any time after one year from said decree."

The law clerk held that this did not reach the case of persons divorced from bed and board, for the reason that it could not be presumed that the legislature intended to make a divorce from bed and board the equivalent of one from the bonds of matrimony. There was not much question but that the words of this amendatory act were ample to cover the Blackman case, but the words were limited by the law clerk's construction by what he assumed was the intention of the legislature.

The weight of authority seems to be with Justice Matthews and Judge Taft and against the law clerk; so your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will but permit his eye to wander over this way, we may get a little more frequent recognition on this side. In reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POOLE], when he says that I stand here night after night and oppose pensions, I beg to say it is he and people with his disposition, who never scruple to vote for any bill, that have not stopped at teamsters, photographers, bums, and bounty jumpers, and, in the language of the gentleman from South Carolina, coffee coolers——

Mr. POOLE. Where were you during the war?

Mr. ERDMAN. It is by the act of those gentlemen, driving through all bills, refusing to discriminate, that pension legislation is delayed and pension legislation is sometimes blocked. I have expressed myself on a number of occasions as willing to scrutinize every bill and willing to vote for all those that are found with merit and willing to vote against all those that are without merit—what the other side is not willing to do. Now, we had a feast to-day, a royal feast, in which many deserters, bounty jumpers, and photographers sat down to $20, $30, $50, and $100 a month pension, and the crumbs go to the common soldiers.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ERDMAN. Scarcely the crumbs. The gentleman can speak in his own time.

Mr. PICKLER. Will you name any of them?

Mr. ERDMAN. I have named them.

Mr. PICKLER. That statement is untrue——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is out of order.

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). And you know it. Absolutely untrue.

Mr. ERDMAN. When the gentleman wants to characterize me as opposed to pension legislation——

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is out of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to be interrupted.

Mr. ERDMAN. He knows that it is not correct. Now, in regard to that bill that was up a while ago, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD some further history of the claim of General Fisher. If there is objection to it, I will read it or have it read in my time. I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to have read——

Mr. ERDMAN. No; to insert.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). The paper that he holds in his hand.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman state what it is?

Mr. ERDMAN. It is a further history of the case of General Fisher.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it from the Pension Office?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PICKLER. He only asked to have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Let him insert it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that as a matter of practice that thing ought to be allowed. Unless the gentleman will state——

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I shall interpose an objection to printing in the RECORD without any knowledge of the contents of the paper.

The CHAIRMAN. The request was made to the House. The Chair stated that the gentleman made the request for unanimous consent, and no objection was made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To read.

The CHAIRMAN. To read and insert.

Mr. HARDY. I object to the reading.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object to its going in without being read, where it relates to the history of a dead man, without the House having knowledge of what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection should have been made before.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was making it as fast as I could. Two or three were talking at once, and I was asking the gentleman what it was. The gentleman was proposing to insert it in the RECORD, and I wanted him to state whether it was something of his own creation or something——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the insertion of this paper in the RECORD?

Mr. PERKINS. I object.

Mr. ERDMAN. I will tell gentlemen on the other side what it is, if they care to know.

Mr. WOOD. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to read it. If there is anything in it relating to the history of this case, it is proper.

Mr. ANDREWS. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDREWS. The bill to which these remarks are intended to relate has been passed, and is not now under consideration.

Mr. PICKLER. I thought it was to this case.

Mr. ERDMAN. It is to the case of General Fisher.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made to the insertion of the paper in the RECORD.

Mr. ANDREWS. I ask for a ruling of the Chair on the point which I submitted. I did not understand the decision.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made to inserting the paper in the RECORD.

Mr. ANDREWS. My point is, that the bill to which the matter relates has already been passed, and that the matter is wholly out of order.

Mr. ERDMAN. I want to say that the matter I desired to publish is in advocacy of the bill which has just been passed, and tends to show conclusively that the bill ought to have been passed. For that reason I wanted to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. PICKLER. We do not need any more proof in favor of the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. I know you "do not need any more proof"; that is the way many of these bills come in here.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much pleased with the remarks made here to-night by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. But sir, I feel that I can not indorse the action at Friday night sessions of the warm friend of us all, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN]. He assumes the right to criticise the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also the Committee on Pensions, of which committee I have the honor to be an humble member. He insists that every bill coming before this Committee of the Whole from either of the Pension Committees shall be subjected to the most rigid investigation and scrutiny. Sir, this is a reflection upon those committees that is not warranted, in view of the careful investigation they give to every claim coming before them.

Mr. MILES. One question, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. MILES. I believe I understood you to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had on some Friday night——

Mr. HARDY. To-night.

Mr. MILES. Or to-night.

Mr. HARDY. Every night.

Mr. MILES. Every night—as you please—criticised the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARDY. Oh, no; to-night the Committee on Pensions——

Mr. MILES. Of which you are one member.

Mr. HARDY. Yes, of which I am one very humble member.

Mr. MILES. When did he do it? In what case?

Mr. HARDY. Why, he has criticised on every Friday night that we have been in session the Committee on Pensions, and has demanded and required debate upon every bill in this House, while he has stood here on this floor and voted for bills submitted by the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Ways and Means, voting away $500,000,000 of the money of the Government.

Mr. MILES. Keep cool.

Mr. HARDY. I am cool as an iceberg.

Mr. MILES. What I wanted the gentleman to do, in fairness to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, was to give to this House the name of one case reported by the Committee on Pensions—not the Committee on Invalid Pensions—which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has criticised or debated.

Mr. HARDY. Why, I have stated that the gentleman has objected to and criticised nearly every pension bill that has been introduced in this House.

Mr. MILES. Name one.

Mr. HARDY. Why, the last one—the one a moment ago—when he wanted to read a voluminous record.

Mr. MILES. That did not come from your committee; and if you do your duty on that committee, you ought to know that it did not.

Mr. HARDY. I qualified my remark by saying the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILES. Well, it is as to the Committee on Pensions that I am objecting.

Mr. HARDY. What is your objection?

Mr. MILES. You stated that you were a member of the Committee on Pensions and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had criticised the bills that came from that committee.

Mr. HARDY. Well, I will qualify that remark by stating that the gentleman has opposed nearly every bill that has been reported to this House on Friday nights from either of the Pension Committees. [Applause.]

Mr. MILES. Now that the applause has subsided, all I desire to say in answer——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. MILES. All I desire to say to that is that it is not true.

Mr. HARDY. Well, I desire to say in reply to you that you do not know anything about either committee.

Mr. MILES. That is all very fine!

Mr. HARDY. Now, I do not rise to make an attack on the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am a friend of his, and he is a friend of mine. But I am talking simply to this point——

Mr. MILES. I do not know——

Mr. HARDY. I refuse to yield. If the gentleman does not know what he is talking about, I refuse to yield further. Now, Mr. Chairman, what I simply desired to say was this——

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HARDY. I refuse to yield.

Mr. MILES. Very well, that is right. Now I protest——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is out of order.

Mr. MILES. Very well, I respectfully yield to the Chair.

Mr. PICKLER. Sit down.

Mr. MILES. You must not tell me to sit down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is out of order.

Mr. MILES. Yes; and the gentleman from South Dakota is out of order, but you can not see that.

Mr. HARDY. Now, Mr. Chairman, what I simply desired to say was that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and one or two others, I might say—all friends of mine on that side——

Mr. MILES. Do you include me?

Mr. HARDY. All friends of mine, including yourself.

Mr. MILES. I do not know when the friendship began.

Mr. HARDY. Many years ago.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY. Well, if it is brief and pertinent.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman who now occupies the floor and the gentleman from Maryland kindly consent to finish this dialogue in the lobby while we pass a few pension bills? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. I will say to the gentleman from Maryland that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is eminently able to sustain himself on the floor of the House against any man upon it.

What I desire to say is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and one or two others on the floor of the House have occupied the time of the House on Friday nights in protesting, by speeches, against the passage of pension bills, and yet at the same time proclaim themselves to be the friends of the Union soldier. The man that proclaims himself to be the friend of the Union soldier on this floor, as some of these gentlemen have done, and who occupies the position that they have occupied with reference to these bills, is not as good a friend of the Union soldier as I would be of the Confederates, and I was a noncombatant upon either side.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to say further that the people of this country, from the districts represented by these gentlemen and from all over the land, ask nothing but justice to the Union soldiers. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Well, you will vote when I get through; hardly before.

And furthermore I wish to discuss this point, and I rose mainly for that purpose, as to the widow of a dead Union soldier who remarries, that she shall, in the event of the death of her second husband, lose her pension. In many of these cases the children of the dead soldier are gathered about her and dependent upon her; and so, if in order to better her condition she has made a mistake in marrying again and has a worthless husband whom she can not live with, or where the second husband has died, I claim that she should be reinstated to the position she held as the widow of the soldier. The mere act of trying to better her condition should not exclude her from the pension rolls. "Love levels all ranks"; and many a soldier's widow, with his children about her, has sought to better her condition by marrying again, hoping thus to be enabled to support them in a little more comfort. The second husband may have been enabled to provide a better living for her, or he may have failed to do so; but whether he did or not, he has gone to his reward, and I claim that under such circumstances it is not right that the widow, who was the wife of a soldier while he was in the Army and serving his country, should have to lose her pension altogether.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, in this bill we are about to establish another kind of a widow, and while we are making these different kinds of widows we might just as well pause for a minute and see precisely what we are doing.

This soldier was married and obtained a divorce a mensa et thoro, and thereafter proceeded to marry somebody else. Now, we are saying that that is a legitimate divorce, which authorizes a remarriage. The Pension Bureau has said no; and I will warrant the assertion that every reputable lawyer and every reputable legal authority anywhere, except perhaps in this House, will say that it is not such a divorce as will entitle anybody to marry again.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in order under Rule XIV, clause 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no objection was made at the time the gentleman began the discussion. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order at this time.

Mr. ERDMAN. Now it is pretended that there was an opinion by Justice Stanley Matthews and by ex-Attorney-General Taft upon this subject. The gentleman who drew the bill, I warrant, would not produce or publish that opinion, and yet you are about to say that that is the law.

If that is not another instance of reckless pension legislation, I do not know what is. I am told to point them out. I will point them out, and accentuate them as we go along; and yet I warrant that all the gentlemen on the other side of the House, embracing among them many of the best lawyers in the country, will stand up and vote for the passage of the bill against their own better judgment.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say but a word with reference to the attack that has been made upon Dr. Blackman. He was probably the most eminent surgeon that ever practiced in the city of Cincinnati; and the reflection that is made upon him by the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, it seems to me, ought not to go unnoticed. The facts in the case are fully stated in the report——

Mr. ERDMAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. ERDMAN. Do you assert, as a question of law, that this gentleman had a right to marry again in view of the divorce that he received?

Mr. BROMWELL. I do. I assert most emphatically as a question of law that he had, and that is the opinion of Justice Matthews, of the Supreme Court, and of Judge Alphonso Taft, Attorney-General of the United States. It is a question that the best legal talent in the country has settled. These gentlemen, when consulted upon the subject, gave their opinion, as a question of law, that he had a right to marry again.

Now, that is all I have to say. This man was divorced. He went to these eminent legal authorities, than whom there were none better in the United States, and they advised him that under the law he had a right to remarry. He did remarry, and he lived for forty years with his second wife. This is the woman who now applies for this pension.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next bill.

Mr. ANDREWS. I rise to ask unanimous consent in relation to Calendar No. 434, granting a pension to Gen. John M. Thayer. I will state the point briefly, and if there be objection, I will not consume time. General Thayer, the beneficiary named in the bill, is in a very critical condition. He is without means of support, and dependent entirely upon the charity and voluntary service of neighbors and friends, and unless we can reach this bill speedily it is probable that we will not be able to extend any relief whatever in his behalf.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman? He has made none up this time.

Mr. ANDREWS. My request is for unanimous consent that this bill may be taken up and passed upon to-night, in order that we may possibly extend relief to General Thayer in the hour of his need.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope that will be done, although the next bill on the Calendar in the regular order is one in which I am interested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] asks unanimous consent that Calendar No. 434 may be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ANDREWS. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection?

Mr. PICKLER. The whole Calendar will be disarranged if we begin this.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

EBENEZER G. HOWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5254) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer G. Howell, late a private Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Ebenezer G. Howell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of all other pensions.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5254) to pension Ebenezer G. Howell, after duly considering the same, respectfully report:

Ebenezer G. Howell enlisted in the war September 5, 1862, as a private in Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Infantry, and was discharged as sergeant April 25, 1864. He reenlisted April 26, 1864, as second lieutenant Company K, Seventy-third United States Colored Troops, and was discharged January 29, 1866, having served faithfully three years and four months. November 3, 1879, he applied for pension for bayonet wound of right hand injuring little finger, and was pensioned April 10, 1883, to date from April 30, 1866, at $7.50 per month, "for incised wound of right hand affecting little finger." This was increased May 12, 1890, to $11.50 per month, to date from April 30, 1866.

The evidence in this case shows that Ebenezer G. Howell was, on the 6th day of March, 1888, badily injured in a railroad accident near Hobart, in Indiana. The train upon which he was riding was standing upon the track over a high trestle, and was run into by another train from the rear. The engine of the other train telescoped the car in which he was riding, filling the wrecked car with steam. He attempted to escape from the car, which is known as the caboose, and tried to get upon the top of the car and save himself from being scalded to death. He got hold of the ladder leading to the top of the car, but by reason of the injury of his right hand from the bayonet wound he received in the Army was unable to hold himself, and consequently fell a distance of 27 feet, breaking his right arm near the shoulder and also between the elbow and wrist; also injuring his spine and left side to such an extent that he has been partially paralyzed ever since.

The testimony shows clearly that from that time he has been unable to dress or feed himself without assistance and is unable to do any kind of labor. The records of the Pension Office show that Howell made claim for an increase of his pension January 14, 1893, as follows:

Alleges "pensionable disabilities and an injury received in a railroad accident March 6, 1888, in consequence of not being able to hold to the iron on side of the car by reason of said pensioned disability of right hand, said injury on railroad resulting in total physical and partial mental disability, and being sequence of said pensioned disability."

He was examined by the board of examining surgeons at Auburn, N. Y., September 6, 1893, and as a result of that examination, which was made with great detail, they concluded: "As a result of these injuries he is totally and permanently incapacitated for the performing of manual labor."

The increase claim was rejected January 24, 1895, on ground of "no special results." He again made claim for increase July 11, 1895, was examined by same board of surgeons, and was again rejected, on the ground, "Condition of hand, injury due to accident since discharge."

A large number of affidavits have been examined by the committee above referred to, made by residents of Cortland, N. Y., who have known this man before, during, and since the war, and all show him to be a man of pure life and highest character, and that he is now, and has been since the railroad accident entirely incapacitated for labor, and that to a great degree his right hand was useless since his recovery from the bayonet wound received in battle at Fort Blakley, Ala., and that he is now 64 years old and is entirely without means of support.

While the soldier is not pensionable under the present pension laws, it is manifestly clear from the facts and circumstances in evidence that his claim is a very meritorious one, and that the disabilities incurred in the railroad accident were unavoidably received because of his inability to save himself from being completely cooked to death by steam on account of the injured hand for which he is pensioned. It is therefore such a case as should receive the benefits of direct legislation by Congress, and a pension of $30 per month is recommended by this committee.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up Calendar No. 270. I will simply state that this applicant is very needy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take up Calendar No. 270. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I object.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. I am satisfied the gentleman would not object if he heard the statement.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. All of these cases are equally deserving.

CAROLINE A. HOUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Caroline A. Hough, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John Hough, upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and grant her a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension of $17 per month which she is now receiving.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof "thirty."

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough, submit the following report:

The committee have carefully examined the evidence in support of the above bill and find that John Hough enlisted as a private in May, 1861, in Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers. He was wounded in battle in 1861, which compelled his discharge, but in 1862 he reenlisted and was made adjutant of the Seventy-seventh Illinois Volunteers, and was successively promoted to assistant adjutant-general of volunteers with rank of captain, and then major. He was chief of staff of Gen. A. J. Smith, and was brevetted as colonel and brigadier-general for meritorious service in the field. He was a participant in 19 battles. His record is a most honorable one, receiving the commendation of General Smith and General Grant. He remained in the service during the whole war except a short period above mentioned, when he was disabled by wounds and rheumatism.

He was pensioned for gunshot wound of left foot, with loss of great toe, also for rheumatism and resulting disease of the heart, and drew until his death $17. His widow has drawn the same pension since his death.

There is no question but that these wounds and diseases were of service origin.

The evidence shows conclusively that the widow, Caroline A. Hough, has no income, property, or means except her pension of $17 per month, which is insufficient for her support, she being in the sixtieth year of her age and in feeble health.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty" in seventh line and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," and that the bill as thus amended do pass.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to remark that this is a case over which this side of the House will make no point. It is the second such case in succession. I want that to appear in the RECORD, in view of some remarks that have been made to-night. This is a meritorious case.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES H. JONES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4122) granting an increase of pension to James H. Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase to the sum of $20 per month the pension of James H. Jones, of Cusseta, Ga., late of the Georgia Volunteers, Indian war.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4122) granting an increase of pension to James H. Jones, have considered the same, and report:

The claimant served from May 9, 1836, to September 2, 1836, as a private in Captain Urquhart's company of Georgia Volunteers in the Florida Indian war, and he is now receiving, under certificate 1470, the pension of $8 per month allowed by the Indian war act of July 27, 1892.

Mr. Jones is now about 83 years of age, in a helpless condition physically, and wholly dependent upon his small pension for support. He and his aged wife are both almost totally deaf, and they have an invalid daughter, who is dependent upon them for maintenance.

In view of the above facts, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EUGENIA R. SWEENEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3426) granting an increase of pension to Eugenia R. Sweeney, widow of Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Sweeney, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eugenia R. Sweeney, widow of Thomas W. Sweeney, deceased, late a brigadier-general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. HOWE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3426) to increase the pension of Eugenia R. Sweeney, beg leave to submit the following report:

Previous to the third session of the Fifty-third Congress the claimant had been in the receipt of a Mexican war pension of $8 per month, when, at the suggestion of her friends, she petitioned Congress, through the Senate of the United States, to grant her a pension of at least $50 per month, which was referred to the Senate Committee on Pensions (the chairman of which was Senator JOHN M. PALMER, who well knew her husband, General Sweeny, both in the Mexican war and the war of the rebellion), who unanimously declared that—

"The long and faithful service of the soldier, the wounds that he received in two wars, which finally compelled his retirement from the service, and the poor health and poverty of the widow, make the case one of unusual merit, and we therefore recommend that the bill do pass."

In pursuance thereof said report was adopted by the Senate, and reaching the House committee for action in almost the last hours of the session for consideration by the committee as well as the House of the Fifty-third Congress, a modification by the committee was made reducing the sum from $50 to $30, and for fear that all might be lost by the failure in conference for the want of time for consideration, should it go to conference, the friends of the bill decided to accept the reduction, and stated that they would renew the application for the $50 per month at the present Congress, in view of the meritorious character of the general's services and the necessities of his widow; and therefore your committee recommend the passage of the bill H. R. 3226, and at the same time beg leave to append Senate Report No. 802 to their report, and adopt the same as a part thereof:

[Senate Report No. 802, Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2511) granting an increase of pension to Eugenia R. Sweeny, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant under this bill is the widow of Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Sweeny, late of the Army of the United States, who died at Astoria, N. Y., April 10, 1892. The widow is now in receipt of a Mexican-war pension of $8 per month.

The records show that General Sweeny entered the service as a second lieutenant December 23, 1846, and continued in practically constant service until May 11, 1870, when he was mustered out in consequence of wounds received in the Mexican war and the war of the rebellion. Special Orders, No. 190, reads as follows:

[Special Orders, No. 190.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 11, 1870.

A board of examination having found Maj. Thomas W. Sweeny, United States Army, unassigned, incapacitated for active service, and that said incapacity is due primarily to a wound received in the battle of Churubusco, Mexico, while a second lieutenant in the First New York Volunteer Infantry, on the 20th of August, 1847, which occasioned the amputation of his right arm at the middle third; and, secondly, to a gunshot wound received in the right leg at the battle of Wilson Creek, Missouri, August 10, 1861, while acting as inspector-general to Brigadier-General Lyon, and at which time he (Major Sweeny) was a brigadier-general of the Three Months Volunteers, under an election of the officers approved by Brigadier-General Lyon; and, thirdly, by a gunshot wound in the flesh of the left arm above the elbow, received at the battle of Shiloh, Tenn., while commanding a brigade, these several wounds being aggravated by long and faithful service and exposure in the line of duty, the President directs that his name be placed on the list of retired officers of that class in which the disability results from long and faithful service, or from wounds or injury received in the line of duty. In accordance with section 32 of the act approved July 28, 1866, Major Sweeny is, by direction of the President, retired with the full rank of brigadier-general.

By command of General Sherman.

E. D. TOWNSEND, Adjutant-General.

J. R. MARTIN, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Mrs. Sweeny's petition to Congress is in the following words:

To Congress of the United States of America:

The petition of the undersigned, Eugenia R. Sweeny, respectfully shows: I am the widow of Thomas W. Sweeny, late brigadier-general, United States Army, retired, deceased. I was married to him at Augusta, Ga., on September 30, 1867, and we lived happily together until his death on April 10, 1892, and I have not remarried.

My husband at the time of his death was an officer in the United States Army, holding the rank of brigadier-general, retired. I refer to his honorable war record from the time he entered the Army, serving through the Mexican war in 1846-1848, wherein he lost his right arm and received other wounds; afterwards on the great plains in the West, and all through our great and lamentable civil war, wherein he earned and attained the rank of brigadier-general.

In consequence of the loss of his arm and wounds received in active service my said husband was retired on the 11th day of May, 1870, with such rank of brigadier-general. Being physically incapacitated by reason of wounds received during service in the United States Army, consisting in the loss of his right arm, a saber cut on forehead, and bullets in legs and remaining arm, he never entered any private business or accepted any political position. His only income was his pay as such retired officer, and he had no property or other income of any kind. He had dependent upon him for support his family, consisting of two sons and two daughters, my mother, and myself. I had no property or income, and with so many dependent upon him for support my husband's whole salary was used to give his family a comfortable living, and he was unable to save any of it for the future, and on dying he left no property or estate.

I am, and for many years have been, a partial invalid from rheumatism and nervous prostration, and am utterly unable to perform manual labor of any sort. My daughter Fannie has secured a position at a small salary, and is absent from home from early in the morning until late in the evening. One of my sons has also obtained a position at a very small salary, but must, when possible, learn and enter some other business before he can earn enough to support himself. My other son has no business, and by reason of a severed tendon in his arm is incapacitated for manual labor. Since my husband's death I have moved into a smaller house to secure a lower rent, and have taken boarders in the attempt to support myself and family, yet so small is the return that I can not hire a servant; hence my mother, who is aged 66 years, does most of the housework. My income is insufficient to provide myself and family with the necessaries of life.

Compelled by my necessities, I now petition that your honorable body will take note of them, and of my late husband's lifelong services rendered to the Government, preventing him from accumulating property, and grant me a life pension of at least $50 per month.

Dated October 12, 1893.

EUGENIA R. SWEENY.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of Queens, ss:

Eugenia R. Sweeny, being duly sworn, deposes and says that she is the petitioner named in the foregoing petition; that she has read the same and knows the contents thereof, and the same is true.

EUGENIA R. SWEENY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of October, 1893; and I hereby certify that the person who signed and executed the foregoing petition and affidavit to be a creditable person and of good repute for truth and veracity in the community in which she lives, and that the contents of the above petition were fully known to her before signing.

[SEAL.] WALTER G. SCOTT,
Notary Public, Queens County.

The following is General Sweeny's military record, as furnished by the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT, RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
December 20, 1894.

VOLUNTEER RECORD.

Thomas W. Sweeny was enrolled November 23, 1846, at New York, and was mustered into service as second lieutenant with Company A, First Regiment (Burnett's) New York Volunteers, December 23, 1846. He is reported present on the rolls of his company, except as follows:

Roll dated August 31, 1847, "Wounded severely at battle of Los Portalas, August 20, 1847"; October 31, 1847, to February 28, 1848, "On sick leave from October 27, 1847"; April 30, 1848, "Absent on recruiting service October 26, 1847, General Orders, No. 328, October 26, 1847"; roll for May and June, 1848, not on file.

He was honorably discharged as second lieutenant, said company and regiment, March 16, 1848, to enable him to accept an appointment as second lieutenant, Second United States Infantry.

T. W. Sweeny, captain Second United States Infantry, was assigned to the command of a brigade of Missouri militia May 20, 1861, and was honorably mustered out as brigadier-general of Missouri Infantry August 14, 1861.

Thomas W. Sweeney was mustered into service as colonel Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, to date January 21, 1862, and is reported on the field and staff rolls of the regiment as follows:

Roll dated February 28, 1862, "Present," with remark: "On special duty in St. Louis, per letter of instructions, dated headquarters Department of Missouri, St. Louis, February 24, 1862"; April 30, 1862, "Present," with remarks: "Wounded in battle April 6, 1862, at Pittsburg, Tenn."; June 30, 1862, "Absent," with remark: "Away on leave of absence"; August 18, 1862 (special muster), "Absent," with remark: "On leave of sixty days from June 26, 1862"; August 31, 1862, "Present," with remark: "Joined from leave of absence, August 30, 1862"; October 31, 1862, "Absent," with remark: "On detached service, commanding Second Division"; December 31, 1862, and February 28, 1863, "Absent," with remark: "On detached service, commanding First Brigade Dodge's Division, per Special Orders, No. 9, dated headquarters Sweeny's division, October 30, 1862."

He was honorably discharged as colonel of said regiment to date April 20, 1863, to enable him to accept an appointment as brigadier-general of volunteers.

The medical records show that Colonel Sweeny was wounded in the arm and had his horse shot under him at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., April 6 or 7, 1862.

Thomas W. Sweeny was, while serving as colonel Fifty-second Illinois Volunteers, commissioned brigadier-general of volunteers March 11, 1863, to rank from November 29, 1862, and accepted the commission April 21, 1863. He is reported as follows:

In command of the First Brigade, Second Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, from date of appointment to July —, 1863; absent with leave to September —, 1863; in command of Second Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, from September 12, 1863, to July 24, 1864; relieved and ordered to Nashville, Tenn., in arrest, to await trial on charges preferred; stations from August to December 31, 1864, not given; January 1, 1865, at Louisville, Ky., under trial; acquitted by a general court-martial of the charges preferred; February — to April —, 1865, at Brooklyn, N. Y., awaiting orders; April 10, 1865, ordered to report to commanding general, Military Division Mississippi, for duty. No further record of service found.

He was honorably mustered out of service as brigadier-general of volunteers August 24, 1865.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, U. S. A., Chief Record and Pension Office.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Your committee are unanimously of opinion that this case is worthy of favorable consideration. The long and faithful service of the soldier, the wounds that he received in two wars, which finally compelled his retirement from the service, and the poor health and poverty of the widow make the case one of unusual merit, and we therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, this is a case reported from the Committee on Pensions. I desire simply to take occasion to say that the minority of this House is represented on the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Messrs. ERDMAN, MCCLELLAN, LAYTON, and myself, and that from the beginning of this Congress down to this moment this is the very first time that any member of the minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has opened his mouth in these debates upon any case coming from the Committee on Pensions. I say that in view of some remarks that have fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Indiana in the debate to-night. We have never at any time objected to or debated any case coming from the Committee on Pensions, any of us.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

NANCY G. ALLABACH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy G. Allabach, widow of Peter H. Allabach, late colonel One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. MCCLELLAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach, having examined and considered the same, report it back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass, after being amended by adding at the end thereof the words "in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Your committee submit as their report the report on the same bill adopted by the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach, have examined the same, and report:

The military record of Peter H. Allabach, who served as colonel One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and also in the Mexican war, is as follows:

Peter H. Allabach was mustered into service as colonel One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers August 18, 1862, to serve nine months; was in command of the Third Provisional Brigade from August 22, 1862, to October 10, 1862, and of the Second Brigade, Third Division, Fifth Army Corps, from October 16, 1862, to May 14, 1863; and was mustered out of service with the field and staff of his regiment May 23, 1863.

The records on file in the Office of the Adjutant-General of the Army show that Peter H. Allabach was enlisted in Company K, Third United States Infantry, at Philadelphia, Pa., November 25, 1844, was transferred to Company E, same regiment, September, 1849, and was discharged from the latter company, as a sergeant, at Paso del Norte, N. Mex., November 25, 1849, by reason of expiration of term of service.

Your committee, having become satisfied that the only income petitioner has is the Mexican war pension of $8 per month and is supported by the charity of friends, therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

It will be observed that the soldier had an honorable service in two wars, and that he was a colonel in the late war. The widow was granted a pension of $8 per month under the Mexican war pension law, and for this reason she has not applied for pension under the act of June 27, 1890.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CATHERINE R. JARDINE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 349) granting a pension to Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Brig. Gen. Edward Jardine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Edward Jardine, late brigadier-general of the Army of the United States, and pay her at the rate of $100 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. This is an extraordinarily long report, and I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] who made the report can give a succinct statement without it being necessary to have the report read.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I should not care to undertake to do it. If my colleague [Mr. QUIGG] were here he could do it possibly. My colleague [Mr. CURTIS], who was an intimate friend of General Jardine, would do it better than I.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I think if the House would accept a short statement which I could make on this bill it would save time for the consideration of other bills.

Mr. ERDMAN. I suggest the reading of the first part of the report, and omit the record from the Record and Pension Office.

Mr. PICKLER. All right; let that go.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 345) granting a pension to Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Brig. Gen. Edward Jardine, have had the same under consideration, and submit as their report the report upon the same bill adopted by the Senate Committee on Pensions, as follows:

"At the outbreak of the war, in 1861, Edward Jardine, then 32 years of age, recruited a company in New York and joined the Ninth New York Volunteers. He was rapidly promoted from captain to major, from that to colonel, and finally made a brigadier-general.

Having acquired a knowledge of military matters through his connection in his early years with the New York Seventh Regiment, National Guard, he brought with him to the war a spirit of discipline that made itself felt in his company and regiment from the very beginning. It was this spirit and knowledge, coupled with his courage and bravery, that contributed greatly to the subsequent success and fame of his regiment, known as the Hawkins Zouaves. Captain Jardine was particularly conspicuous in his early service with this regiment in the command of scouting and reconnoitering parties and in other special duties at the front that required courage and daring. Specially notable were his services in command of a small detachment of the Ninth New York in covering the retreat of the Union forces after the battle of Big Bethel, Va., and bringing away the body of Lieutenant Greble.

He displayed conspicuous gallantry and coolness in the landing of the troops at Hatteras Inlet, North Carolina, under the heavy fire of Forts Hatteras and Clark, in August, 1861.

At the first bayonet charge of the war on Roanoke Island, Jardine, in command of his company, was among the first to enter the enemy's works. His services were especially useful at Camden, Winton, and Elizabeth City, N. C., and earned for him his promotion to the rank of major. He took an active part in all the subsequent battles in which his regiment was engaged, and at the battle of Antietam he was assigned by General Fairchild to the temporary command of the Eighty-ninth New York Regiment, which afterwards presented him with a gold medal as a mark of the appreciation of the officers and men of that regiment of his gallant services while commanding it. An incident of that battle, which well illustrates the character of the man, has been thus described:

"At Antietam, brigaded with his old regiment, was the Eighty-ninth, to whom he was assigned as colonel ad interim, leading them over Antietam Creek, fighting in the water up to their armpits, then up the bank and away at their head, never faltering, although he saw the most cherished friends of his old regiment falling like grass before the scythe, until 63 per cent of those engaged had been killed or wounded, pausing only for a moment as an aid of General Rodman rode up to give him an order, which was interrupted by a shell exploding between them, killing the aid and almost blinding Jardine with the blood from the horse which fell dead at his side. The same shot killed the horse he was riding, hurling him violently to the ground. He arose, wiped the blood from his face, and calmly turning to his regiment, his command rang out to his astonished men who thought him dead, 'Forward,' and on they went again, to sure and certain victory."

He afterwards rejoined his own regiment and participated in the battle of Fredericksburg and the engagements around Suffolk, Va.

In these fierce fights at the front he was badly wounded many times, his left thumb being almost severed from his hand, a ball piercing his thigh and destroying one kidney, and at another time he was severely injured in the right shoulder. He was wounded twice at the battle of Camden, April 19, 1862, and though suffering intensely he refused to leave the field until the fight was over, and not until the next day were his wounds dressed.

He came back to New York in 1863, when his regiment was mustered out, and at once undertook the reorganization of the regiment as colonel for the term of the war. While engaged in this duty the draft riots broke out in New York City in July, 1863, and Colonel Jardine was directed by General Wool, then chief in command of the department, to assist with what men he could raise in quelling the riot. He immediately called on all the men he could find of his old regiment and some of the Seventh, making in all about 175 men. With this handful of soldiers he marched against the mob, numbering nearly 15,000, most of whom were as well armed as his own men. They were soon overcome by sheer force of numbers, and one of the mob placed a loaded musket to Colonel Jardine's head, but just as it was discharged one of the zouaves struck the piece down, the charge entering Jardine's knee and thigh, making a frightful wound, it having been loaded with a slug made from a piece of lead pipe.

Some of his men managed to elude the rioters and bear him to a nearby house, where he was concealed in the cellar, seemingly in a dying condition. While there the house was forced, and his life was spared merely because the leader of the mob, on seeing his condition, said he was as good as dead now, and there was no use bothering with him.

From this wound he never recovered. Every day brought pain; operation after operation to extract fractured bone was borne by him with patient heroism. During the remaining thirty years of his life he had to go on crutches, and hardly knew an hour free from intense pain and distress. Obliged, however, to do something to maintain himself and his family, he accepted a subordinate position in the New York custom-house, which he retained until about four months before his death, when his sufferings became so great that he was compelled to relinquish his position and take to his bed, which he never afterwards left.

He underwent nine separate surgical operations on his thigh, the last one being in October, 1892.

During the four months preceding his death, in which General Jardine was confined to his bed, Mrs. Jardine, for whose relief the bill referred to your committee is drawn, was in almost constant attendance upon him, refusing to take rest, until she finally broke down under the strain of constant nursing and was herself in a physician's care, suffering from complete nervous prostration.

In view of the especially meritorious and useful services of General Jardine, and of his terrible wounds and intense suffering, which incapacitated him from earning a competency to leave for the support of his widow, and of the further fact that during the eight years of their married life Mrs. Jardine was devoted and constant in her unremitting care for her crippled husband, your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH G. IVES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, to place upon the pension roll the name of Sarah G. Ives, widow of Joseph C. Ives, late of Company A, Iowa Volunteer Infantry, in the war with Mexico, at the rate of $8 per month.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives, have considered the same, and report:

The claimant's deceased husband, Joseph C. Ives, was enrolled July 8, 1846, in Captain Morgan's company, Iowa Infantry (Mexican war), and mustered out July 15, 1847. He reenlisted July 15, 1847, in the same company and regiment, and served until September 11, 1848, when honorably mustered out with the company.

The soldier was pensioned under the provisions of the Mexican war service-pension act of January 29, 1887, and after his death his widow, the beneficiary, filed a claim under the same law, but the claim was disallowed on the ground that the soldier did not serve in Mexico, on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto. It seems that although the enlistment was for the Mexican war the regiment was assigned to post duty at Fort Atkinson, Iowa, and to field duty along the Upper Mississippi.

The service is fully shown by the records of the War Department, and the widow would have been pensioned under her application at the Pension Bureau if the same rulings had prevailed at the time of the soldier's death as when his claim was allowed. His enlistment was clearly for service in Mexico, and his being retained for duty in the North was due to the exigencies of the situation at that time.

The claimant is now 63 years old, and her identity as the widow of the soldier is fully established by the testimony filed at the Pension Office.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the word "eight" be stricken out and the word "twelve" be substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "twelve."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I hope he will not do that. This is in accordance with uniform precedents, and under the general law all the others are getting but eight.

Mr. TRACEY. Let us vote on it.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH MOORE ENGLISH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5345) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill be laid on the table. A similar bill has passed this evening.

Mr. PICKLER. The Senate bill has passed.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in the power of the committee to lay the bill on the table, but the committee can recommend that it be laid on the table.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask that it be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PAYNE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5345, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it do lie on the table. The committee had also had under consideration the bill H. R. 2604 and the bill S. 894, and had directed him to report the same with amendments, and recommended their passage. The committee had also had under consideration the bills H. R. 1050, H. R. 1271, H. R. 1838, S. 640, H. R. 2151, H. R. 5254, H. R. 4122, H. R. 3456, S. 345, H. R. 4887, and had instructed him to report the same with the recommendation that they do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill.

ELIZABETH DESHLER WHITING.

The first business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1050) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Deshler Whiting, widow of Lieut. Henry Whiting.

Mr. DANIELS. I ask for the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH MOORE ENGLISH.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 1271) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ERDMAN. For the purpose of trying to get an understanding with the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions as to the passage of these bills, or nearly all of them.

Mr. PICKLER. What understanding does the gentleman want?

Mr. ERDMAN. I shall be willing, and shall help to pass all the bills that were considered to-night except House bill 2151.

Mr. PICKLER. When we come to that I do not think there will be any controversy. When we come to that we will——

Mr. MILES. You can not pass that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass? There is no objection to this bill, as the Chair understands.

The bill was passed.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1838) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH W. FISHER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 640) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. TALBERT. I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 80, noes 1.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the point and let this bill lie over.

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw the point if the bill is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, this bill will be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection.

AGNES A. BLACKMAN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2151) to restore to the pension roll the name of Agnes A. Blackman.

Mr. ERDMAN. That is the bill that I object to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, this bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection.

EBENEZER G. HOWELL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5254) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer G. Howell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE A. HOUGH.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. JONES.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4122) granting an increase of pension to James H. Jones.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EUGENIA R. SWEENEY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3426) to increase the pension of Eugenia R. Sweeney, widow of Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Sweeney.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NANCY G. ALLABACH.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was read and agreed to.

CATHERINE R. JARDINE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 345) granting a pension to Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Brig. Gen. Edward Jardine.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH W. FISHER.

Mr. TALBERT. As all these other bills have passed, I withdraw my objection to the bill to pension Joseph W. Fisher.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 640) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH G. IVES.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the various bills reported from the Committee of the Whole were passed was laid on the table.

AGNES A. BLACKMAN.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 2151) to restore to the pension roll the name of Agnes A. Blackman be considered as engrossed and read a third time. This is agreed to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN], who objected to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, House bill 2151 will be considered as engrossed and read the third time.

There was no objection.

ELIZABETH MOORE ENGLISH.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5345) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole with a recommendation that it lie on the table. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 4, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NEW ORLEANS PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 2132) for the relief of settlers upon lands within the indemnity limits of the grants of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority be, and is hereby, given the New Orleans Pacific Railroad to relinquish any lands within the indemnity limits of its grant, which by decision of the Land Department of the Government has been awarded it, in favor of any settler entitled to the right of entry under the laws of the United States who has been allowed to make entry thereof, or who has resided upon and improved the same for five years, and to select in lieu thereof an equal quantity of other lands, from any of the public lands not mineral, and within the limits of its grant and not otherwise appropriated at the date of selection, to which it shall receive title the same as though originally granted.

Mr. OGDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa to make an explanation of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given I would like the gentleman to make an explanation of the effect of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. This can be done, Mr. Speaker, in a word.

There are 75 to 100 settlers who have taken possession of lands, which proved to be railroad lands, lying along the line of this road. After a contest they were adjudged to belong to the railway company. The company, however, is averse to turning the settlers off the land, and is willing to take wild lands in lieu of those the settlers are occupying, and the Department requests that this permission be given to them. That is all the bill does.

Mr. DINGLEY. The lands when selected in lieu will be ordinary lands?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; ordinary wild lands. Perhaps not so good as those on which the settlers have made their homes, but the railroad company does not want to disturb them any more than possible.

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. OGDEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC LANDS, VALVERDE COUNTY, TEX.

Mr. NOONAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration for the bill (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owner the said tract of land in Valverde County, Tex.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1880, the San Felipe Agricultural, Manufacturing, and Irrigation Company, by deed of conveyance, did convey to the United States of America a certain tract, piece, or parcel of land then in Kinney County, now in Valverde County, Tex., containing 409 acres of land, and fully described in said aforesaid deed of April 15, 1880, for the purposes of a military garrison and reservation; and

Whereas the United States of America, not wishing to use said land for the said purposes aforesaid, and having by its proper officers renunciated title to said land, and is willing to reconvey the same to the grantees, the said San Felipe Agricultural, Manufacturing, and Irrigation Company: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America is hereby authorized by proper deed to reconvey by quitclaim deed said aforesaid land to said aforesaid company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There was no objection.

The bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. NOONAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPORTS OF SUPERVISING INSPECTORS OF STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Printing I desire to submit at this time for present consideration a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed, for the use of the Treasury Department, Steamboat Inspection Service, 300 copies each of the proceedings of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels for the years 1895 and 1896.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Mr. PERKINS. I am also requested, on behalf of the Committee on Printing, to ask consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 116) authorizing the Public Printer to print the Annual Report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in quarto form and to bind it in one volume.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That paragraph 8, section 73, of the act of January 12, 1896, providing for the public printing and binding, etc., be amended by striking out all of said paragraph after the word "survey," at the end of the first and beginning of the second lines, and substituting in lieu thereof the following words: "Two thousand eight hundred copies in quarto form, bound in one volume, 200 for the Senate, 600 for the House, and 2,000 for distribution by the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PERKINS. The committee recommends an amendment to the resolution, and I report it in the shape in which it is desired to be passed.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken on the joint resolution as reported from the committee.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CIRCULAR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

Mr. PERKINS. On behalf of the Committee on Printing I desire to submit another resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound, in paper covers, 25,000 additional copies of Bureau of Education Circular of Information, No. 200, Catalogue of the American Literary Association Library; 5,000 copies for the Senate, 10,000 copies for the House of Representatives, and 10,000 copies for the Bureau of Education.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS FOR 1894 AND 1895, ETC.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have one more resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS], on behalf of the Committee on Printing, presents a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print, for distribution by the Department of State, 2,500 copies of Commercial Relations for 1894 and 1895, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the "Review of the world's commerce," etc., being pages 1 to 235, inclusive, of said Commercial Relations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to comply with the letter and spirit of the act heretofore adopted by Congress, and that he deliver to each Senator and Representative, for distribution, the quota of seeds to which he is entitled, and that the packages be made up as each Senator and Representative may direct.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, that resolution ought to be amended by saying that these packages shall be done up in fives.

Mr. FISCHER. "As each Senator or Representative may direct." One may want 5 and one may want 10.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is too indefinite.

Mr. FISCHER. Some may want 5 and some may want 15.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. "In blocks of 5."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SEWERAGE SYSTEM AT FORT MONROE, VA.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. This is the same resolution which was offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] yesterday. Upon an informal consultation with members of the Committee on Appropriations, I am directed to report this resolution and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 163) to amend the act approved August 1, 1894, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, etc.

Resolved, etc., That the act approved August 1, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to remove the restriction that the United States shall bear only one-half of the expense of the cost of construction of the sewerage system at Fort Monroe, Va., provided for in said act, in so far as may be necessary to authorize the Secretary of War to expend for the completion of the construction of said sewerage system, including a flushing system therefor, so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $5,000, of the balance now remaining from the appropriation of $37,500 made in said act for the construction of one-half of said sewerage system, the funds to be immediately available and the work to be done by contract or otherwise, as may deemed by the Secretary of War most economical and advantageous to the Government.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, in further explanation, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. This requires unanimous consent.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning I objected to the consideration of this resolution. I have examined it, and I withdraw my objection. I think it ought to be passed, and I hope it will be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
March 9, 1896.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

Congress, by act approved August 1, 1894, appropriated $37,500 for one-half of the cost of construction of a sewerage system at Fort Monroe, Va., the other half to be paid by the owners of nonmilitary buildings at the fort. Plans were prepared and approved for a sewerage system, which, with contingencies, inspections, superintendence, etc., was estimated to cost $45,000, and on that estimate the moiety was assessed against and collected from nonmilitary interests, thereby making the sum of $22,500 available from the appropriation made by Congress, and leaving a balance of $15,000 from the appropriation.

The construction of the sewerage system under the approved plans is now nearing completion.

A flushing system will be necessary in connection with this sewer, for which there is no adequate supply of water provided. Experience has shown that the well recently sunk for the Chamberlin Hotel at Fort Monroe does not yield potable water. The funds appropriated for an artesian well at Fort Monroe are not sufficient to sink a well of materially greater depth than that of the Chamberlin well, and as these funds were appropriated upon estimates submitted to provide a water supply for the fort, it is believed that they are not available for the sinking of a well for the procurement of a supply of water that could be used solely for flushing the sewer.

It will be necessary, therefore, to provide a supply of water, by pumping or from some other source, for the flushing system of the sewer, and it is thought that it will be in the interest of economy that this water supply should be provided by the Government alone, and not jointly with the nonmilitary residents, especially as a flushing arrangement would be necessary for the United States sewers if there were none other.

I have, therefore, the honor to recommend that Congress be asked to authorize at once the use of $5,000 of the balance of the sum appropriated for the construction of one-half of the sewerage system at Fortress Monroe for the completion of the sewerage system and for providing a flushing system for the sewers, the funds to be immediately available and the work to be done by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government.

W. P. CRAIGHILL,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to state that this question was up yesterday. There was a question of jurisdiction involved. I still think it should have gone to the Military Committee, but at the request of some members we have turned it over to the Committee on Appropriations, on account of the importance of having it at once passed. I ask that the Military Committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The Committee on Appropriations do not object to the passage of the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is ipso facto discharged, because the bill has passed.

BENJAMIN F. JONES.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7161) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the report read.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

JOHN S. BURWELL.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7816) for the relief of John S. Burwell, administrator of the estate of A. L. Burwell, deceased.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SALMON FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6403) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 2, 1889, and entitled "An act to provide for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska," is hereby amended and reenacted as follows:

"That the erection of dams, barricades, fish-wheels, fences, traps, pound nets, or any fixed or stationary obstructions in any part of the rivers or streams of Alaska, or to fish for or catch salmon or salmon trout in any manner or by any means with the purpose or result of preventing or impeding the ascent of salmon or salmon trout to their spawning ground, is declared to be unlawful, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to remove such obstructions and to establish and enforce such regulations and surveillance as may be necessary to insure that this prohibition and all other provisions of law relating to the salmon fisheries of Alaska are strictly complied with.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful to fish, catch, or kill any salmon or salmon trout of any variety, except with rod or spear, above the tide waters of any of the creeks or rivers of less than 500 feet wide in the Territory of Alaska, or to lay or set any drift net, set net, or seine for any purpose, across the tide waters of any river or stream, for a distance of more than one-third of the width of such river, stream, or channel, or lay or set any seine or net within 100 yards of any other net or seine which is being laid or set in said stream or channel, or to take, kill, or fish for salmon in any manner or by any means in any waters of the Territory of Alaska, either in the streams or tide waters, from noon on Saturday of each week until 6 o'clock postmeridian of the Sunday following, or to fish for, or catch, or kill in any manner or by any appliances, except by rod or spear, any salmon or salmon trout in any stream of less than 100 yards in width in the said Territory of Alaska, between the hours of 6 o'clock in the morning and 6 o'clock in the evening of the same day of each and every day of the week.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury may, at his discretion, set aside certain streams as spawning grounds in which no fishing will be permitted; and when, in his judgment, the results of fishing operations on any stream indicate that the number of salmon taken is larger than the capacity of the stream to produce, he is authorized to establish weekly close seasons, to limit the duration of the fishing season, or to prohibit fishing entirely for one year or more, so as to permit the salmon to increase.

"SEC. 4. That to enforce the provisions of law herein, and such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may establish in pursuance thereof, he is authorized and directed to appoint one inspector of fisheries at a salary of $8 per day, and two assistant inspectors at a salary of $6 each per day, and he will annually submit to Congress estimates to cover the salaries and actual traveling expenses of the officers hereby authorized and for such other expenditures as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the law herein.

"SEC. 5. That any person violating the provisions of this act, or the regulations established in pursuance thereof, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment at hard labor for a term of ninety days, or both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court: And provided further, That in case of the violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, and conviction thereof, a further fine of $250 per diem will be imposed for each day that the obstruction or obstructions therein are maintained after notice to remove the same; said notice may be given by any Government officer or private citizen."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, this is a measure of so great importance that I hardly think it ought to pass by unanimous consent.

Mr. KNOX. It has been to the committee and I have here the report of the inspector. It has been carefully gone over by the committee in connection with the Treasury Department. The need for immediate consideration is thus stated: The run of salmon commences on the 1st of June, and unless the bill can be passed and got through the Senate these provisions will not be put into active operation during this season.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's remarks must be addressed to the Chair and through the Chair to the House. If gentlemen would keep their seats and cease conversation it might be possible to hear in this Hall, although, of course, that is a question.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, the present bill is a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Territories, and its object is the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska. In the Fiftieth Congress, in chapter 415, it was provided:

That the erection of dams, barricades, or other obstructions in any of the rivers of Alaska with the purpose or result of preventing or impeding the ascent of salmon or other anadromous species to their spawning grounds is hereby declared to be unlawful, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to establish such regulations and surveillance as may be necessary to insure that this prohibition is strictly enforced and to otherwise protect the salmon fisheries of Alaska; and every person who shall be found guilty of a violation of the provisions of this section shall be fined not less than $250 for each day of the continuance of such obstruction.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries is hereby empowered and directed to institute an investigation into the habits, abundance, and distribution of the salmon of Alaska, as well as the present conditions and methods of the fisheries, with a view of recommending to Congress such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent the impairment or exhaustion of these valuable fisheries and placing them under regular and permanent conditions of production.

Under the provisions of this law passed by the Fiftieth Congress an inspection has been made carefully of the various streams of Alaska and the various canneries that are established upon those streams, and a careful inquiry made by the inspector, Mr. Murray, upon consultation with those who are interested in the preservation of those fisheries, as to the best method of preserving them, and the report, which is a very careful and voluminous one, compares the provisions of this country with those in Scotland and those in England, which have been tested, and which have preserved for generations the salmon fisheries in Scotland and other countries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a danger of the present supply of fish in Alaska being destroyed by the method of taking salmon. The streams of Alaska, with two exceptions, are small, running into the interior to the extent perhaps of 20 miles. The fish that go up there to the spawning grounds are caught by damming the streams and taking them out or scooping them out in hundreds and hundreds of thousands, thus preventing the propagation of the species, until in but a few years the great industry of the salmon fisheries of Alaska will be utterly destroyed and the food supply of the natives gone, and a very great source of supply and profitable industry to the people of the United States exhausted.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit me one moment?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. In addition to what he has stated, in regard to the origin of this bill, I think that it may be stated that the excuse for bringing this matter in this morning to ask for unanimous consent is that this legislation is required immediately to be effective, as the salmon begin to run about the 1st of June, and unless this legislation can be had in advance of that time it will be ineffective for the purpose intended. I believe the gentleman has stated that this bill emanates from the Treasury Department in pursuance of the section of the statute which he has read. It was carefully prepared in the light of all the facts by the Treasury experts, and it is asked by those who have charge of the preservation of that industry that this legislation be had without delay.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KNOX. I have not yielded the floor. I will answer in a moment. I was about to say that that was precisely what I stated to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] in the duet that I was obliged to maintain with him in order to be understood at all—which was that it is represented by the Treasury Department that the necessity for this immediate action rests upon the ground that the salmon run commences the 1st of June, and in order to get it through both Houses and to get any of this supervision in operation it will be necessary for immediate consideration, if the bill is thought one that is worthy and proper to pass.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him whether his committee has heard from the interests that are to be affected by this bill, not only through the Treasury Department but directly from the interests themselves? And, in connection with that question, let me say to him that a great many of our people on the Pacific Coast, in the States of California, Oregon, and Washington, are largely interested not only in the fishing in the streams of Alaska but also in the canning of the salmon, and therefore it strikes me that until he shows the House that those interests have had proper representation before his committee he ought not to ask to have this bill considered under these circumstances.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear this bill reported again, if it can be done under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Oregon to object.

Mr. HERMANN. No, Mr. Speaker, I did not object.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the Clerk will again report the bill.

Mr. HERMANN. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I think we ought to have a little more explanation with reference to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. I do not think the gentleman can put this bill through in this way.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I understood that, pending objection, an explanation of the bill would be made, and I ask to have it read again.

Mr. LOUD (to Mr. KNOX). It seems to me that you ought to consider those interests——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that those interests have been heard before the committee, not only through the Treasury Department, but through the inspector, Mr. Murray.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is the gentleman unwilling to let the House know what his bill is about?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then why do you not let it be read again?

The SPEAKER. Without objection the bill will be again reported to the House, but if any gentleman intends to object to its consideration, it is hardly worth while to repeat the reading. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill was again read as above.

Mr. BARHAM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman to let that bill go over for two or three days, so that we may consider it. It may be just what we want on the Pacific Coast; I do not know. Our people there are very much interested in the subject of the bill.

Mr. KNOX. Well, if the bill may be considered as up for consideration without objection, I will agree to that.

Mr. BARHAM. I must reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BARHAM. I object.

JOHN C. HOWE, DECEASED.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the engrossed Senate bill (S. 32) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, $66,907, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being compensation in full for the use by the United States, to wit, in 66,907,313 cup-anvil cartridges, of the invention secured to John C. Howe and his assigns by letters patent of the United States issued to him August 16, 1864, and numbered 43851, during the entire term of said letters patent, as appears in the findings of law and of fact made by the United States circuit court for the district of Connecticut in the case of Forehand and others vs. Porter, reported in volume 15 of the Federal Reporter, at page 256, and as further appears in the findings of fact made by the Court of Claims, after full testimony and full hearing in Congressional case No. 1, entitled Forehand and others vs. The United States, heard on reference of the matter to said Court of Claims by the Committee on Claims of the Senate under and pursuant to the act of March 3, 1883, commonly known as the Bowman Act, said findings of fact having been certified to the Committee on Claims of the Senate by said court on the 26th day of April, 1889.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Speaker, has this bill been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. This bill has passed the Senate twice unanimously; it has been reported twice by the Senate committee; it failed in the House on two occasions because it was not allowed to be brought up for consideration; it has been reported unanimously by two committees at this session, the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims, and it was reported by the Committee on War Claims favorably at the last session.

Mr. AVERY. Has it been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It has not; but it has been passed twice by the Senate. It is one of the most meritorious bills that has come before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. AVERY. I object.

GEN. JOHN M. THAYER.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6644) granting a pension to Gen. John M. Thayer, United States Volunteers. After the reading of the bill and report I shall ask consent to make a brief statement in explanation of the merits of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John M. Thayer, late brigadier-general and brevet major-general of volunteers, at a pension of $100 a month.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6644) granting a pension of $100 per month to John M. Thayer, late brigadier and brevet major-general of volunteers, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report as follows:

In 1855 the Territorial legislature of Nebraska provided for the organization of the militia and for the calling out of volunteers for the defense of the settlers, and elected John M. Thayer brigadier-general to command the troops on the frontier, and subsequently elected him to be major-general. It devolved on General Thayer to defend the people of the frontier settlements against the hostile Indians. He was not only protecting the settlers of the Territory of Nebraska, but was defending what was then the frontier of the United States. This service he performed continuously from 1855 to 1861, and has never received any compensation therefor.

In 1861 he raised the First Regiment Nebraska Infantry, took it to St. Louis, and reported to General Grant at Pilot Knob, Mo. In the battle of Donelson General Thayer commanded a brigade, and at a critical moment, when General McClernand's division had exhausted their ammunition and were compelled to fall back closely pursued by the enemy, General Thayer rushed his brigade forward, got in the rear of the retiring division, formed a line of battle, met General Buckner's army, and drove them back into their works. For this gallant service he was given great credit and honorable mention by General Grant. He commanded a brigade in the battle of Shiloh, at the siege of Vicksburg, led his brigade as a storming column at Chickasaw Bayou, had his horse shot from under him in the battle at Arkansas Post, and participated in other battles.

The records of the War Department show that he was promoted from colonel to brigadier-general of volunteers October 4, 1862, and that he commanded a brigade from that time until the close of the war; that on March 13, 1865, he was made a brevet major-general of volunteers "for gallant and meritorious service during the war."

The evidence in this case shows that General Thayer is now 77 years of age, and that he is wholly without means of support, and a subject of charity for his neighbors and friends.

Dr. W. G. Houtz testifies:

* * * "That for the last four years he has had the said John M. Thayer under his care and medical treatment, and much the greater part of that time he has been wholly unable to do any kind of manual labor, and for many weeks at a time he was confined to his bed. Determination of blood to his head is of such frequent occurrence as to constantly threaten apoplexy. Loss of locomotion (locomotor ataxia) unfits him to be left without some one to be constantly with him and care for him."

N. S. Harwood, president of the First National Bank, of Lincoln, Nebr., testifies as follows:

"For the last four or five years he has been in a helpless condition; the only means of earning a livelihood has been by his pen, and but very little of this period has he been in sufficient health to enable him to do this. He is a very proud and sensitive gentleman; he will not let his poverty and helplessness be known, and it is impossible for friends who would gladly render him assistance to do so. I think he would rather starve or die of neglect than to accept alms. He is now dangerously ill at the home of his comrade in arms, Capt. Adam Bax, who is himself broken in health, and whose family is in no suitable condition to care for him."

There is abundant evidence establishing the fact that the said John M. Thayer is wholly without means of any kind and that he is entirely unable to do anything for his own support, and that his condition is such as to require some one to be with and care for him all the time.

Your committee respectfully recommend that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what this pensioner is now drawing?

Mr. ANDREWS. He is drawing nothing. He declined to accept any assistance in this direction so long as he was able to care for himself, and he has consented to permit his friends to make this effort on his behalf now only because he is no longer able to care for himself, as the report shows.

It has been the pride of General Thayer's life, so far as I know him, to serve his country from a true spirit of genuine patriotism. In the time of his country's need he gave the best services of his life for its preservation and advancement. After the close of his brilliant military career, briefly sketched in the report, he served with honor and distinction in the United States Senate.

At a later date the people of Nebraska elected him twice to the governorship of their State. In every station he has served the interests of his State and nation with marked fidelity and ability, and now, in the hour of his weakness, the people of Nebraska and all who know him and have learned to love him will greet the passage of this bill with most hearty approval.

The Nebraska delegation upon this floor earnestly request that unanimous consent be granted for the immediate passage of this bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, I must not intrude upon the time of the House, although I would gladly extend the history of this brave patriot, soldier, and statesman. I esteem it one of the privileges of my life to have the honor of requesting the passage of this the first bill placed in my charge on the floor of this House. What we do must be done speedily, as it may be too late to give relief. Let him have at least a token of his nation's gratitude for his loyalty to the flag and the Union. Let him know that we will care for him in the hour of his weakness as faithfully as he cared for the Union in the hour of its need.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And he is in a needy condition?

Mr. ANDREWS. Absolutely so, and also in a very critical condition of health.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And he is 77 years old?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes, sir; and I hope we can have a vote on the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REPRINT OF RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the river and harbor bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is——

Mr. HITT. The conference report on the resolutions in relation to Cuba.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment while I present a privileged report.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

ELECTION CONTEST—GOODWYN VS. COBB.

Mr. DANIELS. I am directed by the Committee on Elections No. 1 to submit their report on the contested-election case of Goodwyn vs. Cobb, from the Fifth Congressional district of Alabama. The majority of the committee report that Mr. Cobb was not elected and that Mr. Goodwyn is entitled to the seat. The committee have agreed to give to the minority of the committee one week from Monday in which to prepare the statement of their views; and we expect to bring up this case on Monday week for the consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not hear the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS]. The House will please be in order.

Mr. DANIELS (after order had been restored). Mr. Speaker, we desire to bring up the case of Goodwyn vs. Cobb on Monday week for final action; in the meantime the minority of the committee will prepare the statement of their views.

The SPEAKER. This report of the Committee on Elections will be ordered to be printed. How much time is desired for the minority to file their views?

Mr. DANIELS. A week from Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the minority of the committee that time? The Chair hears none.

ELECTION CONTEST—ROBINSON VS. HARRISON.

Mr. LEONARD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 1, I present their report on the contested-election case of Robinson vs. Harrison from the Third Congressional district of Alabama. I ask for the consideration of the report at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. LEONARD. It is a unanimous report in favor of the contestee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will proceed to the consideration of the report.

There was no objection.

The resolutions appended to the report were read, as follows:

Resolved, That W. C. Robinson was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Third Congressional district of Alabama at the election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That George P. Harrison was elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Third Congressional district of Alabama at the election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894, and is entitled to the seat.

The resolutions were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LEONARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. DANIELS. I ask that the report in the case just disposed of be printed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion to reconsider the vote on agreeing to the report of the committee in the election case of Robinson vs. Harrison and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LEONARD] and was agreed to.

CUBA.

Mr. HITT. I now call up the regular order—the conference report in reference to Cuban belligerency. As the last speaker was opposed to the report, I will ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. For how much time?

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to speak in my own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] is recognized.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, it had been my full intention not to address the House again on this subject, because when the question was up before I occupied a short time in endeavoring to state as briefly as possible the reasons which led the subcommittee to the conclusion expressed in the resolutions which were at that time under consideration. But, sir, in view of the extraordinary remarks made yesterday by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] embracing statements of which I can only say that I do not know from what source he could possibly have obtained his information, and in view of the fact that the many questions interjected into the remarks of members of the committee have indicated a desire for further information by members of the House on this subject, and in view of the fact, also, that when I last spoke my time was so limited, I desire now to restate briefly the reasons which led the subcommittee to come to their conclusion in favor of the resolutions originally reported here.

In the first place, it has been claimed by the gentleman from Maine, and has been asserted in other quarters, that the sentiment of the American people is not behind these resolutions, and that therefore the House is not justified in adopting them. I should like to ask what better evidence can the representatives of the people have as to the sentiment of the country than the expressions which have come to us in behalf of these resolutions? If members here had seen the numbers of petitions coming to this House from all parts of the country, they would have realized how deeply the people are interested in this question, and how eagerly they have exercised their constitutional right of petition in order to convey to Congress their sentiments in behalf of these resolutions. I have heard some of the members of this House longest in experience here state that never have they known so many petitions to be filed in favor of any proposition pending before Congress as have been filed here in favor of doing something to aid the struggling Cubans in their fight for liberty.

It was my office, as chairman of the subcommittee, to go over these petitions. They numbered hundreds; and the thousands of signatures appended to them represented every class and condition of life in this Republic. There were official petitions from boards of trade and business bodies; there were the individual petitions of men who, moved by a spirit of patriotism which they could not repress, felt it incumbent upon them to appeal to the Congress of their country to do something to assist these lovers of liberty. Some of these petitions had been placed in public places such as drug stores and others, where the passer-by unsolicited might affix his signature to this call upon the representatives of the country to do something for the Cubans.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, how a Representative of this House can rise here and say that the sentiment of the American people does not demand the passage of these resolutions I am at a loss to understand.

Furthermore, in response to the petitions, these resolutions were passed both by the House and Senate practically unanimously; and does anyone dare to say at this time and under these circumstances that we, the representatives of the people on this floor, are false to our duties, false to our oaths, that we sat here and cast our votes in diametrical opposition to the wishes of our constituents, and that it was not in obedience to the will of the people of the country that we have acted?

Why, Mr. Speaker, what proof can we ask further than what we have right before us at this time?

Now, the gentleman from Maine claims that this sentiment among the people has changed. He stated that when these resolutions reached the other branch of Congress, after being debated there, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of that body found that they could not pass, and therefore had them sent back to the conference, so that it might be taken out of the jurisdiction of the Senate. I do not know where he got that information. The Senators who argued against the adoption of the House resolutions were just the same as those who opposed the adoption of the Senate resolutions. There were no accessions apparently to their ranks. The same arguments were repeated over and over again. It became apparent in the course of the discussion, from the nature of the remarks made, that they were not seeking to amend the resolution, that it was not the subject-matter of the House resolution to which they objected, but that the men who spoke were in opposition to the expression on the part of the American people of any sympathy with the struggling people of Cuba.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ADAMS. I decline to yield. The gentleman from Maine denied me the courtesy yesterday of an interruption. He must excuse me now for not granting it to him.

The gentleman from Maine may criticise the sentiments embodied in the resolution. This was done during the discussion in the Senate on the part of a few of the members in that body who desired to defeat all expressions of sympathy on the part of the people of this country with Cuba. The Senator from New York said he did not like the resolution because it enunciated the doctrine that this country would protect American property wherever it was situated. He did not like, he claimed, pecuniary motives or considerations to be incorporated in a solemn resolution expressive of sympathy.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, he was at a loss for some criticism in order to sustain the position of opposition that he took to the resolution. And, in another part of my remarks, I will refer to the position taken by several Senators on this point.

Another gentleman objected on the ground that the grammar of one of the sections was not strictly correct, but he took good care not to state what the section or paragraph was or to cite the rule of Murray to which it would not accord. Another had objections on the ground that the Senate should adhere to their own resolutions, and not be coerced, bulldozed, or carried away by the House of Representatives. In other words, it was a claim that Senatorial dignity must be maintained.

When the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations found it was obstruction and not opposition with which he was confronted, he asked leave to withdraw the report and let it go back to the conference committee. I do not wish to disclose in any improper way the proceedings of the conference committee, but, inasmuch as assertions have been made which were entirely inaccurate, I know of no other way to remedy them except by a statement of the facts. No claim was made by the conferees on the part of the Senate that the resolutions of the House could not pass the Senate; but it was stated that a small number of Senators, from 6 to 10, at the outset of the controversy had announced a purpose to filibuster, if necessary, to the end of the session to defeat the express will of the whole American people and not allow the resolutions to go on the records of Congress. When that situation was made known to the conferees on the part of the House, we saw that if we wished to carry out the will of the people, there was but one way, and that was to acquiesce in the Senate resolutions, withdraw them from the consideration of that body, and bring them back to the House of Representatives, which is closer, nearer, and dearer to the people of this country, and where we could see that the wishes and sentiment of the American people might be embodied in the resolution of sympathy and put on the records of Congress, and that this, the mother of Republics, was ready to hold out the hand of relief in any part of this continent to our struggling sisters who were seeking the establishment of self-government. The members of the Senate who were in the majority saw that under the rules of the Senate they could not force a vote to be taken on the resolution; and hence this was the only parliamentary solution of the difficulty. It is for this reason that the conferees, having held out for the adoption of their own resolution, agreed to accept the Senate resolutions and bring them back and recommend their passage by the House of Representatives.

Now, another claim has been set up here that there is no government in the nature of a Republic in Cuba; that these men were bandits; that it was a negro uprising or insurrection, and that we have no information here to warrant us in extending belligerency to those people fighting for liberty on the Island of Cuba.

I wish to state, sir, and I do it on the most accurate information which, after two months of investigation, I have been able to obtain, that that charge is absolutely untrue. There was a congress held at Jimaguyu, a town in the Island of Cuba, at which there were representatives from every province of that island. They adopted a constitution. So careful was their consideration and so well weighed was their action that when it was proposed to establish a military dictatorship it was not allowed. They said they would have a civil form of government, that the military should be subservient to it and under its direction, and a regular civil government was organized then and there. I will give you a list of the men who constituted the president and cabinet of this Republic, because I wish to show their character; that they are not adventurers; that they are people of standing and position; that they are patriots who are striving, as did our forefathers over a century ago, to establish the eternal right of self-government on the Island of Cuba, almost the last vestige of land on this Western Continent of ours that is subject to royal control.

The president is the ex-Marquis Santa Lucia, a man whose love of liberty was so great that he laid down his title and became a plain citizen.

The vice-president is Bartolomè Masso.

The secretary of foreign affairs is Rafael Portuondo, who was an attorney of good standing, and assistant district attorney under Spain.

The secretary of war is General Roloff, a man well known as being always ready to lend his aid to the cause of liberty.

The subsecretary of war is Mario Menocal, an engineer, a name well known in our country, and he is the nephew of the man who has had so much to do with the Nicaragua Canal.

The secretary of the treasury is Sarcio Pina, a man of good family and of high distinction.

The secretary of the interior is Dr. Santiago Canizareo, who was port physician under Spain.

The subsecretary of foreign affairs is Dr. Dominiquez, one of the survivors of the massacre of the students by the volunteers, which cast such a stain on the last war that was waged in Cuba in 1871.

The subtreasurer is Dr. Joaquin Castillo, who is known probably to every man in this House as having been a member of the Jeannette expedition to the polar regions.

Sir, there is not a colored man in the whole list that I have read. There is not a man who holds a high commission in the insurgent army, except Maceo, who is not a white man. When these claims are made in order to deprecate these struggling patriots it is time they should be repudiated on the floor of this House, and that the truth may prevail.

Now, sir, to sustain this position, that even in the ranks there are plenty of native Cubans, I will quote from the official letters of the consuls of the United States. These are not newspaper reports. These are what the subcommittee waited for before they reported these resolutions to the House, in order that they might have official information. Consul Hyatt writes:

> During the past week about 100 men have left Santiago to join the insurgent forces. Many of these men belong to the best families of the town, which gives a new phase to the uprising.

Another consul writes:

> Men are constantly leaving the large centers of population to join the insurgents, and the public opinion is rapidly going in that direction.

There is another letter here somewhere, of similar import, which I can not at this moment find.

Now, sir, the charge has been made—was dragged into this debate yesterday, and I do not see how it applies—of the great barbarity that has been practiced in Spain. It was held up here, and the method of public execution described. How was it answered? Sir, when the gentleman from Maine rose in his place and in order to palliate the legalized cruelties of other countries cited the illegal acts of his own, and began to put in the official record of Congress the story of lynchings and tortures that had taken place in our country, it shows the weakness of his argument. In the one horrible case which the gentleman cited as having occurred in this country, he did not even give the cause of it. He did not state that the mob was roused to its point of fury in avenging a crime that was so atrocious that I can not name it on the floor of this House.

Sir, it is a bad cause and a weak argument when a man has to derogate his own country in order to mitigate the crimes of other lands when cruelty is charged against them. Sir, I care not whether garroting be cruel or not—the gentleman says it is the legal death penalty in Spain—I only know that in the last case of which I read in the papers it was stated that the public executioner and his assistant fled from their work and could not pursue it. It was even too much for men trained to execute their public function.

Sir, all the cruelties that exist in this case are to be placed at the door of the Spanish as against these insurgents. I ask any man of fair judgment to read the official proclamation of the new governor-general, Weyler, who has taken his place to put down this rebellion because Campos, who closed the last rebellion, not by force but by compromise, has not succeeded in putting down this one. Campos closed the last rebellion by promising to these people autonomy, representation in the Cortes, and reform in the taxation. These were promised after the vain endeavor for ten long years to put down the rebellion by force. Not one of those promises, practically, has been kept, and that is the reason for this new outburst on the part of the Cubans against Spanish imposition and Spanish cruelty, in order to free themselves from the great burden of taxation which has been imposed upon them.

Now, sir, I come down to the question of belligerency. It has been much discussed on the floor of this House. We are told that these people are not entitled to the rights of belligerents, first, because they have no capital; second, because they do not possess a seaport, and third, because they fly no flag on the high seas. Gentlemen, these are not requisites under international law for the granting of the rights of belligerency. The fact of the existence of a capital permanently located is the best evidence probably of the existence of a permanent government. The possession of a port shows they are able to hold it against the force of the parent government. So far as this cause is concerned, they have got a capital; it is located, I will admit, on the Cubitas Mountains; but it is so strong and so impregnable that, although 6,000 Spanish troops have occupied a position for a space of one year within 6 miles of that place, they dare not attempt to take it. The gentleman from Maine has said that this is one reason why belligerency should not be granted.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if when some sturdy delegate to the Continental Congress when he arrived at the city of Philadelphia, to take his place there and represent his district, had found that the capital of the then struggling Republic of the United States had been moved to Lancaster, would he have said, "Our cause is lost; our cause is not just, because our permanent capital has been removed"? Methinks he would have pursued his travel to Lancaster; and when he arrived there, and found that the capital of the Republic had been moved farther on, do you think that the heart of that sturdy old New England delegate to the Continental Congress would have failed him and that he would have said, "The Republic is lost; our cause is a hopeless cause; the capital has moved back to the mountains of Pennsylvania, to York"? No, sir; methinks he would have gone to the mountains of Pennsylvania, where was located the capital of our Republic, and when there he would have voted for new supplies and made arrangement for the raising of new men, and not have said that the cause of the great American people was hopeless or lost because the capital had been moved to the mountains. [Loud applause.] But, sir, the tone of New England was different in those days from what it is now; and we in the Middle States look for inspiration to Plymouth Rock, and not for cold water and arguments against the people who are struggling for liberty.

Now, sir, belligerency means a state of war. Whenever men can establish under international law that a state of war has been maintained for a reasonable time its people are entitled to belligerency. I will ask any rational man if, when the official records of Spain show that 120,000 Spanish troops have been sent to Cuba in the past year, that is not a state of war? I will quote from a Spanish newspaper to show that my sources of information are utterly impartial. It says (I will translate):

> We hold in front of our troops 53,000 insurgents. Thirty thousand of them are well mounted [referring to the cavalry] and perfectly armed.

This is from El Pais of the 9th of January of this year.

Can any man maintain that an army of 120,000 troops, reenforced by 40,000 volunteers in Cuba, on the one side, and on the other 53,000 men, who, in spite of the disparity of the numbers to-day, at the end of eighteen months of battle, the Spaniards have not even gained a foot from the Cubans, but have lost, lost until they have gone to the very gates of Habana, the capital of the island; and had they had artillery or had they more arms to equip a sufficient number of men they could have captured the city and swept the Spaniards into the sea.

Now as to the message of General Grant, which was quoted here as a precedent. No man, sir, should stand higher or have more weight with the people of this country and with its representatives, especially on a question of war, than the great captain-general who saved our country. But, sir, one fact must be remembered: General Grant personally always gave his sympathy, and would have recognized the belligerency of the Cubans if it had not been for the advice and influence of his Secretary of State. In a recent interview with the Hon. Hamilton Fish, his son, now living in Albany, he gave out a portion of his father's diary, where General Grant was just about to recognize the Cubans, when the Secretary of State sent for him and persuaded him against it; and General Grant, with that great breadth of mind for which he was so much credited, at the advice of the Secretary of State, did not carry out his purpose. Sir, with all due respect to Hamilton Fish, whom I honor and admire and whose acquaintance I possessed, it was the same influence upon Secretary Fish—the business interests of New York—that had great weight with him, and the same that makes a Senator of that State stand on the floor of the Senate and oppose it to-day. The business interests and the stock market do not represent the sentiment of 70,000,000 people of our great Republic.

Now, sir, I claim that under international law they are entitled to belligerency, because they have an established government of their own. They have gained possession of almost the entire island, and have an independent government of the island. They have governors in their provinces who control the civil authorities. They have prefectos in every district who administer justice, and who levy supplies and forward them to the army; and while that may not be called taxation, that is what it is to all intents and purposes, for the money is generally used just as if it were raised by taxation.

There is one other point of international law that I wish to refer to before I close. It is a well-admitted principle which has been enforced time and time again, that when the material interests of any country are affected by strife, either internal or foreign, going on in a neighboring state—when the commerce, the manufactures, or the sources of commercial supply of that country are seriously interfered with—its government, under the law of self-preservation, has a right to intervene to put an end to the strife.

Before emphasizing this proposition I wish to advert for a moment to another point. It has been asserted here that the people in the towns in Cuba are not in sympathy with the revolutionary movement and that it is limited entirely to the agricultural districts. I have here a copy of a set of resolutions adopted by the officials of the town of Mantua, one of the towns that the insurgents captured and held for quite a time. The original of these resolutions, attested by the seal of the town, is in possession of Senator SHERMAN, so that there can be no doubt as to its authenticity. In that town when the people were free, under the protection of the insurgents, and had full liberty to express their opinions, they passed these resolutions:

> Pedro Sauchez Espinosa, secretary of the municipal council of Mantua, certifies that in the archives under his charge and responsibility exists, which literally says:
> Minutes: In the town of Mantua on the 23d day of the month of January, 1896, there assembled in the town hall the most important residents of this place without distinction of political opinions, presided over by the mayor. The following were present at the session: The lieutenant-general and chief of the invading army, Antonio Maceo, accompanied by his chief of staff, Brigadier Jose Maceo, and the chief of the First Brigade of Las Villas, Juan Bruno Zayas. I declare as follows:
> First, that the town of Mantua is in the western extremity of the island, in the Province of Pinar del Rio.
> Second, that General Maceo with forces under him has occupied the town and municipal districts, having respected lives and all kinds of property, keeping the public order with his troops, and leaving the authorities which were under the Spanish Government in their places, and that seeing the conduct of the army of liberation and of his chief they adhere to its principles and arms, believing that it would be for the benefit not only of this district, impoverished already by the many exactions of which it was the victim, but also for the benefit of the whole country which suffered the same ill treatment.
> And the persons assembled, who represent the living forces of the territory in real estate, in cattle raising, in manufactures, in trade, in art, in the professions, in banking, and in agriculture, signed with the foregoing before me, the secretary, as a witness: Jose Tors, A. Maceo, Martin Viladomat, priest; the chief of staff, J. Miro; Brigadier Juan B. Zayas; the governor, Oscar A. Justiniani; the auditor of war, Jose Antonio Cainas; first lieutenant major, Jose Fernandez; Simon Docal, alderman; municipal judge, Nicholas Reyes; Dr. S. Carbonell, notary public; D. Tors; substitute municipal judge, Santiago Muguruza; Prof. Pedro Lozano, secretary of the municipal court; Rafael Yngles, merchant; Narciso Fontanella, secretary of the marine department; Jose Ruiz, G. Now, Mr. Speaker, I revert to the principle of international law of which I have just spoken, the right of a country to intervene where its material interests are affected. Our own country is dependent on the Island of Cuba for some of the necessaries of life. It is also dependent on that island for some of the materials which go into our great structural buildings. It is also dependent on that island for some of the fruits in most common use. It is also dependent on that island for several of its luxuries. Now, when the condition has arrived in which the material wealth of our country, the necessities of our people, the luxuries of our people, the materials which go into our manufactures, the trade and commerce in which our merchants make their profits—when the condition is reached where those great interests have been materially interfered with for a period of one year, we have the right, under the principle of international law which I have cited, to intervene in this dispute. If the war in Cuba continues, the island will be devastated from one end to the other in such a way and to such a degree that fifty years will not suffice to restore it to a condition which will enable it to supply us with those necessaries and luxuries which we have heretofore obtained from there.

The time has come, therefore, when something ought to be done, and if the granting of belligerency tends in the direction of putting an end to this struggle, this House will be fully justified in passing these resolutions.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another consideration, a higher consideration. I believe, sir, that this Western Hemisphere of ours has been dedicated to the right of self-government. One by one Spain has lost her colonies. Following the example set by this, the mother of republics on our Western Continent, they have separated from the mother country. One by one they have established themselves as republics in North, South, and Central America, until now Cuba and Costa Rica alone remain. Spain can not hold Cuba. That island is bound to follow the inevitable law of nature. Spain will lose Cuba just as she lost her other colonies. For seventy years this warfare has been going on in the Island of Cuba. As I have already stated, the last rebellion was put down only by compromise. It was never conquered. Those people never will be conquered.

Meet them; see the spirit that animates them; look how they fight! The well-trained soldiers of the regular army of Spain can not withstand the onset of those Cuban patriots, armed simply with the machete; they can not withstand the onset of those men fighting for liberty. The Spanish troops dare not go beyond their own fortifications. Whenever they do so they are compelled to retreat. On the other hand, the insurgent forces wander at will from one end of the island to the other. The Spaniards, with all their warlike appliances, their armed railroad cars, their cannon, and their well-trained troops, can not prevent the insurgents from traveling from one province to another. They have had them hemmed in time and time again, but never have been able to hold them there. The continuance of the conflict is inevitable and can have but one result. Why? Because it is a war waged on the part of liberty as against oppression; because it is waged by a people who are fighting for the same cause that sustained our ancestors—the right not to be taxed without representation.

The people of Cuba are overtaxed, and not only that, but the appointments of collectors of taxes are limited entirely to minions of Spain who are sent to Cuba from the mother country. Even the Cuban volunteers, so called, that they claim are fighting for Spain are Spaniards, not Cubans. They dare not arm the Cubans. They raised a regiment of native Cubans and sent them into the field; as soon as they met the insurgent forces the entire regiment deserted, under the command of the lieutenant-colonel, and the colonel of the regiment (Cineros) was so mortified that he committed suicide. The so-called Cubans who are fighting for Spain are not native Cubans; they are Spaniards who have gone to Cuba in times of peace, many of them to escape the five years of military service required in Spain, preferring to serve in Cuba, where the term is but three years. The Spaniards can not get white native Cubans to fight against their country. The native Cubans are with the insurgents in the field, and I believe that if they could get into the towns nearly everywhere would be heard similar expressions to that which I have read you from the city of Mantua.

Sir, the conflict will go on until victory crowns the efforts of those men fighting for freedom. Spain will never conquer Cuba. Cuba will join the list of the great Republics founded in this our Western Hemisphere, and soon from one end of the continent to the other there will be only that form of government which is dedicated to the rights of mankind, where white and black shall have the same civil and religious rights, and where the people shall have that free government which is their right, undictated to and uncontrolled by any power of Continental Europe. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. POWERS). The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is recognized.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am aware——

Mr. HITT. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX], who has a letter he desires to read from his colleague [Mr. DRAPER], a member of the committee, would like to be recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I have no objection to yielding for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] will proceed.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I have intrusted to me a letter from my colleague, General DRAPER, a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. He has sent me this letter that I may read it to the House. I differ with him, much to my regret, in the position he takes. He is opposed to these resolutions, while I am in favor of them. I differ, with similar regret, from others of my colleagues from Massachusetts. It seems to me that the struggle of the patriots of Cuba can not but excite the sympathy of a free people and their earnest solicitude for the success of those who in the love of liberty and the desire for a free government have taken up arms and appealed to the God of battles. This I understand to be the sentiment of the Republican platform in Massachusetts. That platform expresses not merely sympathy for the Cubans, but desire for their success, and urges the United States (of which we here are the representatives) to take measures to put an end to this cruel and barbarous war. Now, if we fail to express in some practical and efficient manner such sympathy and solicitude for the Cuban patriots we shall incur, I think, not only the loss of our own self-respect, but the contempt of foreign nations.

There are two ways in which this sympathy may be expressed. If it shall be made to appear that this war is carried on with barbarity, cruelty, and atrocity on the part of the Spanish soldiery, is attended with the slaughter of noncombatants and women and children, then it would be the duty of this Government (if such course should be necessary) to interfere in the interest of our common humanity. The locality of this contest is so near that we could not be indifferent. We could not shelter ourselves by saying that we were ignorant of the facts; and if such crimes were permitted by one great power of the Western Hemisphere, we should be held responsible for them in the eyes of the civilized world.

But in the absence of such evidence there are other ways by which we can show our sympathy. One is by the adoption of such resolutions as those now pending, in favor of giving belligerent rights to these struggling Cubans. This course all the undisputed facts clearly point out as correct. It can be said with no extravagance of statement that if there ever was a revolution which was absolutely justified it is that now in progress in Cuba. Long years of misrule, of oppressive taxation wrung from the people with no beneficial returns, the denial of common right and justice to numbers of those people, left no course to the Cubans but an appeal to arms. That appeal has been sustained by an organized army, equipped and officered, which has made marches and fought battles and endured privations and sufferings that challenge the admiration of the world. And somewhere, Mr. Speaker, in the mountains of Cuba, those ancient fastnesses of liberty, there has been a government established, founded on justice and the equality of man.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Cubans may point, as to the permanence of this revolution, not alone to their present achievements, but to their past history. That history is glorified by deeds of valor, by endurance of suffering that always accompany a struggle for freedom wherever it is carried on. They surrendered in 1878; but they were unconquered, although they had met the whole power of Spain for more than ten years in open warfare, unaided and alone. Is there any reason to suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the present war will be less prolonged? Can anybody say with any foundation of fact or reason that this is but a temporary revolution—a mere ebullition of popular discontent? No, sir; it is war, bitter and prolonged war, and can have but one result—the freedom of Cuba or the annihilation of the native population of that island.

If we consider the facts as they exist, and judge the future by the past, we should give to these men the rights of belligerents. If we fail to do it we shall be false to that changeless tradition of our own country, to that love of liberty which has here its highest earthly exemplification, and shall be unfaithful to a duty that is laid upon us and which we have no choice but to discharge.

And now, Mr. Speaker, lest my time should entirely expire, I will discharge the duty imposed upon me of reading this letter of my distinguished colleague, with whom I differ with so much regret.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26, 1896.

MY DEAR FRIEND KNOX: I am unfortunate as a Representative in Congress in having a business that makes occasional imperative demands, and these demands sometimes come at unfortunate times. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I have formed some definite ideas on the Cuban question, and though I expressed them fully in committee, I was compelled to be away when the resolutions were brought before the House some weeks ago.

Having no idea that they would be back again in any form, I have made engagements necessitating my leaving for New England to-morrow, and now it seems probable that resolutions in some form according belligerent rights to the insurgents will be reported from the conference committee during my absence.

Under these circumstances, if you will get time during the debate and read this note in the course of your remarks, it will explain my absence to those who feel as I do, and who might expect to hear from me as a member of the committee.

I am opposed to any resolution according belligerent rights to the Cubans under present circumstances for at least two reasons:

First. The facts do not warrant according them, if the writers on international law have any weight in such matters.

Second. These unnecessary disturbances of our foreign relations are having and will have a disastrous effect upon business in our own country.

I should say much more if I had opportunity to speak, but perhaps this is all of your time that I ought to occupy.

Sincerely, yours, WILLIAM F. DRAPER.

Hon. W. S. KNOX,
House of Representatives.

I read this letter during my own time, and regret that I can not agree with the opinion therein expressed. I am in favor of granting belligerent rights to the Cubans, that they may have their freedom, that their country may be as free as ours. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad if we could agree as to the time at which to take the vote on these resolutions. A number of gentlemen have asked to speak, and I do not think there is any disposition to curtail debate unnecessarily. A great many gentlemen, however, are desirous of voting to-day. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], who is aware of the claims upon his side of the question for time, can suggest an hour when we may take a vote, I hope it will meet the assent of the whole House.

Mr. TUCKER. If my friend will postpone his request until after the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has spoken, I think we can agree upon a time.

Mr. HITT. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to occupy?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Possibly not more than a few moments myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The Chair will excuse me. I had the floor and yielded to my colleague [Mr. KNOX.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. There has been no limitation yet upon the time.

Mr. HITT. No; my proposition was to arrange a time for taking the vote. As the gentleman from Massachusetts expects to occupy but a few moments——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I desire there should be no misunderstanding. I was recognized and yielded to my colleague [Mr. KNOX]. He spoke in my time. Now, I again have the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There has been no limitation of time. The gentleman from Massachusetts was recognized in his own right.

Mr. TUCKER. We will agree on the division of time hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he has yielded time to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITT. There has been no adjustment of time yet, and no one has been designated to control the time. The gentleman from Massachusetts desired to be recognized in his own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman in his own right.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that it is useless as well as unpopular to oppose these resolutions.

The overwhelming majority by which the resolutions presented before were passed showed the temper of the House, and for myself I am ready to admit that I do not believe that it exaggerated public opinion. But with all due deference I do not think that public opinion ought to guide us in this instance, because I do not believe that public opinion observed the details of this measure but looked at it simply as an expression of a sentiment of good will and friendliness toward the struggling people of Cuba. That, I think, is a sentiment in which we all participate. We all feel and would all be glad to express sympathy with Cuba, but everyone will admit that when the House of Representatives comes to express an opinion, not on a general question of sympathy, but on a very delicate question involving constitutional and international law, it is not for us to be guided entirely by our sympathies or by public sympathies, but it is our duty to analyze the question before us and decide it according to the law and the evidence.

For myself, I sympathize most heartily with the cause of the Cuban insurgents. I do not see how an American citizen, with the historical memory coming down from our own Revolution, can feel otherwise toward an American colony struggling against a European power, though I do not admit that the Cuban insurgents are of the same stuff as were our Revolutionary ancestors. And if my sympathy was not enough, I might point to the fact that self-interest also calls for the absolute independence of Cuba, for Cuba free and independent would present an opening to our market and our industries and for the investments of capital and a reciprocal trade greatly to our advantage.

So, Mr. Speaker, I freely admit at the outset of my remarks that not only motives of sympathy with the cause of struggling Cubans, but motives of self-interest as well, make us desire the success of Cuba.

But that is not the question presented to us to-day. We are not here to-day either to express sympathy or annex territory, and I think it is necessary for us to use special caution lest unwittingly to ourselves we mix the motives of love of humanity with self-interest, and lest when we think we are merely influenced by those feelings the real motive might be mercenary.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] said we were not in the habit of hearing from Massachusetts or New England voices against human freedom. That is true; but, Mr. Speaker, it is not simply love of freedom that characterizes Massachusetts. It is love of justice as well. And I think when a question of law is presented to us on which we must pass judgment, a grave question of intricate, delicate, constitutional law, she will insist upon her Representatives not deciding from sympathy or sentiment, but she will expect them to hear the evidence, and if the evidence is against their sympathy she will expect them to stand by the dictates of judgment and justice; and although her sympathy, like ours, would naturally be with these resolutions, I think she will not blame us if we are compelled to decide against them, nor will she be ashamed if we are in a small minority, when we are supported by the words of George Washington and Ulysses S. Grant read yesterday.

What is the resolution before us here? We are asked to express an opinion upon the rights of Cuba to belligerency. Now, the fact that this is a mere question of opinion, a question of which we have no jurisdiction, is not to me an insuperable objection. If I sat on the other side of the House, if I had recently argued and voted for the doctrine that the House had no right to express an opinion on the conduct of a foreign ambassador because it was beyond our jurisdiction, I might myself feel constrained to oppose this resolution on that ground. I think, however, this House has a right to express an opinion on any subject. It is a question of expediency; and the question raised now is whether it is wise on the part of Congress to express an opinion on a moot question of international law. To that there is this objection: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] yesterday admitted that this resolution accomplished nothing. He admitted that by expressing our opinion that they are entitled to belligerent rights we do not give them those rights. Another department of the Government decides that. So we are here arrogating rights which are not given to us. We are here usurping a jurisdiction which is not ours, simply in the hope of impressing the judgment of the Executive, who by the Constitution has that jurisdiction.

Now, it seems to me that on a delicate question of international relations it is not wise for us to express an opinion unless it amounts to something. It is not wise for us to usurp a jurisdiction and to express our opinion when we know and it is admitted that that opinion has no force. It does not bind Cuba. It does not bind Spain. It does not bind the United States. It binds no one but ourselves; and if our decision is right, if it is in accord with constitutional law, it does not help constitutional law any, and it does not help anyone else. If it is wrong, if we are making a mistake, if it is against constitutional law, it does not hurt constitutional law, but it does hurt the House of Representatives. It establishes a bad precedent for no useful purpose. That is one reason why I decline to vote for these resolutions.

And there is another reason still more influential. I think that when we come to assume a jurisdiction that does not belong to us, and express an opinion on a question of fact and of law which is not of right ours to decide, which is intruding upon another department of the Government, I think we ought to have evidence to support it beyond all question. If there is a doubt on the matter, if we can not be sure, if the evidence is conflicting or if it is vague, then I think we ought to abstain from any opinion.

Now, in this case there is no question that the evidence is vague and contradictory and insufficient. What is it that they must prove? I wish to read just one sentence, stating the constitutional law as General Grant understood it. He says in his message to Congress during the former Cuban revolution:

> To justify a recognition of belligerency there must be, above all, a de facto political organization of the insurgents sufficient in character and resources to constitute it, if left to itself, a state among nations.

What do we know about the political organization of the Cuban insurgents? Do we know that they are able to take their place as a state among nations? Why, criticism has been passed upon Spain because in our civil war it prematurely recognized the Confederacy. It has been said that was an improper and unfriendly act, and it has been argued upon that ground that we ought to recognize Cuban belligerency. When Spain recognized the Confederacy it held within its own exclusive power all the jurisdiction which it ever aimed to hold. It had driven from its borders the only hostile force. The courts were in session. Municipal government existed. States existed, all recognizing the supreme power of the government which was organized, and there was a unanimity among the people supporting it greater than there was among its opponents. There were also armies formed, recognizing the jurisdiction, not merely prepared for guerrilla skirmishes or for devastation, but armies which, if war came, were sure to make a terrible and prodigious conflict. And there was no cause for them to make an attack. Unless the armies of the United States advanced to attack them, they not only would be recognized as belligerents but as independent. So that at that time they controlled all their territory. Their political organization was in full power, and they had an army ready to resist attack. It seems to me, when compared to that, it is preposterous to say that the present condition equally demands recognition. And yet we then complained that it was an improper, unfriendly act for Spain to recognize belligerency; and it seems to me if that did not justify recognition, then we can not possibly claim to-day that recognition of the Cuban insurgents is justifiable.

But my main objection, as I said before, is that this is an intrusion upon an executive function which we ought not to undertake unless we are absolutely sure that the evidence warrants it. We are not sure. The evidence is doubtful, unreliable, and conflicting, and upon that ground we ought not to interfere with the executive function.

Then there follows another objection to these resolutions. A recognition of belligerency does not depend simply upon the condition of the belligerents. Even if the facts justify it, there must still be decided the question of expediency. First, the facts must authorize it, and second, it must be expedient.

Is it expedient to grant it? That is not for us to say. A department of the Government has been constituted to decide that question, and if this House intrudes there, again we are usurping an executive prerogative. Now, why is recognition expedient? Does it do Cuba any good? Is it helpful to Cuba? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] yesterday brought forward as the main advantage to Cuba the fact that it would give her power and freedom upon the sea. I do not know that there are any sailors in Cuba. The insurgents have no ports. They have no ships. Of what advantage will it be to recognize her belligerency and allow her to have her flag and her impossible vessels upon the sea?

But there is another advantage to Cuba which I fear may follow. It will be likely to embroil us in war with Spain, and I believe that is the main reason why the Cubans desire the passage of these resolutions. Their best hope of independence is a war between the United States and Spain, and the passage of these resolutions is one step toward it. I do not believe we have any moral right to enter upon war with Spain for this purpose. However we might think that we do it from love of humanity, certainly the other nations of the world would say we did it for greed of Cuban territory, and it seems to me it is wise for the United States, if it is going to wage war as a champion of humanity, to do it in a cause where we can not be accused of using humanity as a mere cloak for ambition. It is wise for us not to attempt to rescue Cuba in the name of philanthropy and leave it open for other nations to say we are aggrandizing our own territory.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Is there any attempt in these resolutions to rescue Cuba?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. There is no attempt in these resolutions, Mr. Chairman, but the argument that supports these resolutions, the reason that the Cubans desire them—and the only reason they would do Cuba any good—is because it may lead to that.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Do not the resolutions declare neutrality on our part.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. They do.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Has the gentleman any objection to ambition when ambition is founded on humanity?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No, Mr. Speaker; only I think if the basis of our action is ambition we ought to make it known. I do not especially object to ambition for aggrandizement. England has been attacked very much for her ambition; but I think if the United States is going to be actuated by ambition she ought to say so, and not say she is actuated by philanthropy. I think hypocrisy is a vastly worse vice than ambition or greed of territory.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the second resolution, which suggests that our friendly offices should be tendered to Spain, expresses my feelings, and I should be glad to have the United States use any friendly offices and do anything it could in the way of kindness and peaceful intervention in order to effect the independence of Cuba. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] yesterday assured us that this resolution could not give just offense to Spain. I do not see why it could. This same step, as he said, has been taken before. In the seventies the United States Government tried to intervene. She had negotiated a partial arrangement by which we should guarantee the obligations of Cuba and Cuba should be declared free. I should rejoice if such an arrangement could be made to-day. Gladly we might pay $100,000,000 to secure this.

But, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this very resolution shows the folly of our present conduct. Does any man think that we can to-day usefully intervene? Does any man think, with the state of public opinion in Spain, any friendly intervention of the United States would be possible? Of course it would not. And why? Because the Congress of the United States has stepped beyond its proper province and has used words which have offended the sensitiveness of Spain, so that no friendly intervention from this country will be allowed, and it seems to me that that very fact illustrates the folly of the House of Representatives engaging, outside of its province, in matters of diplomacy. It seems to me that it is very possible that when intervention was before attempted it may have been acts in the United States that prevented its fulfillment. Suppose our President, our Secretary of State, had attempted within the last year to offer his friendly offices; suppose negotiations have been going on, would not the conduct and the words that have been spoken in another branch of the Congress of these United States have entirely stopped any such negotiations? So, it seems to me, this last resolution, whose spirit I heartily approve, has been rendered impotent by the acts and words of Congress.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. In that connection—and I am in entire sympathy with the argument of the gentleman—on page 2343 of the RECORD, dated March 2, when we had these Senate resolutions under consideration, the distinguished chairman of the committee, for whom we all entertain the highest respect, expressed himself in reference to this second resolution which we are now asked to vote for, and said that it would be an insult to Spain.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, if the chairman of the committee said that at that time, certainly he said yesterday quite the contrary. I know that Philip was sober in both cases [laughter], but I do not know which to accept, so I will accept the one which is most in accord with my own judgment, and that is the statement made yesterday.

Mr. HITT (to Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts). If you say that I have made two contradictory statements, tell us what they are.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not say so. The suggestion was made by the gentleman who interrupted me [Mr. BLACK of Georgia].

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. I called attention to the fact that on the 2d of March, when we had these resolutions under consideration the first time, the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, said this:

> The resolutions of the Senate, for which those of the House committee now offered are a substitute, are two in number; the first substantially the same as that reported by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the second proposing that our Government should offer its friendly offices to Spain for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Now, on that second resolution he said:

> Every gentleman, on hearing that suggestion made or that proposition presented to him, must think in a moment what would be the response if a proposition were made to our Government, for example, by the British minister, presenting resolutions adopted by the British Parliament asking and desiring us to consent at once to the independence of Texas, of Florida, or of Michigan. How long would he remain in Washington after presenting such a proposition as that—after the self-respect of our Government had been thus insulted?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Illinois desires to say anything in reply to the gentleman from Georgia now, I will of course yield for the purpose, but if he had just as soon wait until I finish——

Mr. HITT. As the gentleman from Massachusetts himself has expressed an opinion about my having made contradictory statements, if he had done me the honor to listen to what I said on yesterday——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts (interposing). Mr. Speaker, the gentleman must have misunderstood me. I simply said that the gentleman who now stands before me [Mr. BLACK of Georgia] had suggested that there was a contradiction between the two statements of the gentleman from Illinois, and I also said that my own judgment was in accord with the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois on yesterday, which I did him the honor and myself the pleasure to listen to with great attention.

Mr. HITT. Then, if the gentleman did me the honor to listen to what I said, he knows that there is not the slightest contradiction between what I said yesterday and what I said on a former occasion. I explained yesterday that an offer of that kind made by England to our Government in time of peace would be regarded as unfriendly and offensive, and meant to be so, but that such an offer to Spain by our Government as was done by two of our Presidents to Spain when war is actually in progress would be a friendly act, and had been so received twice by Spain.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the gentleman from Illinois had made contradictory statements; I simply called the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to what the gentleman from Illinois had said about this second resolution which we are now asked to vote for.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman; and I repeat again, Mr. Speaker, that I entirely agree with and accept the opinion which the gentleman has expressed——

Mr. HITT. Which gentleman? Two gentlemen have had a confidential conversation over there, none of which could be heard here. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I accept implicitly, as I have already said, the statement which the gentleman from Illinois made yesterday and which I listened to with great pleasure and profit, and it is because I do agree with him, because I do not believe that this resolution conveys an insult to Spain, because I believe it is a friendly suggestion on our part—it is for that reason that I approve it and would gladly vote for it. But, as I said before, I also think it is useless, and our friendly intervention with Spain would now be ineffectual, because in another branch of this Congress words have been spoken which have aroused the sensitiveness of Spain to such a point that no friendly intervention by the United States will be accepted. It seems to me that this case illustrates very well the wisdom of that provision of our Constitution which places the power of dealing with these matters in another branch of the Government and not in Congress, where public excitement, the desire for applause, the desire to be on the popular side, may lead to speeches which are not discreet and which may excite foreign complications in connection with matters that ought to be dealt with in a secret, restrained, reserved manner, in order that finally some friendly intervention may be made effectual. In short, I think the obvious fact that this last resolution would now be ineffectual is a conclusive proof of the folly of introducing and discussing these resolutions here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think this House has any occasion to go into such a discussion. It may be different elsewhere. It is an old trick of European sovereigns when the people are restive under their restraints to try to divert their attention from misgovernment at home by directing it to foreign war and conquest. I can imagine something of that sort in this country. It is not, I believe, parliamentary to mention the other branch of Congress, but I can conceive that if there is anywhere on this hemisphere a legislative body which has forfeited public confidence, which is distrusted and discredited, which, when legislation for the good of its constituents has been presented to it, has steadfastly put it to one side, which sees the country in bankruptcy and suffering, trade dull, commerce paralyzed, industry dead, everybody appealing to it for aid, and then which deliberately refuses that aid, I can, I say, conceive that if there were anywhere such a body as that, it might well try to divert public attention from its own misconduct by stirring up an excitement about foreign affairs, a sentiment for war, a fever of martial ambition and military glory, even if thereby they still further disturbed business and shattered public confidence, and might hope, by exciting some such gale of factitious enthusiasm, to turn from itself the reprobation it deserved and fan itself back into popularity and power.

I do not believe this House needs to engage in any such discussion. I believe that its members have vigorously, energetically, wisely tried to improve the deplorable condition of the country and better the welfare of their constituents. If their efforts have not succeeded, the people know where the responsibility rests; and I believe it is not only for the present good of this House, but for our permanent popularity at home and the good of our constituents, to continue devoting ourselves to the legitimate province of Congress and the best interests of this country, letting it be understood that this end of the Capitol is here for business and not for "buncombe." I believe such a course will ultimately tend to the strength of the House as well as to the good of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I shall undoubtedly be misrepresented outside for the ground I have taken here. I shall be accused at home of being a friend of Spain and an enemy of liberty. But I hope in this House I shall not. I hope it will be explicitly understood that, as I have stated, I am in entire sympathy with the independence of Cuba. I hope there may be established a stable, permanent, and successful republic. I wish it because of my sympathy with Cuba and also because of a sentiment of self-interest on the part of the United States. So wishing, I would gladly vote for any resolutions of sympathy. But I will not vote for this resolution recognizing belligerency, which calls upon us to decide on doubtful evidence a question of fact and of law on an important international issue which is beyond our province, binds nobody but ourselves, and accomplishes nothing except to establish a precedent which may come back to plague us. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman can not reserve the remainder of his time, if the arrangement which I am about to suggest should be made.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not desire to reserve the time for myself.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman can not reserve it for anybody else. If an arrangement for taking the vote should now be made, as I trust it may be, I should be glad if the House would assent to the proposition to have the vote to-day—at 4 o'clock or 5 o'clock. [Cries of "Now!" "Now!"]

Mr. TUCKER. There are gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to be heard on this question, and I think there would be desired on this side about an hour and thirty minutes—perhaps an hour and forty-five minutes.

Mr. QUIGG. Then we could not vote to-night.

Mr. HITT. I suggest, then, Mr. Speaker, as there is a desire on the part of many members to address the House, that it be agreed by unanimous consent that the remainder of this day's session, prolonged to whatever hour the House may see fit, be devoted to the discussion of this conference report, and that the vote be taken on Monday morning, without further debate, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I suggest to the chairman of our committee [Mr. HITT], and also to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], that we have a vote this afternoon. Let the question be discussed from now until half past 4 o'clock or 5 o'clock, and then let the vote be taken. [Applause.]

Several MEMBERS. Let us vote now.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Next Monday is suspension day, and other matters of importance will come up then. I think we might have a vote this afternoon at 5 o'clock. [Cries of "All right."]

Mr. HITT. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the vote be taken at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the pending question at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then I suggest 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois modify his request by substituting 4 o'clock?

Mr. HITT. As objection has been made, my request is now at an end.

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] will not be adopted. There are gentlemen here who want to be heard on this question and who have a right to be heard.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I withdraw the suggestion for a vote at 4 o'clock.

Mr. TUCKER. I am perfectly willing that we should have a vote this evening; but these gentlemen have the right to be heard.

Mr. HITT. There has been objection raised by so many gentlemen to any proposition to close debate this afternoon that it would seem impossible to secure consent for any proposition of that kind. I therefore make the motion—I do not ask unanimous consent—that the time for debate on this conference report be limited to this day and that the vote be taken on Monday after the reading of the Journal without further debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not in order, I will suggest to the gentleman, to make the motion. I think we can agree by unanimous consent on a time.

Mr. HITT. Objection is made to the request. I make the motion, Mr. Speaker, if in order; and on that demand the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I will make no objection to the motion; although it seems to me that the gentleman can get unanimous consent if he asks again. I know of no way of closing debate except by moving the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest that the gentleman make the request again.

Mr. HITT. Then I will make the request again, Mr. Speaker; the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the debate close to-day, and that the vote be taken on Monday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, without further discussion. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I will object to that if the gentleman will not include also a night session to be held for debate.

Mr. QUIGG. Why do you want a night session?

Mr. MAHON. There are men here, let me say to the gentleman, who wish to be heard. Why not have a session to-night and give them a chance? This is a very important question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MAHON. I object unless we can agree to have a night session.

Mr. HITT. Then I will put it as a part of my request that the House at 5 o'clock take a recess until 8 o'clock, to continue in session, say until 10 o'clock, for debate only on this question, and that the vote be taken on Monday immediately after the reading of the Journal without further debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the gentleman's request to the House. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House, at 5 o'clock, take a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to close at 10 o'clock, for debate only on the conference report, and that a vote be taken on Monday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, without further debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HITT. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will recognize some one on either side to control the time we can make some arrangement or adjustment of it.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If it requires a motion, I would move that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] have the control of the affirmative and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] the negative.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize the gentlemen named to control the time.

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate from its inception to this time, and have felt no disposition at all to enter into any discussion of the question as presented by the resolution before the House. But as there has been no one from my part of the country who has seen fit to express any views on the subject at all, at the solicitation of some of my friends I agreed to make a few remarks.

I have no disposition to go into an extended or elaborate argument on the question; but I do desire to answer some arguments that have been presented by gentlemen on the other side of the question. Now, it has been said by my friend from Pennsylvania, who sits before me [Mr. ADAMS], that those who oppose these resolutions declare that there is no one supporting the resolution except the people of the country. That may be so to some extent, but I have long since learned that the country people as a rule are generally on the right side of all questions. I have also learned, and have learned since the discussion of these resolutions commenced, within the last two or three weeks, that there is a certain class of men who live on the continent of America (and who ought to have more patriotism) who have been covering every member's desk for the last two or three weeks with cries that the commercial interests of the country will be ruined, that the money interests were all involved in this question, and "for God's sake stop this hue and cry about Cuba." I received some of these circulars this morning, and after reading them came to the conclusion that there was a great number—no; I will not say a great number; I will take that back—but that there is a small number of people who claim to be American citizens, and if their combined patriotism was all condensed into a small space it would not exceed the size of a copper cent. [Laughter and applause.]

They have forgotten the duties and obligations, it seems to me, that they owe to a struggling people—Cuba; and when I read the history of the struggles of this nation in its infancy, when that gallant General Washington was being driven from post to pillar by overwhelming forces, how any man on this floor can say that the Cubans are not entitled to belligerent rights because they failed to face the Spanish army and fight some great battle—that they are always on the retreat—I can not understand why they should be condemned for this method of warfare, for this has always been the policy of a wise general in command of an army, to adapt himself to the conditions surrounding him and make, if necessary, a skillful and successful retreat in the face of an overwhelming enemy; and the general who can do that is a greater general than he who fights and has his men slaughtered that he may hold the battlefield.

It is the policy of a wise general to husband his resources, to husband the lives of his soldiers, to husband the lives of his men, through which alone he can expect to succeed against overwhelming numbers. And I say to-day that Maceo and Gomez have exhibited a degree of generalship that has never been excelled in the history of this or any other nation. On an island not larger than my district, not containing as much territory as there is in my Congressional district, Spain has landed 125,000 troops to put down what it says is a mere faction in that island, who are mere bandits. In addition to that, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] yesterday said that large numbers of Cubans had entered the field on the side of Spain. He said about 40,000 had done so. These, with 125,000 sent by Spain to Cuba, make 165,000. So 165,000 men who have been upon the trail of these patriots for more than a year have never been enabled to hold any of the territory of Cuba out of the reach of the cannon of the Spanish gunboats.

These Cubans are struggling for liberty, and it will be a blot upon the American name if we do not raise our voices in defense of these people; and not only that, but take whatever steps are necessary to uphold the hands of these struggling patriots while they wrestle against an overwhelming force.

Now, if these people are not entitled to belligerent rights, what was our condition during our struggle for independence? We never had in the American Army more than 38,000 soldiers at any one time. The British never exceeded over 68,000, and for seven long years we struggled with might and main. Never have a people struggled harder than we did. Our rights were recognized. While we were driven from our capital, while we held none of the coast, while we had no navy, yet the nations of the earth said to us, "You are entitled to belligerent rights." And yet Americans in this day and time tell us that these struggling Cubans are not entitled to belligerent rights. If I had my way I should go further than this resolution goes; but as the committee in its wisdom has seen fit to accept these resolutions as they come from the Senate, I am willing to accept them, not as an antidote for all the crimes that have been perpetrated, but I say to-day that we owe it to these struggling patriots upon our border to acknowledge their independence. That is what they deserve. [Applause.] They have won the right to that recognition, and are entitled to it. If I had my way I should take this old wolf Spain, which has had all of its colonies by the throat for the last hundred years, and has sucked the life blood out of them until they could stand it no longer and have revolted, and as my friend to-day said, Spain has lost the last colony which she has upon our border—I tell you it is an act that we owe to these people to take this old wolf by the throat and tell her that she must take her Weyler and her murderers off the Island of Cuba and give its people their independence. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOODMAN].

Mr. WOODMAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems time that the matter of recognition of the Cubans was disposed of. It has been dragging along week after week, while some of the honorable gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol have been talking eloquently against it and against time.

Now, I submit that it is time to act, The butchery and outrage of the Spanish commander in that island is daily going on, and the brutality of it is recorded in the morning papers every day. Only a day or two ago was the record published of five men, captured as prisoners of war, who were garroted as murderers, violators, and incendiaries.

Mr. Speaker, this nation should enter a protest against such inhumanity and such arrant cowardice as is involved in the butchery of prisoners of war. The granting of belligerent rights to Cuba will do more than to enable the government of that island to purchase arms, ammunition, and supplies in the United States; it will place upon Spain the necessity of conducting its warfare according to the recognized rules of war. It is considered in international law that any nation has a right to interfere in any conflict if such interference be on the grounds of ordinary humanity. And the rules of war do not encourage, under any circumstances, the massacre of defenseless prisoners who may have been captured. There is one pertinent fact in this connection. All the prisoners taken by the Spanish army are executed, while the Spanish troops, when taken by the patriots of Cuba, either join the Cuban army or are confined till Cuba shall be free.

Much has been said of the incendiarism of the patriots. That is simple. The orders of the Republic of Cuba were that no cane should be ground, as the product of the cane fields produce a large revenue for Spain. It is probable that the fields of such planters as disobeyed the order may have been burned, just as any army would destroy supplies to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy. On the other hand, Spain insists on treating Cuban patriots, the men who possess and maintain control of almost the whole island, except a few seaports, as murderers and incendiaries, and executes them forthwith. It is a violation of humanity; it is a violation of the rules of warfare; it is a violation of all the principles that men hold most dear. Consequently, I say that it is true that Congress should put its seal of condemnation on the practices of Spain in Cuba, and give to those who are struggling for freedom the rights which nature and nature's God demand. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. ELLETT of Virginia].

Mr. ELLETT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the House is now considering a question of great moment and importance, and the result of its deliberations will affect most gravely not only our own country, but Spain and her struggling dependency—Cuba, "the Gem of the Antilles." As an individual, as a simple American citizen, I, from the bottom of my heart, would rejoice to see Cuba free. My warmest sympathies go out to every people struggling for the blessings of liberty, to every man who, following the example of our patriots of the Revolution, is seeking those blessings which we have enjoyed for over one hundred years.

Addressing this body, however, and in this presence, I have what I consider a higher duty to perform. We are not here to express our individual sympathies, preferences, or prejudices, as seems to have been the case with many. We are here as the direct representatives of 173,000 people of our respective districts, but over and above that we are here as the representatives of this great Union, and in that capacity our responsibility becomes those of judges in this matter.

Therefore we should approach and discuss this question with deliberation and not with passion and prejudice. We should not endeavor to inflame the passions of this House by such terms as "the wolf of Spain," "the tyrant Weyler," and by introducing pictures from illustrated papers with long citations from prejudiced journals, but should approach the subject with that calm deliberation worthy of the dignity of this great Republic. We should consider the international laws relating to belligerency and be guided thereby, and this country should act as becomes one of the friendly family of nations.

Mr. Speaker, belligerency is a pure question of fact. The definition of the word belligerent is "actually at war." And the question of recognition of belligerent rights is not one inherent in the country which is seeking recognition, but it is one entirely at the will and pleasure of the country granting that recognition, and they must take the responsibility therefor. I should certainly be inclined to defer to the great will of the majority as so numerously expressed here, were I not well fortified by the past history and precedents of my own country and sustained by no less a soldier than General Grant, who, when President of the United States, and acting under identically the same circumstances, laid down this as the rule that should govern the Congress of the United States at that time.

Before I read it, however, permit me to state that, while I was not here, I have been authoritatively informed, that the same passions and prejudices were rushing through both branches of Congress at that time as seem now to prevail. This message not only allayed that feeling, but caused the question to pass from discussion by both bodies of the Congress and by the people of the whole country.

The question of belligerency is one of fact, not to be decided by sympathies for or prejudices against either party. The relations between the parent State and the insurgents must amount in fact, to war in the sense of international law. Fighting, though fierce and protracted, does not alone constitute war; there must be military forces acting in accordance with the rules and customs of war, flags of truce, cartels, exchange of prisoners, etc., and to justify a recognition of belligerency there must be above all a de facto political organization of the insurgents sufficient in character and resources to constitute it, if left to itself, a State among nations capable of discharging the duties of a State and of meeting the just responsibilities it may incur as such toward other powers in the discharge of its national duties.

Applying the best information which I have been enabled to gather, whether from official or unofficial sources, including the very exaggerated statements which each party gives to all that may prejudice the opposite or give credit to its own side of the question, I am unable to see, in the present condition of the contest in Cuba, those elements which are requisite to constitute war in the sense of international law.

The insurgents hold no town or city; have no established seat of government; they have no prize courts; no organization for the receiving and collecting of revenue; no seaport to which a prize may be carried or through which access can be had by a foreign power to the limited interior territory and mountain fastnesses which they occupy. The existence of the legislature representing any popular constituency is more than doubtful.

In the uncertainty that hangs around the entire insurrection there is no palpable evidence of an election, of any delegated authority, or of any government outside the limits of the camps occupied from day to day by the roving companies of insurgent troops. There is no commerce, no trade, either internal or foreign; no manufactures.

Mr. Speaker, that was written by the President of the United States, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant in 1870, and I, without fear of contradiction, claim that it applies to the present situation, and that the present situation is identical, so far as the facts are concerned, with that which existed at the time when this message was written.

Why, it is claimed that they have a small capital in the mountains of Cuba protected by about 1,500 men in an impregnable fastness. This capital is situated on an elevated plateau containing about 15 square miles, the valley being surrounded by mountains. Is that a ground for the recognition of a government? Why, in Tazewell County, Va., we have Burke's Garden, containing 30 square miles of beautiful blue-grass country, with only one outlet in the mountain defiles, which could be protected by 1,500 men. If the Southern Confederacy had permanently held that one place only, with small bodies of troops scouring the rest of the country, recklessly and wantonly destroying the property of their own people, do you suppose that Spain, France, or England would have accorded to her belligerent rights? Why, of course not!

Another thing. Where is the insurgent seaport, where is organized war? Where is the great battle that has been fought, such as Bull Run or Gettysburg? None. All the news that comes to us comes under a cloud and shadow; and then again, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] said yesterday that he would favor independence of these people provided they were unanimous in this rebellion; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] and all others whom I have heard speak in favor of the resolutions, concede that there are 53,000 insurgents on the one side and 43,000 Cubans enlisted on the other or Spanish side.

Again, Mr. Speaker, here is what Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, addressed to Mr. Motley, then at the Court of St. James:

The President does not deny, on the contrary he maintains, that every sovereign power decides for itself, on its responsibility, the question whether or not it will, at a given time, accord the status of belligerency to the insurgent subjects of another power, as also the larger question of the independence of such subjects and their accession to the family of sovereign states.

But the rightfulness of such an act depends on the occasion and the circumstances, and it is an act, like the sovereign act of war, which the morality of the public law and practice requires should be deliberate, seasonable, and just, in reference to surrounding facts.

Deliberate! How can men saturated with the war spirit which seems to pervade this House be deliberate?

National belligerency, indeed, like national independence, being but an existing fact, officially recognized as such, without which such a declaration is only the indirect manifestation of a particular line of policy.

* * * * * * *

But circumstances might arise to call for it. A ship of the insurgents might appear in the port of the neutral, or a collision might occur at sea, imposing on the neutral the necessity to act. Or actual hostility might have continued to rage in the theater of insurgent war; combat after combat might have been fought for such a period of time; a mass of men may have engaged in actual war until they should have acquired the consistency of military power, to repeat the idea of Mr. Canning, so as evidently to constitute the fact of belligerency, and to justify the recognition by the neutral. Or the nearness of the seat of hostilities to the neutral may compel the latter to act; it might be his sovereign duty to act, however inconvenient such action should be to the legitimate Government.

Mr. Fish says:

The question of according or withholding rights of belligerency must be judged, in every case, in view of the particular attending facts. * * * This conflict must be one which will be recognized in the sense of international law as war. Belligerency, too, is a fact. The mere existence of contending armed bodies and their occasional conflicts do not constitute war in the sense referred to.

Now let us see what President Woolsey, one of the highest modern authorities on international law, has to say on this subject:

There may be a difficulty in ascertaining when the fact of war begins, and this difficulty is the greater in cases of insurrection or revolt, where many of the antecedents and premonitory tokens of war are wanting, where an insurrection may be of little account and easily suppressed, and where war bursts out full-blown, it may be, at once. Our Government has more than once professed to govern its action by the following criteria expressed in Mr. Monroe's words relating to the Spanish South American revolts: "As soon as the movement assumes such a steady and consistent form as to make the success of the provinces probable, the rights to which they were entitled by the law of nations, as equal parties to a civil war, have been extended to them." But this rule breaks down in several places. The probability is a creature of the mind, something merely subjective, and ought not to enter into a definition of what a nation ought to do. Again, the success does not depend on steadiness and consistency of form only, but on relative strength of the parties. If you make probability of success the criterion of right in the case, you have to weigh other circumstances before being able to judge which is most probable, success or defeat. Would you, if you conceded, belligerent rights, withdraw the concession whenever success ceased to be probable? And, still further, such provinces in revolt are not entitled by the law of nations to rights as equal parties to a civil war. They have properly no rights, and the concession of belligerency is not made on their account, but on account of considerations of policy on the part of the state itself which declares them such, or on grounds of humanity.

And last but not least I will request the Clerk to read in full the note of Richard Dana to Wheaton's International Law, which is admitted to be the clearest and ablest presentation of this doctrine of belligerency, and I submit it fully sustains the position I have taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

The occasion for the accordance of belligerent rights arises when a civil conflict exists within a foreign state. The reason which requires and can alone justify this step by the Government of another country is that its own rights and interests are so far affected as to require a definition of its own relations to the parties. Where a parent Government is seeking to subdue an insurrection by municipal force, and the insurgents claim a political nationality and belligerent rights which the parent Government does not concede, a recognition by a foreign state of full belligerent rights, if not justified by necessity, is a gratuitous demonstration of moral support to the rebellion and of censure upon the parent Government. But the situation of a foreign state with reference to the contests, and the condition of affairs between the contending parties, may be such as to justify this act. It is important, therefore, to determine what state of affairs, and what relations of the foreign state, justify the recognition.

It is certain that the state of things between the parent state and insurgents must amount, in fact, to a war, in the sense of international law—that is, powers and rights of war must be in actual exercise; otherwise the recognition is falsified, for the recognition is of a fact. The tests to determine the question are various and far more decisive where there is maritime war and commercial relations with foreigners. Among the tests are the existence of a de facto political organization of the insurgents sufficient in character, population, and resources to constitute it, if left to itself, a state among the nations, reasonably capable of discharging the duties of a state; the actual employment of military forces on each side, acting in accordance with the rules and customs of war, such as the use of flags of truce, cartels, exchange of prisoners, and the treatment of captured insurgents by the parent state as prisoners of war; and, at sea, employment by the insurgents of commissioned cruisers, and the exercise by the parent Government of the rights of blockade of insurgent ports against neutral commerce, and of stopping and searching neutral vessels at sea. If all these elements exist, the condition of things is undoubtedly war; and it may be war before they are all ripened into activity.

As to the relation of the foreign state to the contest, if it is solely on land and the foreign state is not contiguous, it is difficult to imagine a call for the recognition. If, for instance, the United States should formally recognize belligerent rights in an insurgent community at the center of Europe, with no seaports, it would require a hardly supposable necessity to make it else than a mere demonstration of moral support. But a case may arise where a foreign state must decide whether to hold the parent state responsible for acts done by the insurgents or to deal with the insurgents as a de facto government. (Mr. Canning to Lord Granville on the Greek war, June 22, 1826.) If the foreign state recognizes belligerency in the insurgents, it releases the parent state from responsibility for whatever may be done by the insurgents, or not done by the parent state where the insurgent power extends. (Mr. Adams to Mr. Seward, June 11, 1861, Dip. Corr., 105.) In a contest wholly upon land, a contiguous state may be obliged to make the decision whether or not to regard it as a war; but, in practice, this has not been done by a general and prospective declaration, but by actual treatment of cases as they arise. Where the insurgents and the parent state are maritime, and the foreign nation has extensive commercial relations and trade at the ports of both, and the foreign nation and either or both of the contending parties have considerable naval force, and the domestic contest must extend itself over the sea, then the relations of the foreign state to this contest are far different.

In such a state of things the liability to political complications and the questions of right and duty to be decided at once, usually away from home, by private citizens or naval officers, seem to require an authoritative and general decision as to the status of the three parties involved. If the contest is a war, all foreign citizens and officers, whether executive or judicial, are to follow one line of conduct; if it is not a war, they are to follow a totally different line. If it is a war the commissioned cruisers of both sides may stop, search, and capture the foreign merchant vessel, and that vessel must make no resistance and must submit to adjudication by a prize court; if it is not a war, the cruisers of neither party can stop or search the foreign merchant vessel; and that vessel may resist all attempts in that direction, and the ships of war of the foreign state may attack and capture any cruiser persisting in the attempt. If it is war, foreign nations must await the adjudication of prize tribunals; if it is not war, no such tribunal can be opened. If it is war, the parent state may institute a blockade jure gentium of the insurgent ports, which foreigners must respect; but if it is not a war, foreign nations having large commercial intercourse with the country will not respect a closing of insurgent ports by paper decrees only. If it is a war, the insurgent cruisers are to be treated by foreign citizens and officials, at sea and in port, as lawful belligerents; if it is not a war, those cruisers are pirates, and may be treated as such. If it is a war, the rules and risks respecting carrying contraband, or dispatches, or military persons come into play; if it is not war, they do not. Within foreign jurisdiction, if it is a war, acts of the insurgents in the way of preparation and equipments for hostility may be breaches of neutrality laws; while, if it is not war, they do not come into that category, but under the category of piracy or of crimes by municipal law.

Now, all citizens of a foreign state, and all its executive officers and judicial magistrates, look to the political department of their government to prescribe the rule of their conduct in all their possible relations with the parties to the contest. This rule is prescribed in the best and most intelligible manner for all possible contingencies by the simple declaration that the contest is or is not to be treated as war. If the state of things requires the decision, it must be made by the political department of the government. It is not fit that cases should be left to be decided as they may arise, by private citizens, or naval or judicial officers, at home or abroad, by sea or land. It is, therefore, the custom of nations for the political department of a foreign state to make the decision. It owes it to its own citizens, to the contending parties, and to the peace of the world, to make that decision seasonably. If it issues a formal declaration of belligerent rights prematurely, or in a contest with which it has no complexity, it is a gratuitous and unfriendly act. If the parent government complains of it, the complaint must be made upon one of these grounds. To decide whether the recognition was uncalled for and premature requires something more than a consideration of proximate facts and the overt and formal acts of the contending parties. The foreign state is bound and entitled to consider the preceding history of the parties, the magnitude and completeness of the political and military organizations and preparations on each side, the probable extent of the conflict by sea and land, the probable extent and rapidity of its development, and, above all, the probability that its own merchant vessels, naval officers, and consuls may be precipitated into sudden and difficult complications abroad. The best that can be said is that the foreign State may protect itself by a seasonable decision, either upon a test case that arises or by a general prospective decision; while, on the other hand, if it makes the recognition prematurely, it is liable to the suspicion of an unfriendly purpose to the parent state. The recognition of belligerent rights is not solely to the advantage of the insurgents. They gain the great advantage of a recognized status, and the opportunity to employ commissioned cruisers at sea, and to exert all the powers known to maritime warfare, with the sanction of foreign nations. They can obtain abroad loans, military and naval materials, and enlist men, as against everything but neutrality laws; their flag and commissions are acknowledged, their revenue laws are respected, and they acquire a quasi-political recognition. On the other hand, the parent government is relieved from responsibility for acts done in the insurgent territory; its blockade of its own ports is respected; and it acquires a right to exert, against neutral commerce, all the powers of a party to a maritime war.

Mr. ELLETT of Virginia. Third. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look into the character of this war. It is alleged that the Spaniards, and especially General Weyler, are guilty of butchery and cruelty. I am not here to accuse or defend them. We have such vague and exaggerated reports that it is almost impossible to form a satisfactory opinion except on one point, and that is that both insurgents and Spaniards are engaged much more in marauding, murdering, burning, and devastating than they are in carrying on war, and in the eyes of civilized nations this is not belligerency, but atrocious barbarism.

I again quote President Grant's message, describing the state of affairs in Cuba when it was written, and it can but be admitted that this accurately portrays the present situation:

During the six months which have passed since the date of that message the condition of the insurgents has not improved, and the insurrection itself, although not subdued, exhibits no signs of advance, but seems to be confined to an irregular system of hostilities carried on by small and illy-armed bands of men, roaming, without concentration, through the woods and the sparsely populated regions of the island, attacking from ambush convoys and small bands of troops, burning plantations and the estates of those not sympathizing with their cause.

But if the insurrection had not gained ground, it is equally true that Spain has not suppressed it. Climate, disease, and the occasional bullet have worked destruction among the soldiers of Spain; and although the Spanish authorities have possession of every seaport and every town on the island, they have not been able to subdue the hostile feeling which has driven a considerable number of the native inhabitants of the island to armed resistance against Spain and still leads them to endure the dangers and the privations of a roaming life of guerrilla warfare.

On either side a contest has been conducted and is still carried on with a lamentable disregard of human life and of the rules and practices which modern civilization has prescribed in mitigation of the necessary horrors of war. The torch of Spaniard and of Cuban is alike busy in carrying devastation over fertile regions; murderous and revengeful decrees are issued and executed by both parties. Count Valmaseda and Colonel Boet, on the part of Spain, have each startled humanity and aroused the indignation of the civilized world by the execution, each, of a score of prisoners at a time, while General Quesada, the Cuban chief, coolly and with apparent unconsciousness of aught else than a proper act, has admitted the slaughter, by his own deliberate order, in one day, of upward of 650 prisoners of war.

It is but human nature for either side in civil strife to charge the other with brutality, whether with or without just cause. The English to-day claim that we were guilty of brutality in the execution of André, and Americans make a like charge against Benedict Arnold and Tarleton.

But the facts must rule in these matters. Why this picture which has been so vividly drawn this morning by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] of five men who were garroted in Moro Castle, Habana? I, like the gentleman, had read the harrowing description of these executions in the New York World of Sunday. My blood boiled to think that patriots should be executed as felons. I do not believe in quoting mere newspaper statements, but as the gentleman from Pennsylvania makes his charge on the basis of the World's report, it is fair to answer him in kind. Who were these five men, the subjects of this bungling execution? Patriots? No! but felons of the deepest die. Here is what the Post of yesterday says of them:

The following is the story of the crime committed by the five negroes who were the victims of the bungling execution by the garrote on Monday. Their names were Sacarias Santa Cruz, Isidro Calderon, Juan Bautista Gutierrez, alias Lucumi, Ruffino Ordenez, and Marcelino Gonzalez.

The scene of the bloody crime was a lonely house on the road from San Jose to Tijiragua. On the evening of July 12 José Castillo, the owner of the house, had just left it, his wife, four daughters, and three friends remaining there, when the galloping of several horses approaching the house on the highway aroused the inmates as if by a presentiment of the wretched fate they were to meet. Soon afterwards five negroes dismounted before the house, brandishing their glittering machetes, and ordered everyone in it not to move. They then demanded of Castillo's wife that she should give them all the money there was in the house. She gave them two gold pieces, asserting that that was all they had.

But some of the wretches, in ransacking the house, found 36 more gold pieces, which brought the men up to a state of fury over the deception played upon them. One of them struck the poor woman with the keen edge of his machete, decapitating her with a blow.

The negroes, seeing the blood of their first victim, became transported with rage, and put to death all but one of the inmates, the exception being one of the visitors, who was left so badly wounded that he died soon after giving testimony of the affair.

Gentlemen, I do not know anything about the garrote. I am not here to defend it, but I hear that it is a very quick and sharp chisel that cuts the spinal cord, and death is caused more quickly than by hanging. I say if these men were guilty of these crimes they most richly deserved the punishment inflicted upon them in Morro Castle.

But that is going a little away from the subject. This war, in its character, is one of pillage, devastation, fire, and ruin upon the part of the insurgents.

Here is what the recognized Cuban organ in this country boastfully says of the methods and actions of the insurgents:

Maceo's Great Raid—The Insurgent General has Devastated the Whole of Pinar del Rio.

That is the name of a province. The next heading is:

Thirteen Towns Burned—All the Tobacco Crops Destroyed and People Wandering About Without Clothing.

What is the next heading?

Spain Beaten Everywhere.

That is the method, Mr. Speaker, that the insurgents are taking to beat Spain everywhere—"thirteen towns burned; all the tobacco crop destroyed"—"people wandering about without clothing." Here is the report in full, with further heading:

The true story of the result of the raid made by Antonio Maceo into Pinar del Rio is beginning to crop out. So effectual was the work of the insurgent general that 13 towns held by the Spaniards have been destroyed and the rich tobacco lands throughout the province have been laid waste. Practically all of the island west of Habana is a wilderness. This news has heretofore been suppressed by the Spanish censors, and it is believed that matters are much worse than the news depicts.

HABANA, March 5.

The reopening of telegraphic communication with the region of Pinar del Rio brings the first detailed information of affairs in that province for several weeks.

This is where the insurgents had been with their bands in possession of this territory for several weeks, and were at last driven out, when the Spanish troops occupied the territory, and then, as this Cuban organ says, for the first time light was let in on the situation. Now, let us see how these patriots in their struggle for freedom dealt with this province:

The condition of affairs disclosed is little less than appalling. The rich Vuelto Abajo tobacco district seems to have been put to the torch and is apparently reduced to a wilderness.

Whole towns have been obliterated or reduced to a heap of ashes, and their inhabitants are wandering helpless over the face of the country, without a place to lay their heads or wherewithal to be clothed, and many of them starving.

TOWNS DESTROYED.

The villages and towns of Cabanas, Bahia Honda, San Diego de Nunez, Santa Cruz de los Pinos, Los Palacios, Piso Real de San Diego, and San Diego de los Banos are known to be reduced to ashes, and reports of others will bring the number destroyed up to thirteen. All of these were important and thriving centers of population and business.

The last town which has succumbed to the insurgents' torch is San Juan y Martinez. The tobacco from this town is famous the world over to all connoisseurs for its matchless flavor. Its cultivation brought great wealth to the people of the district and gave material for a large commerce in the town and support to over 1,000 families.

San Juan de Martinez is, however, no more.

WAITING FOR HELP.

When the first column of Spanish troops arrived on the site of the town they found only débris and smoking ashes, and all around a seemingly limitless sea of fire. A hundred desolate families had taken refuge in poor huts outside of what was once the town and were waiting helplessly for any assistance that would save them from starvation. They were without clothes and without food and saw no prospect ahead in their despair of securing either.

San Juan y Martinez is erased from the map. The adjoining town of San Luis had a narrow escape from the same fate, but escaped almost by a miracle. The inhabitants had already fled outside, seeking a refuge from the flames which the torch was ready to apply, when General Cornell, at the head of a detachment of troops, made his appearance on the scene, and the insurgents evacuated the town.

Such is the result of Maceo's raid.

A committee representing the Chamber of Commerce and the Spanish Casino called upon Captain-General Weyler to-day and assured him of their patriotic adhesion to him in his policy.

WEYLER'S PROCLAMATION.

In consequence of the distribution of a circular containing General Weyler's proclamation requiring the concentration of all country people within the limits of the towns for protection, there have been many delegations of farmers coming to Santiago de Cuba to inquire of the military authorities how far the requirement applies to them and for an intrepation of its provisions. The consuls of foreign governments are seeking the same information.

Generals Bernal and Vicuna have arrived here for a conference with Captain-General Weyler.

Mr. Speaker, after the above description, can it be claimed that that is civilized war? Freedom is not secured nor the blessings of liberty acquired by such methods. Neither fight their battles that way. Should such people drive out the Spaniards I doubt their capacity for self-government.

Do you call the burning of dwellings, the destruction of plantations, and the devastation of the whole country war? Is that public war? Do you call the taking of 650 prisoners and slaughtering them in cold blood war? General Quesada did that in the prior rebellion, and his example has been followed on a smaller scale in this one. We learn from information as authentic and accurate as any that has been produced on the other side that the insurgents, as well as the Spaniards, are carrying on this fight not in accord with civilized warfare. I had intended to make further quotations setting forth the horrors of this war; but, gentlemen, it is not to my taste, and I hope that your ears do not desire to hear them. I will spare your feelings and not harrow them by such blood-curdling recitals.

Now, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say this: I represent, in part, upon this floor a grand old State whose history is familiar to you all. Some may be surprised that I speak here as a man of peace, but I believe that the sentiment of that State is behind me in opposing this measure. The people of this land have weighed in the balance the Fifty-third Congress and found them wanting. The people of this land will soon weigh in the same balance the Fifty-fourth Congress, and, if we are not careful, we too shall be found wanting. We have done nothing for the public interest, and while all through this land the pockets of the people are empty——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to my colleague.

Mr. ELLETT of Virginia. All through this land the business interests, the farming interests, the laboring interests, all interests, are clamoring for the Congress of the United States to give them a remedy for the financial distress which prevails, but instead of that we fritter away our time by trying in the most offensive manner to intermeddle in the affairs of other nations and in making attacks on one of America's purest and most conscientious statesmen; and for what? Because of two speeches that he made in England. I may not approve in full those utterances, but I say to you that you might as well censure General Sherman because, in a moment of excitement, he happened to strike one of his troops on the back with his sword, as attempt to censure a man who has given a lifetime of pure, efficient, and able service to his country. Thomas F. Bayard, I am proud to say, is not injured thereby, but other countries are amazed at the lengths to which we will permit the petty politics preceding a Presidential election to carry us, and Congress loses in dignity and the esteem of the people.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELLETT of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Do you approve of the language which Ambassador Bayard used?

Mr. ELLETT of Virginia. I will be perfectly candid, sir; I think it was slightly indiscreet, but I say it was beneath the dignity of the Congress of the United States to take notice of so small a matter.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. That was not my question. My question was whether you approved of the language that Ambassador Bayard used.

Mr. ELLETT of Virginia. I have replied to that, sir. Turn your attention, gentlemen, to our own internal affairs and let the business of other people alone for a while. Do not keep the markets of your country jumping up and down, the business of your country stagnant, while you waste the people's time and money in this Congress. As I remarked a while ago, I represent in part the State of Virginia, and I believe my people are against the expensive amusement of frittering away the time and attention of Congress upon measures in which they have no direct or immediate interest and which tend to war. If the honor of this country should be in any way involved, the people of Virginia would be among the most ready to respond; but their history has been this. They have, as a State, always taken the position that Laertes was advised to take by Polonius:

> Beware of entrance to a quarrel, but being in,
> Bear it that the opposed may beware of thee.

At the time of the Revolution Virginia was not the first to sound the tocsin of war; but when America was struck she marched to the North to assist her Northern brethren. Subsequent to that her voice, through John Randolph and others, was always raised in the councils of this nation on the conservative side, against war, unless it became a dire necessity. Coming down to the war of the rebellion, as you term it on the Republican side of this Chamber, but to the war between the States, as it should be properly styled, Virginia had the honor to originate the Peace Commission, the purpose of which was to prevent, if possible, war between the States. Virginians are ready to-day, as they have been always, to take up arms to preserve and defend the honor of their country. In my district there are 25,000 ex-Confederates, men who know what war is. In defense of their country they are willing to contribute millions of men and money, but they will never, without a protest, give one man or one stiver for the purpose of intermeddling with the affairs of other peoples. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, the Senate resolutions are substantially the same as those which were passed recently by the House, though they are not, perhaps, couched in language so diplomatic and courteous. Two objections are urged against these resolutions. One is that there is not a state of public war in Cuba. The able and convincing speech of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT] has fully established that there is a state of public war in Cuba. One hundred and twenty-five thousand soldiers have been employed for a long period of time in attempting to suppress the rebellion, and, notwithstanding the great strength employed in that effort, three-fourths of the island is now in the hands of the insurgents.

It is true that the insurgents have not been able to meet the army of the oppressor with the force and vigor with which equal armies meet. They have been obliged to resort to the tactics always employed by insurgents against a strong and despotic power. They have been obliged to resort to guerrilla warfare—the war of attack and retreat and reattack, as the chairman of the committee so aptly stated yesterday. They have been guerrillas, not banditti. The latter attack only for plunder, but the Cuban insurgents have had a high and noble purpose—the liberation of their country, and though their destruction of property has been great, it has its justification in the fact that only by destroying the sugar crops and thus impairing the revenue of the Spanish Government can its efficiency in suppressing the rebellion be impaired. But the war so conducted has been effective. An organized government has been created which now wields its power in three-fourths of that island; and the captain-general of the Spanish forces has declared that he will require at least two years more to suppress the rebellion. I take it, then, that there is existing in Cuba a condition of affairs which justifies us in asserting that there is a state of public war and that the insurgents are entitled to belligerent rights.

The next objection urged is that Spain is a friendly nation and friendship requires that we should not intervene in a difficulty between a friendly nation and her colonies. International law is appealed to. But that law is not a rule of action which can be enforced by any tribunal. It is a code of etiquette between nations. And what does that code of etiquette require? Why, simply that nations should bear toward each other the general friendliness and courtesy which individuals in organized society entertain, but whenever a nation, like an individual, puts itself in a position where it is chargeable with the repudiation of the obligations of honor and with acts of perfidy and cruelty, then the friendship may well cease in the case of a nation, just as in the case of an individual.

Nations are not really friendly to each other. They are simply either at peace or at war with each other. War necessarily implies enmity. Peace does not necessarily involve friendship. And I take it that a great and powerful nation like the United States, the greatest and most powerful nation in this part of the world, has a certain duty to perform to other nations, just as every individual in our social organization has a duty to perform to other individuals, and this duty is the higher and the stronger in proportion to the power and the strength of the individual or the nation. I take it, then, that just as the powerful nations of Europe have felt that they had the right again and again to interfere in the affairs of Turkey for the purpose of securing to a people cruelly oppressed and downtrodden a certain protection, a protection which we have demanded in behalf of those people in certain resolutions recently passed, an equal obligation is imposed upon the most powerful nation on this side of the world to protect a country that lies at our very doors against perfidy, cruelty, and oppression, for it should be remembered that the ten years' rebellion, from 1868 to 1878, was only ended upon certain guarantees of autonomy and representative government made by the Spanish Government—guarantees which were repudiated when peace was restored—and that Spain's perfidy lit the fires of a new rebellion.

In these resolutions what do we do? We simply express the opinion of the two Houses of Congress that Cuba is entitled to belligerent rights and that the friendly offices of this Government should be used to insure the recognition of free Cuba. We have extended the hand clothed in velvet, but it should be understood that under the glove of velvet is concealed the hand of iron which will ultimately by vigorous action break the bonds which hold an outraged colony to a perfidious, cruel, and despotic Government.

I think this country has some duty to perform besides a duty to its own people. We have not the right to pursue the policy of selfish exclusion any more than an individual has in organized society. I think we have a duty to perform to all the Republics of this continent that now, with the exception of Mexico, cast disgrace upon the very name of republicanism. Instead of maintaining the policy of selfish exclusion which we have maintained for years, saying to the great powers of Europe, and particularly to England, "Hands off! we will not permit you to extend to these countries the government of law and order," we have a certain duty to discharge to humanity and to civilization in seeing that those countries are no longer dedicated to disorder and violence. There is a certain duty as protector that devolves upon the people of this country with reference to the nations on this continent. It should be exercised through the Pan-American Congress—through treaty relations for mutual cooperation and support—by all the moral influence which a great nation can exercise in its communion with weaker powers, and, if necessary, when civil war, anarchy, and mutual destruction blot the fair name of republicanism and substitute military despotism, by an armed intervention, commanding order and good government.

Now, of course, we all understand that the people of the Latin race are not so well fitted as those of the Anglo-Saxon race for free government. We through generations and through centuries have had a training for freedom—in our trial by jury, in our legislative system, and by all the machinery of our forms of government—so that it may be said that the Republic of America was the very evolution of the education of ages. The Latin race has not been prepared for such an evolution. Yet must we say that the colony of this European despotism must be kept always under the heel of the oppressor because its people are not fitted for self-government? Shall we keep people in darkness in order to train them for the light? I apprehend that the very fact that disorder and violence exist in the Central American and South American Republics, that the Latin race is illy fitted for free government, is no objection to a bold and decided stand on the part of this country in favor of the independence of Cuba, for I claim that the very first step in the evolution of liberty is to break the shackles that bind a dependent colony to a despotic country.

So from every point of view my judgment is that we should take a firm, self-reliant, and powerful position with reference to this entire continent—with reference to the Central American and the South American Republics and with reference to dependent colonies suffering under oppression and cruelty. In that view, regardless of the talk about the friendship which should exist between nations and the etiquette that should control friendly nations in their dealings with each other, I say that some duty devolves upon us toward civilization and humanity and human liberty, and this duty is best discharged by prompt and vigorous action with reference to this struggling country at our very doors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HITT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was astounded and surprised at the stand and argument of the brilliant, persistent, but inconsistent man from Maine. His argument, forsooth, was because our Treasury was depleted by the unwisdom and maladministration of the Democracy that therefore we should close our hearts to charity and close our mouths to words of pity and sympathy. He charges that we should not, on this account, because our Treasury is empty, protest against the bloody hand of Spain and the cruel proceedings of that bloodthirsty, cruel, and vindictive nation that has looked on in all the years of history with bloodshot eyes on all the nations of the earth.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it is an inherent right in all nations to exercise a just, proper, and reasonable discretion in recognizing the belligerency of other nations or peoples struggling for liberty. It is not an act of war, and does not necessarily place us under the perils of war.

More than a month before the battle of Bull Run, Spain had recognized the belligerency of the Southern States of the Confederacy, when that government simply existed on paper, and before it had shown itself able to resist in any degree the armies of the United States. What sympathy, then, does America owe to Spain? But, on the other hand, do we not owe every consideration of compassion to our downtrodden and persecuted neighbor, Cuba? How like our case in the dark and lonely days of the Revolution is hers! She now is experiencing her "Valley Forge," and her sufferings—how like ours in the dreary and hopeless swamps of the Carolinas!

I appeal to this House in the name of humanity, in the name of all that is just and right and pure, in the name of human sympathy and pity, to recognize poor, struggling Cuba, and give her the rights to which she is justly entitled in order that she may have a better standing before the world. [Applause.]

[Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I will merely occupy the time of the House for the purpose of putting myself on record in favor of the resolutions offered here, and for the purpose of correcting an impression which might have been gathered from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] who spoke here this morning. In the course of the eloquent speech that he made in favor of the resolutions, in nearly all of which I heartily and sincerely concur, he attributed to the Senator from the State of New York a motive which is as foreign to him as it can be to any man in public life who enjoys his enviable record. The gentleman from Pennsylvania suggested that Senator DAVID B. HILL, in his attitude toward this resolution, reflected the sentiment of Wall street.

Now, Senator HILL has his strong points and, I suppose, his weaknesses, like most men. He has his friends and his enemies. There are those who praise him and those who censure him; but all must admit that if there is one lesson we can gather from his career it is that throughout the whole of that career he has been in touch, in sympathy with, in harmony with the plain people of the State he represents and of the United States. He has not advanced a single step in favor of the money power except so far as its welfare was incidental to the general good. His personal integrity can not be questioned. His alliance with that power can not be shown in a single sentence he has uttered. In fact, he has been opposed to those who have made alliances with Wall street; that is, with exponents of inordinate speculation, and has made that opposition emphatic in every act of his on the floor of the Senate and long before he came to the Senate. So when Senator HILL says he is in favor of these resolutions for humanitarian reasons, I say we should attribute to him the full credit that such an utterance from such a man invites. I am for the resolutions for the same reasons. The Cubans are struggling as our fathers struggled, and they are entitled to encouragement from us. If another reason were necessary for favoring these resolutions, it is that while America has proclaimed her belief, whether sentimental or real, in the Monroe doctrine, what can we expect from that great power England if in our present situation we back down from that weak power Spain?

We have a right, gentlemen, to interfere for Cuba. She is our neighbor. She is contending for all that is right and true and beautiful in human character and in the character of nations.

I trust that these resolutions will pass with an almost unanimous vote in this House, and that we shall give emphasis to anything we do here by showing that the Congress of the United States is behind the department of this Government which has the power to declare for belligerency in any reasonable length to which that department may go for the relief of these struggling people. [Applause.]

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, before making my statement I should like to ask of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] if any reason exists why we might not have a brief debate on Monday on this proposition, when gentlemen will all be in their seats—say half an hour on Monday, to be equally divided between the two sides? I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the House is not now full, and that gentlemen seem to be weary of the week's work. I would suggest that we take a recess earlier and take half an hour on Monday in order to conclude this debate.

Mr. WHEELER. It would be better to have two hours on Monday, an hour on each side.

Mr. HITT. I am obliged to ask the House to act as soon as possible. I made several requests to-day, to all of which there was objection, until I yielded so far as to allow the vote to go over until Monday. I do not think gentlemen ought to press me to go further. A number of members of the House told me they would object to anything which should carry this matter further into Monday than the mere taking of the vote.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I was not in the Hall at the time to which the gentleman refers. I hope he will not feel that I am pressing him. I withdraw my request.

Mr. HITT. I understand the gentleman's position very well. I was simply endeavoring to say that a number of gentlemen told me they would object to making any encroachment upon Monday, for anything other than the mere vote. Those gentlemen have now left the Hall, and I must keep faith with them.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, repeating what I said on a former occasion, I regret that in so grave a matter, involving delicate foreign affairs, we have so little information on which to predicate our action.

I yield to no man in my sympathy for a people who may be struggling for freedom; but this is not a question of sympathy. It is a question which affects our own interests and which relates to our duty as a member of the family of nations. The step we propose to take to-day also concerns our duty under treaty stipulations.

In the Island of Cuba, Mr. Speaker, there are peculiarities of topography, population, and social conditions which are very little known to the rest of the world. The white population live chiefly on the coast and surround the island. The interior is still a wilderness. It consists of mountain fastnesses and swamps, without highways. These insurgents, so called, are said to occupy these fastnesses and swamps and contiguous territory, while the people loyal to Spain occupy the coast towns and fortifications and their vicinity.

No safe access, as a general rule, exists from one side to the other pending hostilities, and no actual, reliable information has reached us as to the condition of this struggle so far as the insurgents are concerned. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] read yesterday a statement which undertook to give the military force of the insurgents. It was an anonymous statement; its author's name was suppressed. But even taking that statement as printed to-day in the RECORD, it is apparent there are only 16,000 men engaged in active operations on the side of General Gomez and General Maceo, and nothing is said of the character of their arms; the rest of the 60,000 thus loosely reported is said to form an army of occupation. What that means the statement does not disclose.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will my friend yield to me, in that connection, just one moment?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I will.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to state, before I answer the question, that the matter that influences——

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I asked my friend no question. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand that; but I was going to ask you a question. It is this: Is it not impossible for the Cubans to carry on the character of campaign which they have carried on, are now conducting, and have conducted, without practical unanimity upon the part of the Cubans in the support of their cause? The question is this: From your knowledge of military operations, would it not be impracticable to carry on and conduct the character of a campaign which they are conducting unless the Cubans were practically unanimously their friends? If they were surrounded by an unfriendly population it would simply be impossible, in my judgment, for them to do it.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The gentleman has answered his own question, then. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I think so.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The gentleman has interjected into my brief space the argument to which he desired to address himself on this question.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, perhaps so.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. He has relieved me of a very considerable embarrassment, no doubt. [Renewed laughter.]
